At last, after a century of support given to wildcat banks, free-silver coinage, and fiat money, this Republican party, by strange political fortune, has come to pose as the champion of sound money. In the old days of Jefferson and Jackson the Democratic party was the advocate of sound money, contending that gold and silver were the only legal-tender money authorized by the Constitution, whereas the Federalists, headed by Nicholas Biddle, were clamoring that the issues of the national bank should be made a legal tender, and they were also the advocates and defenders of a general system of wildcat banks.

The Democratic party, on down to the days of Tilden and Hendricks, of Justices Field and Lamar, were still the friends and defenders of sound money and were still contending that gold and silver were the only legal-tender money authorized by the Constitution. In those days the Republican party was the creator and defender of fiat money. That party created the greenback money and made it a legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, except duties upon imports and interest upon the national debt. The Supreme Court, in an opinion written by a Democrat, Mr. Justice Field, decided that gold and silver alone could be made a legal tender and that the legal-tender feature of the greenback legislation was unconstitutional and void. The Republican party, to avoid this decision, proceeded to reorganize that court, created new judges, and these places were filled by a Republican President with judges known to support the contention of that party.

What a howl they made down in my State in 1896 about the claim that the long-haired 16 to 1 Populists and anarchists were going to reorganize the Supreme Court, that it was going to be a revolution.

Thus a new decision of that court was obtained, upholding the constitutionality of the legal-tender function of the greenbacks. This was the beginning of that long series of Republican legislation in the interest of the money classes which has proved a very Pandora's box of evils. The Republican party opened the silver agitation in 1878 and continued it in their platforms down to the meeting of their convention of 1884. They inserted in their platform of 1884 a demand for an international agreement to fix the standard of value between gold and silver. Then, in their platform of 1888, they denounced the Democratic party for its efforts to demonetize silver. Continuing their soft-money crusade and love for uncle and money, this party, in its platform of 1892, announced this doctrine:

The American people, from tradition and interest, favor bimetallism, and the Republican party demands the use of both gold and silver as standard money.

Still on down to 1896, and in the platform of that year, the Republican party pledged itself to promote bimetallism by international agreement, so that never until the platform of 1900 did the Republican party become the open advocate of the gold standard or become the friend or supporter of what it pleases to call "sound money," and it is attitude it assumed by a strange reversal of the positions of both of the two great political parties. On the other hand, the Democratic party, reading the Constitution, finds this language: "No State shall make anything but gold and silver a legal tender in the payment of debts," and by this constitutional provision the Democratic party has consistently stood during all the years of our national life.

Now, let us come to 1900 again and notice the last effusions of the "Grand Old Party." This was the convention in which the chairman insisted that ex-Governor Taylor, of Kentucky, should come upon the platform so that all could see and honor him. This was the platform written at the cottage of E. A. Griscom, the president of the International Transportation Company and the head and front of the ship-subsidy steal. This platform announces: "We have conducted, and in victory concluded, a war for liberty and human rights. No thought of national aggrandizement tarnished the high purpose with which American standards were unfurled." That sounds fine, does it? What are the facts? Democratic votes forced your party into the war, and Democrats took the leading part in its prosecution until Cuba was liberated; and then the Republican party came in for the spoils and for the subjugation of the Philippines.

The commander in chief of the Army was Gen. Nelson A. Miles, a Democrat; the man who had charge of the navy at Cavite and Manila and who destroyed the Spanish fleet was Admiral Dewey, a Democrat; the man who had command of the fleet at Santiago and who knocked the Spanish fleet into "smithereens" was Admiral Schley, a Democrat; the man who was put in charge of the civil government of Cuba was Gen. Fitzhugh Lee, a Democrat; the man who had charge of the land forces in Cuba and who sent no grumbling complaints home, was Gen. Joe Wheeler, a Democrat; the man who had command of the land forces in the field in the Philippines, did the main fighting, and was never guilty of torturing anybody, was Gen. J. Franklin Bell, of my own city, and a Democrat. The Republicans were not idle. They were busy, too. A distinguished Republican was accused of furnishing the soldiers embalmed beef, and how many of the soldier boys were made sick and how many died from this cause will perhaps never be known. Then there was a Republican horse doctor sent to Cuba who was accused of befriending the gamblers and other lawbreakers.

There were two Republicans, Rathbone and Neely, that had charge of the post-office affairs in Cuba, and who were found guilty by a jury of peculations and fraud. There was little General Funston, a good Republican, who violated the rules of civilized warfare, dressed in the uniform of the enemy, forged letters, scouted all the laws of hospitality, and captured Aguinaldo. Then there was General Davis, a good Republican, who had charge of the commissary, and who sold rice and other provisions to the starving natives at enormous profits, and last of all, the Republican Congress refused to limit the timber lands for the benefit of home seekers, but passed in the hall provision permitting corporations and syndicates to purchase and exploit these timber in large tracts.

What does the Republican party now stand for? It stands for the open door in China, while loudly proposing a policy that would close the doors of Europe and Canada. It stands for ship subsidies to build up our foreign trade, while it drafts bills giving most of the subsidy to fast passenger steamers, the floating palaces of the seas, that carry those trust magnates and millionaires back and forth across the ocean, instead of giving it to the vessels that carry the freight. It stands for the Monroe doctrine and foments an insurrection in Panama. It stands and preaches that to put articles on the free list increases the price to the consumer, while it is forced to take off a tariff from quinine and coal in order to relieve the distresses of the people. It stands for high protection in order to build up the farming interests of this country and indorses Chinese cheap labor protection in order to benefit the farmers of Cuba. This party stands for extraditing criminals from across the sea and refuses to bring criminals from across the Ohio River.

It promises in platforms to destroy the trusts, but gathers its chief campaign funds from them; refuses to prosecute them, and now has a bill in the Senate making lawful all reasonable trust criminals and repealing the imprisonment clause of the Sherman law as to these criminals who are unreasonable. It stands in favor of the Nicaragua Canal in all its platforms, and gives to a defunct French corporation $40,000,000 in order to get a chance to build a canal at another place. It stands posing as the friend of the laboring man, and votes down the Clark amendment by which the Chinese would be effectually excluded and refuses to pass the eight-hour law. It stands as the pretended friend of reciprocity, and refuses to ratify every reciprocity treaty that is presented to the Senate. There is no heresy and no delusion in finance, economics, international law, or politics which this party has not at some time or other embraced or practiced and at other times denounced. A medley of contradictions and inconsistencies, it stands for anything and for everything and for nothing at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes granted me by somebody who has charge of the time.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. GILBERT. Can such a medley of contradictions and inconsistencies continue to win the elections? I am sure I do not know. This combination has usually won in the world's history. Only few exceptions can be found here and there as cases in the great desert of human wrenchedness. Partial and vicious laws enacted and enforced in the interest of certain occupations or localities in course of time always result in building up a large, wealthy, aristocratic class, and this class, by power and prestige, terrify the timid, corral the poor and ignorant, purchase and control the venal and purchasable vote, and thus have usually succeeded in outvoting the great intelligent middle class that constitutes the Democratic party of this country and the liberal parties of the Old World.

This combination of wealth and aristocracy and the baser elements has succeeded in all the dark blood-stained centuries of history. Tribunes of the people and governors of provinces have returned loaded down with the wealth collected from the people by fraud and extortion. Thus prepared he becomes ready to give entertainments to please the ragged and hungry populace and to buy their votes. Crowds thronged the Colosseum and the Circus Maximus to enjoy and applaud. Young damsels of the patrician class sat with smelling bottles, themselves beautifully gowned, and clapped their white bejeweled hands at the sight of wild beasts tearing peasants to pieces, limb by limb, by the thousands. When the hero of the entertainment appeared in sight, "the rabblement hooted and clapped their chapped hands and threw up their sweaty nightcaps, and uttered such a deal of stinking breath that he swooned and refused the crown that was offered him by the foolish populace."

Are we traveling away from our moorings and going in the same direction? Some day, perhaps when it is too late, we will learn that no free government can long endure unless builded upon the doctrines of Jefferson and Jackson. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. BEDE] can not laugh nor giggle this party out of existence. I am not a prophet, but when the old doctrine of the Democratic party of "equal rights and opportunities for all and exclusive privileges to none" shall have perished, then the liberty of the people will have perished also.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. The gentleman, when he began his address, stated that he desired not to be interrupted, and I therefore deferred until this time a question which I wish to propound.

Mr. GILBERT. Come this way a little.

Mr. SCOTT. In the beginning of the gentleman's remarks he alluded to what will probably go down into history as the Booker Washington incident. I should like to inquire whether he would criticise as severely a Democratic President who would receive at his table at the White House a negro as he has criticised a Republican President?

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Chairman, that is an impossible assumption.

Mr. SCOTT. By no means impossible, Mr. Chairman, for the reason that it has already happened.

Mr. GILBERT. There is a vast difference between the equality which a Democrat and a Republican regards the colored man. Will you let me give you an illustration?

Mr. SCOTT. Let me ask you this question——

Mr. GILBERT. Wait a minute; I want to answer the first question. A few days ago a colored man from my own country was in Boston hunting for employment; he knocked at the front door of a house and asked for something to eat, I believe it was, instead of work. The master of the house came out and said, "My dear sir, I am very sorry, but we have nothing to eat." He went to the second house and knocked and asked for something to eat, and the white master of the mansion came out and said, "I am very sorry, sir, but I have nothing to eat for you in the house." He went to the third house and he knocked at the door, and the white man came out to the front door and said, "You black scoundrel, what do you mean by coming to my front door for something to eat? Walk around to the kitchen and get your breakfast." That third man was a Democrat; the other two were Republicans. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given two minutes more to answer one more question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kentucky be given two minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GILBERT. Go ahead; I would be delighted to try to answer the question.

Mr. SCOTT. I would like to ask if the gentleman knows during President Cleveland's first Administration he entertained at his table at the White House a negro?

Mr. GILBERT. No; but, mind you, we are not particularly claiming Mr. Cleveland. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. As matter of fact, that never happened.

Mr. GILBERT. I never heard of it before, and if it did happen it may be barely possible that Mr. Cleveland was not a first-class Democrat. [Laughter.]

Mr. COCHRAN. That is cumulative proof that there is no better Republican in this country than Grover Cleveland. [Laughter.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

H. R. 7237. An act to authorize the Mobile and West Alabama Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Tombigbee River between the counties of Clarke and Choctaw, Ala., in section 7, township 9, range 1 west of St. Stephen's meridian.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. SCOTT. If the gentleman from Minnesota will kindly yield me five minutes, I shall be very much obliged.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas five minutes.

Mr. SCOTT. The reply of the gentleman from Kentucky to the last question which I asked him was a good illustration of what I think the lawyers call "confession by avoidance."

Mr. GILBERT. That is a good plea in any court.

Mr. SCOTT. It happens to be fresh in my memory, however, and I have asked this time in order to give some information to gentlemen on the other side of the House who will no doubt be interested in it. During the first Administration of Mr. Cleveland a negro from Kansas was brought to Washington, taken to the White House, introduced to the President, and by him invited to remain and sit at the table at luncheon, an invitation which I need not say was promptly accepted.

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. Will the gentleman state who it was that introduced the negro, and upon whose authority the gentleman is making this statement?

Mr. SCOTT. I make the statement on my own authority.

Mr. COCHRAN. Were you present?

Mr. SCOTT. I was not present, but one of my colleagues will corroborate me as to the fact.

Mr. COCHRAN. Who was this negro?

Mr. SCOTT. It was C. H. J. Taylor, afterwards appointed registrar of deeds for the District by President Cleveland. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

I wish to call the attention of the House one moment to the difference in the treatment of these two men. Concerning Booker Washington the least that can be said of him is that he is a good man. But I think it might also be said that if he had a white skin it would be considered an honor by any gentleman to know him; that he is a gentleman and a scholar. So much of a scholar that he has been entertained by Queen Victoria at Windsor Castle; so much of a scholar that a member of a college faculty of one of the southern colleges recently denominated him the greatest living American, for which utterance he was promptly called to tab by his associates; but, I am glad to say, that it was declared by the authorities of the college that they held from such [illegible].

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. I have only five minutes, and I decline to yield. I have alluded to the character of Booker Washington not because he needs any praise from me, but because I want to call attention——

Mr. MADDOX. I want to say to the gentleman from Kansas that the declaration was that he was second to Robert E. Lee.

Mr. SCOTT. I can not quote the language exactly for I do not remember it. Probably the gentleman is correct. But from his standpoint I should suppose it would be considered quite a compliment to be named as second to Robert E. Lee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. BREAZEALE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana asks that the time of the gentleman from Kansas be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I will yield the gentleman five minutes' time.

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to the gentleman, in justice to that college, that the faculty did rebuke this professor for making that utterance, but did say that he had a right to it as enjoying the liberty of free speech.

Mr. SCOTT. They rebuked him for making the utterance, but they did not attempt to say that the utterance was not true. They rebuked him because they were forced to do so by the public sentiment of their community.

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. The gentleman who uttered it afterwards explained and said he did not mean it. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. SCOTT. That is a question for the gentleman and his friends on that side to decide between themselves.

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. He said he did not mean to say that he was the greatest man the South ever produced except Lee, but the greatest negro.

Mr. SCOTT. All that aside, it will be admitted by every Member on the floor of this House that if Booker Washington had a white skin, any one of us would receive him on terms of equality.

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. Why does not the gentleman receive him, having a black skin?

Mr. SCOTT. We do receive him in every proper way.

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. Does the gentleman mean to say that he receives him as his equal?

Mr. SCOTT. Not as my social equal——

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. The black skin is the cause of it, is it not?

Mr. SCOTT. The black skin, and the prejudice, and all that. I recognize that as fully as the gentleman does. I am not standing here, if the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. We are alike, then. The gentleman has the same prejudice that we have—on account of the skin. There is no difference between us on that.

Mr. SCOTT. I am not standing here to make a plea for social equality. We all know that is impossible. I do not stand for that any more than Theodore Roosevelt did when he invited Booker T. Washington to his luncheon, any more than President Eliot did when he invited Booker T. Washington to his luncheon, any more than Grover Cleveland did when he invited C. H. J. Taylor to his luncheon. I have alluded to the character of Mr. Washington, which everybody in this country recognizes, because I wanted to point a contrast between the man whom the Republican President of the United States received at his table and the man whom the Democratic President of the United States received at his table. Who was C. H. J. Taylor? He was a black negro, as black as you ever saw. He had been a ward heeler, and nothing more, in the city of Kansas City, Kans. He had no great accomplishment to his credit; he had no education to speak of; he had nothing to commend him to any man's consideration, particularly nothing to commend him to the consideration of any Democrat, except the promise that he carried some negro votes in his vest pocket and could deliver them to the Democratic party.

For that reason, and for that reason only—for the reason that he had promised that if he were given his position here in Washington he could turn the negro vote in Kansas from the Republican party to the Democratic party—he was brought here to Washington by some Democratic leaders of Kansas, taken to the White House, introduced to the President, seated at his table, and afterwards paid the price by receiving the appointment of registrar of deeds of this District.

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. Does the gentleman approve of Grover Cleveland asking that negro to dine with him and dining with him? Does the gentleman approve of that?

Mr. SCOTT. I do not approve of it, because I know the character of the man. I would not invite him to my house if he were a white man.

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. Because he is a Democratic negro—is not that it?

Mr. SCOTT. That is not the reason. It is because the man is utterly without character, without education, without culture, or anything to commend him to the consideration of a gentleman.

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. Who introduced that negro to the President? The gentleman said his colleague was present when it was done.

Mr. SCOTT. I did not say that. I simply said my colleague was cognizant of the fact.

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. Did not a Republican from Kansas introduce him to the President?

Mr. SCOTT. Oh, no; by no means. I have already said he was introduced by a Democrat.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have alluded to this matter, not to apologize for President Roosevelt, who needs no apologist, but merely to call attention to the glaring inconsistency which goes into hysterics over a courtesy paid to a man of admitted high character and who has done and is doing a splendid and noble work, while utterly ignoring a similar attention paid to a man without standing or character or accomplishment, and whose only claim to consideration was the presumption that he could swing a certain number of votes. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] such time as he may desire.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, much has been said of late, both in this Chamber and elsewhere, upon the hustings and in the public press, upon the subject of reciprocity. The question has been discussed as to whether, as an economic policy, it is Democratic or Republican. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LIND], who addressed the committee some days ago, assured us that it found its first expression from the lips of Thomas Jefferson, and yet I find in the last Democratic campaign text-book this assertion:

> Reciprocity looks like free trade, but tastes like protection. In practice reciprocity is worse than protection. Free trade would open our markets to benefit our competitors. Reciprocity gives away the home market and buys the foreign market with a club. The reciprocity idea, [illegible] the treasury [illegible] and the protective principle [illegible] and to most people has been and will ever continue to be a delusion and a snare.

And then, again, I find in a magazine article written by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], the leader of the minority, this declaration:

> There is also a tariff revision by piecemeal, which is the handmaiden of the other system. This is tariff revision by reciprocal trade agreements with other nations. Much can be done along this piecemeal line of tariff revision under a Democratic or approximately a Democratic law.

In other words, there is a reciprocity approved of by the Democratic party for the purposes of tariff revision, and as leading to free trade. In view of that fact, and in view of the further fact that at least two Republican national conventions have declared in favor of reciprocity, I am forced to the conclusion that there are two kinds of reciprocity—one Democratic and the other Republican, and that they differ in toto coelo.

The reciprocity in trade relations advocated by the Democratic party embraces reciprocity in competing articles, and is therefore free trade in whole or in part, dependent upon the terms of the particular agreement. It is of value to the Democratic party only to the extent that it is an effective force toward the overthrow, partial or complete, of the protective system, with which it is absolutely inconsistent.

Now, it is too manifest to be the subject of argument that to impose a duty upon a foreign article for the purpose of preserving the home market for a like home article and then to lower or remove that duty so as to admit the foreign article into competition in the home market is to abandon in that case the principle of protection and to adopt that of free trade.

Republican reciprocity is reciprocity in noncompeting articles and in nothing else. [Applause on the Republican side.] I know of no better definition of it than that given by ex-Postmaster-General Charles Emory Smith. He says:

When rightly understood the principle is axiomatic. Brazil grows coffee, but makes no machinery. We make machinery, but grow no coffee. She needs the fabrics of our factories and forges, and we need the fruits of her tropical soil. We agree to concessions for her coffee; she agrees to concessions for our machinery. That is reciprocity.

And I know of no better definition of its purpose than that given by President McKinley in his inaugural address:

The end in view—

He says—

always to be the opening up of new markets for the products of our country by granting concessions to the products of other lands that we need and can not produce ourselves and which do not involve any loss of labor to our own people, but tend to increase their employment.

In other words, Republican reciprocity, like protection, keeps always in view the preservation of the home market, the primacy of our manufacturers, and the well-being of the wage-earner.

My purpose at this time in undertaking to make some observations on this subject is to enforce and emphasize the difference between Democratic and Republican reciprocity and to demonstrate that Republican reciprocity admits of reciprocity only in noncompeting articles.

And I aver that there is nothing in the history of the Republican party, in its traditions, or in any of its platforms that justifies the claim that reciprocity in competing products is consistent with Republican principles. On the contrary, everything in its history, its traditions, and its platforms proclaims such reciprocity to be inconsistent with the protective system, and therefore inconsistent with Republicanism.

If the committee will bear with me, I propose very hastily and as briefly as possible to review some of our national experiences with respect to this subject. They may be dealt with under three heads: First, reciprocity with Canada; second, reciprocity with Hawaii, and third, tropical reciprocity, as illustrated under the Dingley and McKinley tariff laws. And I deal with reciprocity with Canada, because arguments have been made upon the Democratic side of this Chamber looking toward a renewal of reciprocal trade arrangements with Canada, and because arguments have been made elsewhere with like purpose of a sensational character by men whom we can not regard otherwise than as covert enemies of protection, although they appeal to Republican hearers.

Our reciprocity treaty with Canada was made in 1854 and abrogated in 1866. Various causes have been assigned for the making of that treaty, amongst others that Great Britain was fearful that in the absence of new trade arrangements Canada might become annexed to the United States. There is nothing in connection with the negotiation of that treaty or with its operation of which we have any reason to be proud. The truth is that we were compelled to its discussion by the unjust and indefensible attitude of Great Britain with respect to our rights in the fisheries, and that it was consummated by the shrewdness of the Canadian Governor-General, Lord Elgin, and his staff, who, according to a British writer, "approached the representatives of the American nation with all the legitimate wiles of astute and accomplished diplomats." "They threw themselves," said he, "into the society of Washington with the abandon and enjoyment of a group of visitors solely intent on pleasure." The American opponents of the treaty did not hesitate to say that "it was floated through on champagne."

In view of the present agitation of the subject, the history of this treaty and its results become matters of present practical importance. I think it will be more interesting, instead of using my own words, to let Mr. Blaine tell the story, as he does, in his Twenty Years in Congress. He says:

When the independence of the colonies was recognized in the preliminary treaty of 1782 the provisions agreed upon in regard to two subjects were held by both Governments to be final and perpetual. One was the territory embraced within the boundaries conceded to the United States; the other was the right to the fisheries. The people of the colonies, especially the people of the New England colonies, had as British subjects had the British fisheries in what is now known as the Dominion of Canada and the island of Newfoundland, and in the preliminary treaty to which George III gave his assent in 1782, as well as in the final and more definite treaty of 1783, it was provided that the privilege should continue to be enjoyed by citizens of the new Republic.

No doubt of the intent and proper construction of this clause in both treaties had even been suggested until the English and American negotiators were engaged in framing the treaty of peace at Ghent in 1814, at the close of the second war with Great Britain. The British negotiators claimed that the war of 1812 had put an end to all existing treaties, and that the fishery clause in the treaty of 1782 being no longer in force our fishery rights had expired, and if revived at all must be revived under new treaty stipulations.

* * * * * * *

The position thus taken by the British Government was plainly untenable. The treaty of 1782 was only the formal declaration of certain facts consequent upon the termination of the Revolutionary war. That treaty recognized three conclusions as fully established: First, the independence of the thirteen colonies; second, the territorial limits of the United States; third, the rights and methods of the common fisheries in colonial waters the citizens had exercised as British subjects. The history of the negotiations and the express language of the treaty prove that the clause touching the fisheries was the recognition of an existing right and not the grant of a new right. The British Government in 1814 might with equal force and justice have claimed that under this theory of the abrogation of the treaty of 1782 by war the recognition of our independence and the establishment of our boundaries had also become void.

I quote from Mr. Blaine only so much as is necessary to make clear the circumstances under which this reciprocity treaty of 1854 was brought about. He goes on to say:

On the 20th of October, 1818, a treaty was concluded at London containing as its first and most important provision an absolute surrender of some of our most valuable rights in the fisheries.

From the execution of this treaty—as might have been seen—the misunderstanding between the two countries in relation to the fisheries became more complicated. * * *

The right in the fisheries conceded by the treaty of 1854—originally ours under the treaty of 1782, and unnecessarily and unwisely renounced in the treaty of 1818—was not given freely, but in consideration of a great price. That price was reciprocal trade carried on between the United States and the British North American provinces in certain enumerated articles named in the treaty. The selection, as shown by the schedule, was made almost wholly to favor Canadian interests. There was scarcely a product in the list which could be exported from the United States to Canada without loss, while the great market of the United States was thrown open to Canada without tax or charge for nearly everything which she had and produce and export. All her raw materials were admitted free, while all our manufactures were charged with heavy duty, the market being reserved for English merchants. The fishery question had been adroitly used to secure from the United States an agreement which was one-sided, vexatious and unprofitable. It had served its purpose admirably as a makeweight for Canada in acquiring the most generous and profitable market she ever enjoyed for her products.

That Mr. Blaine's declaration that the treaty was one-sided, vexatious, and unprofitable was correct appears from the fact that in the last year and three-quarters of its life we remitted to Canada duties amounting to $70,152,103, and the balance of trade was against us in the sum of $28,184,749.

Now, this is a general statement, but to go into detail a little more as to the effect of the treaty, let me quote Senator Morrill, of Vermont, who was thoroughly familiar with the subject. He says:

Our exports to Canada in 1855 were $20,828,676, but under the operation of reciprocity, then commenced, they dwindled in twelve years down to $[illegible], while the exports of Canada to the United States increased from $[illegible] and odd to $46,000,000 and odd. When the treaty began the balance of trade had been $5,000,000 annually in our favor and that paid in specie, but at the end the balance against us to be paid in specie in a single year was $[illegible]. Here was a positive yearly loss of over $5,000,000 of our export trade and a loss of $[illegible] specie, all going to enrich the Canadians at our expense.

Now, I want to show you the difference in the conditions that existed under this reciprocity treaty and as they exist to-day, and I propose to show you those conditions not by any mere uncorroborated statement of my own, but out of the mouth of a Canadian witness. If you will turn to the North American Review for the present month of February, you will find an article on Canadian reciprocity, written by the Hon. John Charlton, a member of the Canadian Parliament. He says:

The nonprogressive character of the Canadian export trade to the United States is shown by the fact that, while the export in 1866 amounted to $44,000,000, the export in 1886, less precious metals and articles not the produce of Canada, was no more than $48,869,000. On the other hand, a comparison of Canadian import returns from the United States will show remarkable increase, as the subjoined table will demonstrate:

Canadian imports from the United States for consumption.

1890	52,291,000	1902	128,814,000
1896	54,554,000	1903	137,600,000
1900	109,844,000

These are imports from the United States into Canada for consumption, the goods which we sold her, and for which we got pay. Here is another branch of the same subject. I am still quoting from Mr. Charlton's magazine article:

The subjoined table, showing the Canadian importation of manufactures from Great Britain and from the United States since 1896, will be of interest, especially when taken in connection with the fact that Canada has given a tariff preference to Great Britain, first of 12½ per cent, 1897 to 1898, then of 25 per cent to 1900, and of 33⅓ per cent since that time.

Canadian imports of manufactures.

Year.	From Great Britain.	From United States.
1896	$26,243,000	$41,510,000
1900	31,187,000	49,302,000
1900	37,388,000	60,453,000
1901	36,469,000	62,643,000
1902	41,675,000	69,596,000
1903	50,473,000	76,291,000

[illegible] great increase in the sale of manufactures by the United States to Canada between 1896 and 1903, in the face of the Canadian preference in favor of British [illegible] the strong hold that the American manufacturer has upon the Canadian market, and of his ability to meet all competition [illegible] terms.

These two tables, with their authors' comments, are eloquent witnesses as to existing conditions.

Let me add that the balance of trade in our favor last year was $73,554,000.

I have here a copy of a speech delivered by this same gentleman, Hon. John Charlton, member of the Canadian Parliament, at Ottawa, on the 24th of February, 1903. The subject of this discussion is reciprocity with the United States. And after going on to show how favorable the conditions are under existing circumstances to the United States, and unfavorable to Canada, he pays us this tribute:

The American people have been applied not only to us but to all the world, and [illegible] the United States has been to sell and that it possibly could of [illegible] and its manufactures, and to buy just as little as it could from other countries, and thus having as much of the balance of trade in its favor as possible. The result has been that the balance [illegible] in favor of the United States last year amounted to $[illegible] [illegible] $[illegible] against Canada. That is a good thing for the United States and will be her policy as long as the rest of the whole world will permit her to do it, but it is not a good thing for us.

Now, what does this gentleman who speaks for his people offer us by way of temptation to change this condition of things which is so highly advantageous to the United States and which is not so advantageous to Canada?

He says:

Something must be done to change the trade conditions that exist between the United States and Canada. Free trade in natural products would [illegible] a [illegible] Nothing short of this will do it, and [illegible] of [illegible] natural products should be granted by the United States [illegible] from Canada further than it has already made. We can [illegible] any more.

What is the proposition? Why, that while everything is going our way, we are to make a trade arrangement upon the same basis as the arrangement in 1854, which proved so disastrous to us. An astounding proposition, indeed! Now, I want to show you——

Mr. LIND. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. LIND. Is it not a fact that with the exception of the last year of that treaty, after notice of abrogation had been served, the excess of our exports over Canadian imports was substantially as great as has been the relation of exports and imports since?

Mr. DALZELL. Well, I do not have the figures here. I did not go into detail any further than Senator Morrill. But I should answer the question, speaking generally, by saying "No," because the figures that are given by Mr. Charlton in the North American Review article show such a tremendous variance.

Mr. LIND. I will state, however, for the benefit of the gentleman, that with exception of the last year, after notice of the abrogation of the treaty had been given, our excess of exports to Canada was relatively as much as it has been in any years since or any period of years.

Mr. DALZELL. I have been unable to find anywhere, and I have given considerable attention to the subject, a single solitary reason from the United States standpoint that would justify a treaty with Canada in natural products.

Mr. LACEY. If my friend will allow an interruption here——

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. LACEY. The four years' time to which the gentleman from Minnesota alludes was during our civil war, when it was very difficult to get at what would be a fair basis to figure upon.

Mr. LIND. Yes; but the facts are as I state, are they not, Mr. LACEY?

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, is the gentleman from Minnesota aware that during the life of that treaty we gained 11 per cent in our export trade and Canada gained 500 per cent in her trade with us? That is the fact.

Mr. LIND. No; I think that is a mistake.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I propose to show that every distinguished statesman in our history who has dealt with this subject at all occupies the same position with respect to this Canadian question that I am now endeavoring to sustain.

The first of the Republican leaders who is recorded as having expressed an opinion on the subject of reciprocity seems to have been Senator Charles Sumner, of Massachusetts, who, as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, on the 11th of January, 1865, reported favorably the joint resolution for denouncing the Canadian treaty.

On this occasion Senator Sumner argued that the event had shown that the treaty was much more advantageous to Canada than to the United States—that, in short, it was "unilateral, and hence not reciprocal." The Senator went on to say:

The reciprocity treaty has a beautiful name. It suggests at once exchange, equality, equity; and it is because it was supposed to advance these ideas practically that this treaty was originally accepted by the people of the United States.

Mr. Sumner proceeded to show by figures that the revenue gained to Canada under the treaty had been very great and the revenue lost to the United States still greater, and that therefore the advantages of the treaty "are not shared equally by the two countries," so that "it loses title to its name." The opinion expressed by Senator Sumner was expressed also by the following prominent Republican Senators: Sherman, of Ohio; Collamer and Foot, of Vermont; Morrill, of Maine; Chandler, of Michigan; Doolittle, of Wisconsin; Wilson, of Massachusetts, and others.

In his first annual message to Congress, under date of December 6, 1869, President Grant alluded to the Canada treaty in terms of disapproval on account of its lack of true reciprocity. I quote this extract from his message:

The question of renewing a treaty for reciprocal trade between the United States and the British provinces on this continent has not been favorably considered by the Administration. The advantages of such a treaty would be wholly in favor of the British provinces. Except perhaps a few articles in the trade between the two countries no citizen of the United States would be benefited by reciprocity. Our internal taxation would amount to protection to the British producer almost equal to the protection which our manufacturers now receive from the tariff. Some arrangement, however, for the regulation of commerce and navigation between the United States and the Dominion of Canada may be desirable.

President Grant, in his second Administration, assisted by his Secretary of State, Hamilton Fish, made an effort to perfect a new reciprocity treaty with Canada, embracing among other items the admission into Canada of a large number of our manufactured articles free of duty. The treaty miscarried, as did all other subsequent tentative treaties with Canada, the prevailing idea in opposition thereto apparently having always been that the productions of Canada were practically identical with our own productions, and hence any general admission of Canadian products into this country free of duty or at reduced rates of duty would necessarily compete injuriously with our own industries.

I have already quoted Senator Morrill, but I will quote him again:

It is said we must do something to build up and extend our foreign commerce—to which I agree—and to do this it is strangely proposed at once to surrender much more of our markets at home than is offered to us abroad—to which I do not agree. We are asked, so to say, to throw into the sea a greater amount of food than will be returned in the catch of fish. Eleven years of free and broad trade, giving up superior markets in exchange for inferior markets, did not win the commercial or political friendship of the Canadians.

I quote now from another distinguished President—President Harrison—from his message of June 20, 1892:

A reciprocity treaty limited to the exchange of natural products (referring to the case of Canada) would have been such only in form. The benefits of such a treaty would have inured almost wholly to Canada. Previous experiments on this line had been unsatisfactory to this Government. A treaty that should be reciprocal in fact and of mutual advantage must necessarily have embraced an important list of manufactured articles and have secured to the United States a free or favored introduction of these articles into Canada as against the world.

And again, in his fourth annual message, Mr. Harrison said:

During the past year a suggestion was received through the British minister that the Canadian government would like to confer as to the possibility of enlarging, upon terms of mutual advantage, the commercial exchanges of Canada and of the United States; and a conference was held at Washington, with Mr. Blaine acting for this Government and the British minister at this capital and three members of the Dominion cabinet acting as commissioners on the part of Great Britain. The conference developed the fact that the Canadian government was only prepared to offer to the United States in exchange for the concessions asked, the admission of natural products. The statement was frankly made that favored rates could not be given to the United States as against the mother country. This admission, which was foreseen, necessarily terminated the conference upon this question. The benefits of an exchange of natural products would be almost wholly with the people of Canada.

The objections to the Canadian treaty have never been better stated than they were by Mr. Roberts, Treasurer of the United States, who said:

The commerce of Canada and of the United States covers substantially the same classes of articles. The question of reciprocity or commercial union between Canada and the United States is a very different one from that which would arise over the proposition for reciprocity with Mexico or with the South American republics, for the reason that Canada produces almost identically, so far as its production goes, the same articles as the United States produces. Therefore there can be very little of exchange in the sense of our getting back for our products what we do not ourselves produce. The trade with Canada would be inviting competition, so far as there is a production in Canada, as against our own producers.

Now, I submit that every utterance of this long line of distinguished statesmen on this subject is just as applicable to-day, just as pertinent, as it was when uttered first. I submit that there would not only be no reason in it, but that it would be folly to throw open the splendid markets of 80,000,000 people in exchange for the markets of less than 6,000,000 people and to bring into competition the products of high-priced farm lands in the West, cultivated with a high wage rate, with those of Canada, with its low-priced lands and low wage rates. Every dictate of reason, every impulse of patriotism, every sense of loyalty to our own people and their interests demands that we should let well enough alone. [Applause.]

Now, I will not stop to talk about Hawaii, because it has no special bearing upon the proposition now in hand. We all recall that the treaty was made in 1875, and that it was made not for economical reasons, but for reasons purely political, because of the anticipated annexation of Hawaii to the United States. It cost us in the end the loss of nearly $13,000,000 of revenue.

Now, you will observe that in the declaration of the statesmen from whom I have read the principal point made is that natural products are not the proper subjects of reciprocity. During the Arthur Administration the idea of tropical reciprocity seems to have originated.

The fact that we admitted the products of tropical countries into our ports without the payment of any duty and that a duty was imposed upon nearly all of our products in their ports gave rise to the idea that we might very well make some arrangement whereby we could, for the concession of our free list, obtain like concessions from our neighbors. In 1883 a treaty with Mexico was attempted and failed. In 1884 a treaty with Cuba, Porto Rico, and Santo Domingo was attempted and failed. Both Mr. Arthur and his Secretary of State are upon record as to what they believed to be the true principles of reciprocity. A letter of Secretary Frelinghuysen, sent to the Senate and subsequently embodied in a report dated March 20, 1884, contains the following important announcement as to the true principles of reciprocity between nations:

> The true plan, it seems to me, is to make a series of reciprocity treaties with the states of Central and South America, taking care that those manufactures and, as far as is practicable, those products which would compete in competition with our own manufactures and products should not be admitted to the free list.

Mr. Arthur, in his messages, announced the same principle;

> The need has long been recognized of some arrangement by which the natural market of the large communities lying at our doors should be secured under beneficent terms for the principal productions of the United States. In return for this we grant certain reserved favors, whereby the articles, mainly raw materials or food products, which this country does not produce or produces in inadequate quantity shall reach their natural market of consumption in this country. * * *

And again, on another occasion, he recommended:

> A series of reciprocal commercial treaties with the countries of America, which shall foster between us and them an unhampered movement of trade. The conditions of these treaties should be the free admission of such merchandise as this country does not produce in return for the admission free, or under a favored scheme of duties, of our own products.

You will recollect that in 1889 the Pan-American Congress concluded its sittings and recommended a series of reciprocity treaties between the several states constituting that conference and the United States. Mr. Blaine, who was then Secretary of State, made his report, the conference having been called at his suggestion in the first instance, and Mr. Harrison sent that report to Congress with a message.

And that was the beginning of practical Republican reciprocity. The Blaine plan was that instead of placing our noncompetitive articles on the free list they should receive duties and that those duties should be remitted by the President in exchange for concessions to be made by the nations who sent to us noncompetitive products. It would be tedious to go through the legislative history of the McKinley law, that finally embodied the Blaine reciprocity. It is sufficient to say that certain articles, noncompetitive, were placed upon the free list—sugar, molasses, tea, coffee, hides—and the President was authorized to remove them from the free list and impose on them certain duties in cases where unreasonable duties were imposed on our products.

There is considerable of history connected with the making of this reciprocity provision, because, you recollect, it was not in the McKinley bill as it went from the House, but was put in it in the Senate. But I shall not stop to go over that, because it is familiar to a great many gentlemen who are here, and I am more anxious about results than I am as to how they were brought about. It will be observed that the reciprocity provided for by the McKinley law was reciprocity in purely noncompetitive articles. That was a time when our sugar industry had not as yet assumed such proportions as to be called a "home industry," requiring protection, and it was put upon the free list, and constituted one of the articles on the free list to be used in making these negotiations.

The domestic consumer was protected by way of bounty. It will be observed that the reciprocity of the McKinley law was in aid of our foreign trade, without the possibility of harm to any domestic industry or any domestic producer. Under the McKinley law, as you recollect, a great many treaties were made, quite a number. They were all of them swept by the board when the Democratic Administration came into power, without either rhyme or reason.

But I must hasten on. I want to call attention particularly to the provisions of the Dingley law, because there never was a law put upon the statute books that is so little understood and so much misrepresented. The reciprocity provisions of the Dingley law are to be found in sections 3 and 4.

Section 3 deals with two classes of articles. The first class contains argols or crude tartar or wine lees, brandy, champagne, still wines, vermuth, paintings, and statuary. These articles are substantially noncompetitive articles. Under the preceding paragraphs of the law they have each been charged with a duty. For this duty the President is authorized to substitute a certain lower duty for the purposes of barter. In other words, if he can obtain an agreement with a foreign country whereby our products can obtain favorable entrance into foreign markets by lowering the duties on these articles, he is authorized to do so. The second class contains tea, coffee, tonka, tonka beans, and vanilla beans, which were on the free list. On these the President is authorized to impose a certain duty, unless the countries exporting them should grant us fair entry into their markets.

So far as this section is concerned, it will be observed that the principles of Republican reciprocity are preserved.

The articles to be the subject of barter do not come into competition with any home industry.

The discussion of this section gives me the opportunity to say that no law that ever went upon our statute book has been so grossly misrepresented as has the Dingley law. It has been heralded all over this country—it is heralded all over the country to-day—that the schedules of the law are intentionally placed above the protective point, and that therefore the people are suffering from excessive taxation.

It is not said that some schedules were so treated, but the schedules, meaning all of them. That is not true. The only duties that were raised were those upon argols, or crude tartar, or wine lees, brandy, champagne, still wines, vermuth, etc., and this for trading purposes. It has been asserted that Mr. Dingley admitted the raising of duties. On the other hand, men have rushed to deny that he did. There was no reason for any controversy on the subject, for either assertion or denial. The bill itself shows the articles that bore the extra rates of duty. There was no concealment of the matter. The articles were those that I have mentioned, and no others. I have no doubt that Mr. Dingley admitted the claim as to them, but more than that he never did admit, never could have admitted.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. DALZELL. Let me say to my friend from Mississippi that I think I know what he is going to say. I have read his magazine article, and I propose to address myself to it in the course of a few minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I wanted to ask the gentleman this question, and then perhaps what I ask the gentleman will be what he knows I am going to say and perhaps it will not be. Upon what articles is the President given authority under the Dingley bill to negotiate reciprocity treaties with a reduction of 20 per cent?

Mr. DALZELL. I knew that was what the gentleman was going to ask me. I will answer it in a moment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That is what I would like to know in that connection.

Mr. DALZELL. I repeat——

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes.

Mr. CLARK. The Hon. John A. Kasson——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If the gentleman from Missouri will permit, I would like to have my question answered first.

Mr. CLARK. That is all right. I thought the gentleman was going to answer it directly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. No. In this connection, as I understand the gentleman, when he has said that articles were put 20 per cent too high in only certain cases which he mentioned, I ask this question: What articles are put within the power of the President as a basis to negotiate reciprocity treaties upon where he is granted the power to negotiate upon the basis of a reduction of 20 per cent?

Mr. DALZELL. I will answer the gentleman in a moment or two. I am coming to that.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Right now?

Mr. DALZELL. In the course of perhaps thirty seconds.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Are not those all the articles?

Mr. DALZELL. Not at all. There is a limitation that the gentleman has not paid any attention to. I will satisfy the gentleman, if he will only wait a moment.

I repeat that there is no undue duty placed upon any article in the Dingley bill, whether for the purposes of barter or otherwise, except upon those to which I have referred—argols or crude tartar, wine lees, etc.—and I would like some gentleman now to stand up and tell me who they are that are tax ridden and suffering, because of the duty on argols or crude tartar and wine lees, or any other article named in that section. And yet out of "such stuff as dreams are made of" a hostile press and the enemies of protection are continuing to vex the souls of a credulous public.

Mr. LIND. You have reduced the duty on argols and such, have you not, since the passage of the Dingley bill?

Mr. DALZELL. I do not know whether that is true or not.

Mr. LIND. Well, they have been reduced.

Mr. DALZELL. Now, then, section 4 is the section that worries my friend from Mississippi and which he seems to think justifies him in the assertion that we are providing for 20 per cent overtaxation all along the line.

Section 4 provided, first, that the President might, within a period of two years, enter into treaties with foreign nations to secure favorable entry of our goods into their ports in consideration of a reduction upon their duties of not more than 20 per cent, such agreement not to last over five years; and, second, he might agree to place on our free list such of their products as we did not produce, or retain such if already on the free list. But his authority to act could only be by treaty to be ratified by the Senate and approved by Congress.

This section was not in the bill when it went from the House. It was a Senate provision. It is not now in effect more than two years since the passage of the bill having expired. When the bill went from the House to the Senate, the House had a reciprocity section, viz, section 3, and the Senate had a reciprocity provision, viz, section 4. A compromise was made by adopting both House provision and Senate provision with certain amendments.

I see that the gentleman from Mississippi in his magazine article contends that the 20 per cent rebate allowed by the fourth section measures the extra duties of the Dingley bill. But his position is not tenable for the reason that the schedules of the bill had been fixed before this section was suggested by the Senate, and without any reference thereto, and without any knowledge by the House that fixed the schedules that any such suggestion would be made on the part of the Senate.

But the section was not agreed to without a material limitation by way of amendment, which retained power in the Republican House. That was contained in the provision that no agreement could be consummated save by the consent of Congress.

The men who insisted on that modification did so in order that they might retain in their own hands such power as would protect home interests against possible reciprocity in competitive products. They did so for the further reason that they did not believe it to be within the constitutional power of the Executive and Senate, in the first instance, to deal with the revenues of the country, either by treaty or otherwise, but that the power to originate legislation taxing the people belongs to the representatives of the people.

An analysis of section 4 thus discloses that it contained a provision for reciprocity in noncompetitive articles similar to the House provision—viz, that of section 3—and also a provision which might result in reciprocity in competitive articles, but the latter was so guarded and restricted as to keep the veto power in Congress.

Certain treaties have been negotiated under the provisions of section 4, but they have never been ratified by the Senate and I trust they never will be, because they propose to sacrifice certain American industries in the interest of certain other American industries on the assumption that in the long run the net gain will be greater than the loss. The Republican party, however, does not believe in bookkeeping reciprocity, and I trust it never will. It believes that every American industry, whether large or small, is equally entitled with every other American industry to protection for its labor and its capital. [Applause on the Republican side.] Protection for all is its motto and its practice.

It has been claimed that the Cuban reciprocity treaty was a reversal of the Republican policy.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman my question now.

Mr. DALZELL. All right.

Mr. CLARK. I want to ask the gentleman three questions.

Mr. DALZELL. Does the gentleman expect me to answer all of them at once?

Mr. CLARK. No; you may answer them all at once or may answer them seriatim. Is not Hon. John A. Kasson, of Iowa, a Republican in good standing and an officer in a Republican Administration?

Mr. DALZELL. Well, he is known as a Republican. I do not know anything about his standing. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK. All Iowa Republicans are in good standing.

Mr. DALZELL. I would not like to certify to that.

Mr. CLARK. In the second place, did not Mr. Kasson, as the appointee of President McKinley, negotiate quite a number of reciprocity treaties which have been pigeonholed with great unanimity by the Senate?

Mr. DALZELL. I have already said so.

Mr. CLARK. Now, my third question is this: If the gentleman's statement here to-day properly expounds the present Republican position on the subject of reciprocity, then does not the transaction touching the Kasson treaties show that the Republican party has changed its base on reciprocity in the last seven years?

Mr. DALZELL. Not at all. The Republican party has been consistent from the beginning; it never agreed to any reciprocity treaty that involved anything except noncompeting articles. [Applause on the Republican side.] And it is because it has been consistent to its principles that those treaties have never been ratified, and, in my judgment, they never will be ratified by Republicans.

Mr. CLARK. The real reason those treaties have never been ratified is because McKinley died, is it not?

Mr. DALZELL. Oh, not at all. They were——

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. They were negotiated a year before McKinley's death.

Mr. LIND. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes.

Mr. LIND. Can the gentleman think of any noncompetitive product in the world now on the dutiable list that could be made the subject of reciprocity under his definition?

Mr. DALZELL. Why, they all could. Yes, by putting them on the free list.

Mr. LIND. But is there anything now not on the free list that could be made the subject of reciprocity under your definition?

Mr. DALZELL. I don't know; the tariff schedule is a long document. I do not recall any just now.

Mr. PAYNE. Statuary, for instance.

Mr. DALZELL. Oh, I mentioned that—statuary and painting.

Mr. PAYNE. He is asking you again; he has forgotten.

Mr. DALZELL. I gave the gentleman a list a while ago—argols, crude tartar, the wine list, champagne——

Mr. LIND. We make all those things in the United States.

Mr. DALZELL. And brandy—oh, no; we do not make any champagne that comes into competition with French champagne. We do not have any competition in argols; we do not have any competition in any of these articles—paintings——

Mr. LIND. One more question. Under the gentleman's definition of reciprocity we could not possibly have reciprocity with Canada in any one product that either nation produces, could we?

Mr. DALZELL. I do not think we could have any reciprocity with Canada that would be of any advantage to the United States in any shape or form. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now let me go on; my time is almost exhausted. I was about to say that it has been claimed that the Cuban reciprocity agreement was a reversal of Republican policy. On the other hand, it was an exception. It was justifiable only on the ground of the exceptional circumstances under which it was made. It necessarily resulted from the peculiar relations that the United States bore to Cuba, a Republic made free by the expenditure of our treasure and the blood of our sons. It is not definitive of Republican policy. It is not a precedent for anything, and no one has any right to so consider it.

So that the reciprocity of Arthur and Harrison and Blaine and Dingley and McKinley is still the reciprocity of the Republican party.

I know that certain gentlemen, enemies of protection, have contended that President McKinley in his last speech at Buffalo, on the eve of his tragic end, abandoned the doctrine whose advocacy throughout his long life had made him famous. I think they do him an injustice. There are detached sentences in that speech that, taken by themselves, may be construed to mean almost anything; but taken as a whole the speech was a McKinley speech. It was a speech, I grant you, in advocacy of foreign trade, but at the same time its keynote sounded the supreme and commanding importance of the home market and was a protest against any curtailment thereof or of any industry therein or of any harm to its wage-earners. Note what he says:

> By sensible trade arrangements which will not interrupt home production we shall extend the outlets of our increasing surplus.

And then again:

> We should take from our customers such of their products as we can use without harm to our industries and labor.

And all through that speech, in which he glorifies our prosperity, he attributes its existence to the policy of protection. Whether that be so or not, the faith of the Republican party to-day on this subject remains as declared in 1900 at Philadelphia:

> We favor the associate policy of reciprocity, so directed as to open our markets on favorable terms for what we do not ourselves produce in exchange for free foreign markets.

Now, why change this policy at all? Why not cling to the policy of reciprocal relations with respect simply to noncompeting articles, and so preserve our home interests? Oh, they say, because we want to get foreign trade. Well, what is the matter with our foreign trade? There certainly is nothing of criticism to be said about its present status, and I do not indulge in the fears that some gentlemen express as to its future. I apprehend that in the adjustment of world conditions it will take care of itself in the future, as it has in the past. Why, during the last thirty years our foreign trade has grown more than that of Great Britain; it has grown more than that of Germany; it has grown more than that of France; it has grown more than that of Russia; it has grown more than that of any nation in the world.

I have here some figures that I will not stop to read at length, but I will give you the results of them. I have first a table showing the exports of domestic products from the United States, Great Britain, Germany, and France, and I find that between 1872 and 1901 the increase of the United States foreign trade was 168.39 per cent. I find that the increase of trade of Great Britain in the same period was 5.49 per cent. I find that the increase of trade of Germany was 91.19 per cent and of France 6.08 per cent—that is to say, while Germany, which next to the United States grew the most, increased 91 per cent, the United States increased 168.39 per cent.

I have here a table showing the imports entered for consumption in the United States, Great Britain, Germany, and France which I will not stop to read, and I have a table showing the total imports for consumption and exports of domestic products of the United States, Great Britain, Germany, and France, and I will read you the result as to that. The United States between 1872 and 1901 increased 73.66 per cent, Great Britain increased 28.10 per cent, Germany increased 76.74 per cent, France increased 14.92 per cent.

The tables are as follows:

Exports of domestic products from United States, Great Britain, Germany, and France.

Country.	1872.	1901.	Per cent of increase.
United States	$695,089,030	$1,866,481,871	168.39
Great Britain	1,291,760,000	1,363,932,000	5.49
Germany	375,000,000	1,364,985,000	91.19
France	726,000,000	771,095,000	6.08

Imports entered for consumption into United States, Great Britain, Germany, and France.

Country.	1872.	1901.	Per cent of increase.
United States	$663,146,657	$899,769,754	35.66
Great Britain	1,595,123,000	2,044,111,000	28.10
Germany	775,128,000	1,369,294,000	76.74
France	689,100,000	840,354,000	22.00

Total imports entered for consumption and exports of domestic products, United States, Great Britain, Germany, and France.

Country.	1872.	1901.	Per cent of increase.
United States	$1,188,189,096	$2,955,275,615	93.06
Great Britain	2,776,883,000	3,557,248,000	28.10
Germany	1,336,746,000	2,344,939,000	76.74

I am justified, I think, in the claim that I have made that in the last thirty years our foreign trade has increased more than that of any other nation. And that magnificent showing, let me suggest, was not due to our agricultural trade alone. In 1892 our exports of manufactures amounted to only $158,500,917, or 15.7 per cent of our exports. In 1902 our exports of manufactures amounted to $403,641,401, or 29.77 of our exports, an increase since 1892 of 154.7 per cent. Why, the growth of our foreign trade has been the wonder of the world. We have heard time and again on the floor of this House threats made that on account of its increase foreign countries would seek to bar us out of their markets, and we have heard the plea made for tariff revision and reciprocity on that ground.

It is furthermore said that "we must buy or we can not sell." Why, we are among the greatest buyers in the world. Great Britain buys more than we do; Germany buys more than we do; France buys only a little more, and Russia not near so much. I have here figures covering two periods of time—a period of depression and a period of prosperity—showing what sort of buyers we are in the world's market. Without stopping to give the figures at length, in 1892 we bought at the rate of $12.73 per capita; in 1894, $9.41; 1895, $10.61; in 1896, $12.29. Then coming to a later period, 1900, 1901, and 1902. In 1900 we bought at the rate of $17.96; in 1901, $10.58; in 1902, $11.43. The tables in full are as follows:

1893	$866,400,922	$12.73
1894	[illegible]	9.41
1895	791,960,982	10.61
1896	916,724,954	12.29
1900	[illegible]	17.96
1901	[illegible]	10.58
1902	943,279,548	11.43

There are reasons why we should not be as great buyers as some other nations. Those reasons are to be found in our native wealth of wheat and corn and cotton, tobacco, petroleum, coal, and ores—indeed, all the necessities of life in a great superabundance. Taking these into consideration we are, relatively speaking, amongst the world's greatest buyers, and will ever continue to be so long as our industries flourish and our wage-earners are in receipt of such wages as enable them to be large consumers.

Yes; but gentlemen say, "Oh, well, we will be shut out of the markets of the world. They will raise their tariffs on us." Mr. Speed from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] indulged in a sad forecasting here not very long ago, entertaining that fear. For how long a time, for how many years have you heard on the floor of this House that foreign tariffs were going to bar us out of the markets of Europe. Why, Mr. Chairman, men in the aggregate are just like individuals. They buy where they can buy best and cheapest, and buy from the party who has what they want to sell.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. M'CLEARY of Minnesota. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania may be extended until he completes his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may be permitted to conclude his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if it is not a fact that there has been a large reduction in the exports of manufactures of iron and steel of the United States into the markets of the world?

Mr. DALZELL. Undoubtedly there are periods of depression and periods of prosperity, changes in the market extending from time to time over long periods; and there always have been. I will remind the gentleman that "two swallows do not make a summer."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Ever since the enactment of the Dingley tariff bill have not the European countries that furnished us markets for our goods heretofore almost all of them discriminated against our iron and steel manufactures?

Mr. DALZELL. They do not seem to have affected our prosperity in that direction.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if it is not a fact that our exports last year were less than they were five years ago?

Mr. DALZELL. I do not have before me the figures, but I will say that there are periods of depression, and sometimes there are long times of depression; but there is always a reason for it, and generally temporary.

Now, with respect to this claim that we are going to be shut out of the world's markets. The United States produces one-fifth of the world's wheat.

Mr. STANLEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him just one question?

Mr. DALZELL. I will.

Mr. STANLEY. Does the gentleman not concede that a high protective rate on the part of Great Britain would be a great calamity to this country?

Mr. DALZELL. No, I will not concede it; I prefer to say that that is a very large question, with which I am not now familiar. It is one that I do not feel myself now prepared or able to answer. I have not given it any study. But I will say for the benefit of the gentleman——

Mr. STANLEY. I am speaking of a tariff on all kinds of American industry.

Mr. DALZELL. I will prefer to say that I am not competent to answer the gentleman's question. If the gentleman wants something to read on the subject, I will refer him to the last Book Lovers' Magazine, to an article written by Mr. Talcott Williams, of Philadelphia, one of our best writers. He can give him more light than anyone who has written on the subject, so far as I have seen up to this time.

Now, as to being driven out of the world's markets, the United States, I say, produces one-fifth of the world's wheat, one-half of the world's meat, four-fifths of the world's corn, and three-fourths of the world's cotton. Europe's importations from the United States last year were three-fifths of its wheat, almost all of its corn, half of its meat, and three-fourths of its cotton. In 1901 Europe took over 50 per cent of our exports of manufactures, 90 per cent of our exports of agricultural products, and 60 per cent of all other exports. Suppose it possible that Europe could be furnished with these necessities from other places outside the United States, what effect do you suppose it would have upon their markets as to price to shut out the American products? To do so, I venture to say, would be an economic impossibility.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if I have proven anything at all I have proven, first, that Republican reciprocity means only reciprocity in noncompeting products, and I have proven, secondly, that no reason exists, growing out of our relation with the world's trade, for changing or abandoning that policy.

So then, I say, let us abide by the ancient landmarks, the party faith, and I repeat, "we favor the associated policy of reciprocity so directed as to open our markets on favorable terms for what we can not ourselves produce in exchange for free foreign markets." That is all we are willing to give for free foreign markets. We will not agree that a single home industry shall be crippled; we will not agree that a single American wage-earner shall lose his job or part with a penny of his wages. The game is not worth the candle.

In the long run we shall have our full share of the world's markets. We shall have it because we shall deserve it. We shall have it because, in the great international contest for the world's trade, we shall have behind us the inexhaustible wealth of a continent, the energy and enterprise and inventive genius of the most intelligent and energetic people on the face of the earth, and all of it backed by such wise policies as shall most advantageously develop their great resources. [Prolonged applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. LOVERING having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 19. An act establishing a United States court at Marietta, Ind. T.;

H. R. 11021. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph Weems;

H. R. 8227. An act granting a pension to Lucius E. Polk; and

H. R. 10145. An act to provide for appeals, writs of error, and other appellate proceedings from the circuit and district courts of Beaumont, in the eastern district of Texas.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the action of the President pro tempore in signing the bill (S. 167) "granting an increase of pension to J. Hudson Kibbe" be rescinded, and that the bill be returned to the House of Representatives with the request that similar action be taken by the House with respect to the signature of the Speaker, and that the passage of the bill be reconsidered, and that it be postponed indefinitely, the beneficiary of the same being dead.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, it is an old adage that the application of principles can always be confused by a prolixity of figures. It is true, for the same reason, that the sea has no fixed level and that the running waters have no regular level. People lose sight of the general principle that there is a mean level of the sea, because the sea is never at rest; and people lose sight of the general principle that waters flow downward, because sometimes downstream the waters are higher than above, backed by some inflow of other waters.

Thus, when you come to the consideration of the application of the general principle, you may run over a lot of figures dealing with the great complexities of the trade of a great country and take out some special figures here and there, seemingly contradicting any principle, no matter how well grounded and fixed that principle may be.

So gentlemen every now and then attempt to show that protection, a policy which is inaugurated for the purpose of raising prices for the benefit of the man or industry protected, does really lower prices and thereby destroys its own purpose, and so gentlemen now and then, as in this debate, attempt to show that people grow rich by the "balance of trade" in their favor, or grow poor by the "balance of trade" the other way.

Facts staring all men in the face yet prove that neither assertion is true. Adam Smith long years ago, Ricardo afterwards, John Stuart Mill after him, and Henry George after him have so reasoned and absolutely ridiculed the old mercantile theory of the "balance of trade" out of existence that no man in his sound senses, if he stops to think, would believe for one moment that the relative prosperity or depression of two countries, considering each by itself compared with the other, could be accounted for by the fact that there was in one case a balance of trade in favor of exports or in the other in favor of imports. There is indeed no such thing as a balance of trade, except when you come to consider simply two traders and no more, and even then not for a great time, as history counts time.

It is very true that there was a very large balance of trade in favor of a Kentucky mule dealer, for example, as against myself when I was planting, because every year I bought from six to twelve mules from Kentucky mule dealers, and the mule dealer never bought anything from me, and therefore these old mercantile-theory people would tell you the Kentucky mule dealer grew immensely rich and I was being necessarily impoverished by the trade between myself and the Kentucky mule raiser.

True, if somebody did not come along and buy my cotton it would not be long before the Kentucky mule raiser would have to sell his mules to somebody else. Again, the man who paid me money for my cotton sold me nothing. Thus, according to this balance of trade theory, I impoverished him. Now, there is no sense in all that. The sense in it, if there ever was any logic in it at all, grew out of the old mercantile theory that a country had to get the gold and silver of the world in order to prosper, and that it grew rich only by getting gold and silver.

The truth is the mule raiser, the cotton buyer and I, and the cotton spinner, who bought from the cotton buyer, all made money, and there was, as between all of us and everybody else of whom we bought and to whom we sold, no "balance of trade" at all. We each parted with what we wanted to part with and got what we wanted to get. Neither grew rich by buying; neither by selling.

We each and all grew rich, if we grew rich at all, by both buying and selling.

If either of any two of us had sold always and never bought, and between the two of us had controlled all the trade of the world, the one who exclusively sold would have wound up with all the gold and silver of the world and nothing else, and must have starved for his pains, or begun to buy; the other would have had everything in the world except its gold and silver.

John Stuart Mill says (Principles of Political Economy, vol. 2, p. 117, Little & Brown edition of 1848):

> From this exposition we perceive in what consists the benefit of international exchange, or, in other words, foreign commerce. Setting aside its enabling countries to obtain commodities which they could not themselves produce at all, its advantage consists in a more efficient employment of the productive forces of the world.
> If two countries which trade together attempted, as far as was physically possible, to produce for themselves what they now import from one another, the labor and capital of the two countries would not be so productive, the two together would not obtain from their industry so great a quantity of commodities, as when each employs itself in producing, both for itself and for the other, the things in which its labor is relatively most efficient. The addition thus made to the produce of the two combined constitutes the advantage of the trade.
> It is possible that one of the two countries may be altogether inferior to the other in productive capacities, and that its labor and capital could be employed to greatest advantage by being removed bodily to the other. The labor and capital which have been sunk in rendering Holland habitable would have produced a much greater return if transported to America or Ireland. The produce of the whole world would be greater than it is if everything were produced where there is the greatest absolute facility for its production.
> But nations do not, at least in modern times, emigrate en masse; and while the labor and capital of a country remain in the country, they are most beneficially employed in producing for foreign markets as well as for its own the things in which it lies under the least disadvantage, if there be none in which it possesses an advantage.

Before proceeding further let us contrast this view of the benefits of international commerce with other theories which have prevailed and which to a certain extent still prevail on the same subject.

According to the doctrine now stated, the only direct advantage of foreign commerce consists in the imports. A country obtains things which it either could not have produced at all, or which it must have produced at a greater expense of capital and labor than the cost of the things which it exports to pay for them. It thus obtains a more ample supply of the commodities it wants for the same labor and capital, or the same supply for less labor and capital, leaving the surplus disposable to produce other things.

The vulgar theory disregards this benefit and deems the advantage of commerce to reside in the exports; as if not what a country obtains, but what it parts with by its foreign trade, was supposed to constitute the gain to it. An extended market for its produce; an abundant consumption for its goods; a vent for its surplus; are the phrases by which it has been customary to designate the uses and recommendations of commerce with foreign countries.

[illegible] when we consider that the authors and leaders of opinion on mercantile questions have hitherto been the selling class. It is in such a surveying [illegible] of the mercantile theory, according to which, money being the only wealth, selling or, in other words, exchanging goods for money [illegible] to countries without mines of their own the only way of getting rich, and importation of goods—that is to say, parting with money—was one to be discouraged from its benefit.

Adam Smith says, in his celebrated first chapter of book four, speaking and [illegible] the mercantile theory, a chapter which, by the way, every young and old student of this subject ought to read carefully, among other things these:

We [illegible] a great deal and money, in short, are in his [illegible] every respect synonymous.

increased price in the market to which they are shipped, and vice versa with what they sell us, so that two nations can not come to any agreed statement about it at all.

Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] said that the Democratic platform declared that "as practiced, reciprocity is worse than protection," and the sort of reciprocity to which the Democratic platform was referring is worse than protection—the sort that would be practiced by the Republican party, or the sort that the Democratic platform makers thought would be practiced by the Republican party.

And the gentleman proved it here to-day; but the right sort of reciprocity is almost as good as the right sort of tariff revision, all along the line, because it reduces tax burdens somewhere at any rate. It untaxes the American consumers at our end of the line and unburdens foreign consumers at the other end of the line, thereby increasing their purchasing power, and thereby increasing the volume of our shipments to them.

The gentleman said there are two kinds of reciprocity, and there are. There is a sham reciprocity, the seeming reciprocity, which is Republican reciprocity, and then there is "the real thing," and that is Democratic reciprocity. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And why? The gentleman told you why: because Republican reciprocity, according to him, is reciprocity in "noncompeting" articles altogether.

Now, as all of your noncompeting articles are already on the free list, or very nearly so, what do you mean by Republican reciprocity, "reciprocity in noncompeting articles," except sham and humbuggery and pretense? Why? Because the only way in which you can lower a duty on noncompeting articles, the same being now not on the dutiable list, is, first, to put those articles on the dutiable list. In other words, go through the farce of taxing a thing upon which the consumer is not already taxed and then removing the tax thus levied, in order to get the foreigner to do what?

To levy and remove a duty upon one of his "noncompeting" articles. And why? Because if the foreigner allows you to "reciprocate" only in noncompeting articles, noncompetitive in your market, then you have got to assume that the foreigner is a fool if he allows you to send anything except "noncompeting" articles into his market.

So that you have this magnificent piece of mutual humbuggery at the two ends of the balance, "Republican reciprocity," as defined by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL]: We take off the free list a certain number of noncompeting articles and tax our consumers on them, and then France takes off her free list a certain number of noncompeting articles and taxes her consumers upon their consumption.

Then the two of us get together through diplomacy and say, "We will remove these things that we put on for the purpose of 'trading,' and we will call it 'reciprocity.'" Now, that is Republican reciprocity, according to the gentleman's definition, if I understand it; unless we assume that the foreigner, as highly civilized as we, as alive to his own interest as we, knowing just as much about the course of trade as we—in France, Germany, and Great Britain—is a fool. Why? Because he knows that we have got to consume his noncompeting articles anyhow.

Such articles as they produce that come into our markets and that are noncompeting with ours, because we for any reason can not produce them, we have got to buy, and it does not affect them at all, no matter what import tax we put upon them.

The only effect of our tax on things, which we must have and can not produce, would be to make our own people pay more for them. We can not grow anything to compete with them, we can not grow anything to reduce their price, and we have got to accept them from their hands, they holding the monopoly of their production.

But the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] was not altogether right even in his statement of his own party's past position.

If so, will the gentleman tell me why it was, if Republican reciprocity as announced by Blaine and by McKinley and other great men in the Republican party, but not as announced by him to-day, was to be a reciprocity only in noncompeting articles—will the gentleman tell we why it was that sugar was one of the articles always designated and the one that has been most dealt with in reciprocity treaties? I am sure we have been raising sugar for generations.

A little bit later on in his speech he told us, that at the time of the enactment of the Dingley bill, sugar "had not grown to the proportions of a great national production." Had it not? If there is any reason at all that could be stated, it must be simply because sugar was at that time produced nearly altogether out of cane in Louisiana and was not at that time produced to any great extent in America out of beets raised in the Northwest.

Was what he really meant to say that it had not become a Northern product, that it was still a "sectional" product, and, being raised in Louisiana, of course, it could be switched around just as the Republican party chose?

Now, the gentleman disputed what I said in that magazine article. I shall insert in my remarks section 4 of the Dingley bill, which proves that I am exactly right.

The gentleman says that that section was inserted after the schedules of the bill had been fixed. What difference does it make whether it was inserted after you had drawn up your schedules or before? If it was inserted afterwards, it was simply a confession of the fact that you had beforehand made the duties 20 per cent higher than, in your own opinion even, was necessary. That is all.

If it had been inserted contemporaneously, it might have proven that you had had the two provisions in view at the same time; but if inserted subsequently, it proves that you, as the makers of the law, believed that you could spare 20 per cent of the duties named in the schedules of the bill and still have a bill which from a protectionist standpoint even would do what you say protection will do, namely, "protect American labor."

The gentleman says that during a certain period of our treaty with Canada we gained 11 per cent in "our trade" (as if our trade with them was not their trade with us, you understand) and they gained 500 per cent in "their trade" with us. Now, if that were true——

Mr. DALZELL. I think the gentleman has made a mistake. I did not say anything of that kind.

A MEMBER. It was Mr. BATES.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I beg pardon of the gentleman from Pennsylvania for the mistake. It was an interruption of the gentleman's speech in which that language was used by Mr. BATES his colleague.

Mr. BATES. The gentleman from Mississippi will allow me to say that was not the language I used. I stated that during the life of that treaty of 1854 with Canada our exports to Canada increased only 11 per cent, while her exports to us increased 500 per cent.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I beg the gentleman's pardon. Somebody on the other side used that language. I think it was the gentleman himself, because I noticed particularly the manner of the expression used, and I turned at the time in that direction and said: "I wonder whether our trade with Canada is not their trade with us."

Mr. BATES. If it is the "manner" of expression which the gentleman challenges, then I beg him to ignore the "manner" of the expression and to address himself to the facts.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I am glad to do that, too; I am going to address myself to both, as is my right.

I say the very manner of that expression is one of the straws showing which way the wind blows—one of the oozings out of things not deliberately intended, showing more than a deliberate utterance would, the tendency of protectionist miseducation on the other side of the Chamber.

Now, the gentleman really had in his mind the idea that when Canada sells things to us we are buying something that we do not want and the buying of which is somehow a loss to us and somehow a greater advantage to Canada; and when we sell things to Canada, somehow or other there is an advantage to us and none to Canada.

That is, in one case the trade is an advantage to us and a disadvantage to them, and in the other case an advantage to Canada and a loss or detriment to us. That idea oozes out unconsciously as a result of this miseducation, economically, which protectionism brings upon men. We profited, I dare say, just as much and no more, proportionately, from the 11 per cent increase in our exports to her as we did from the 500 per cent increase in her exports, to us and vice versa.

I make this statement because I take it that this great Yankee nation, or rather the people composing it, are not fools and would not have bought anything from Canada unless, in their opinion, it paid them to get it, any more than they would have sold anything to Canada unless, in their opinion, it was an advantage to sell it.

But the gentleman is mistaken even there. The "balance of trade" even was not against us. He is not mistaken if he takes the last years of the whole period; but there was a part of the period of the life of that treaty when very abnormal conditions existed, namely, from 1861 down to 1866. If the gentleman will take the balance of that period not affected by the abnormal war conditions, he will find the truth.

Of course in time of war you buy more because you have less producers at home. A country with a million men in the field of war has to buy more than it does with those million men in the field of peaceful industry. Now, I am going to read to the gentleman a part of an article written by Eugene G. Hay, entitled "The future of Canada and reciprocity with the United States." I read from page 462 of the Review of Reviews for October, 1903:

Largely through the energy, the tact, and the skill of Lord Elgin, then governor-general of Canada, there was negotiated and ratified in 1854 a commercial treaty between the United States and the Canadian provinces. This treaty, by its terms, was to continue for a period of ten years, and continually thereafter until twelve months after either government had given notice to the other of its wish to terminate the same.

The Government of the United States, upon the direction of Congress, gave such notice in 1865, and the treaty was terminated in 1866. No provision was made in the treaty as to the duty on dutiable articles, but it provided for the free admission from either country to the other of a long list of natural products, including the great staple products of Canada and of the United States, embracing most of the products of the farm, the forest, the quarry, and the waters of each country.

In the light of present conditions it is difficult to understand why the United States Congress terminated this treaty. The principal reason given was bound up with the enormous debt left by the civil war the United States was in need of all possible revenue, and must have the revenue that would come from the duties on Canadian imports.

It is probable that a feeling of bitter hostility, growing out of the attitude of Great Britain and certain factions in Canada during our great civil conflict, had its influence upon Congress, but, more than all this, it is probable that the great pressing problems with which the statesmen of that day had to deal were such as to cause them to feel that the possible growth and development of our commerce did not receive due consideration.

It was in an era of war. Commercial benefit was not then the main aim of Congress in legislating, I will interpolate.

ITS PRACTICAL EFFECTS.

Figures—

which state the imports and exports do not always tell the full story of the volume of trade between two countries. In many instances goods that may be collected with Canadian ports imports would be described just as easily by their increased sales, but on their increased purchases from the other. But, viewed entirely from the standpoint of the figures which state the exports and imports—an examination of these figures for the years preceding, during, and succeeding the period of the treaty will disclose the fact that both countries were benefited by its operation. Prior to 1854 there was comparatively little trade between Canada and the United States and prior to 1848 scarcely any, but during the time, while the treaty was insignificantly small, our exports nearly doubled our imports. With the ratification of the treaty in 1854 the trade between the countries increased at a bound.

"Our exports to Canada," a thing that you think makes us rich, increased nearly 300 per cent in two years, "grew from $13,432,597 in 1853, the year preceding the ratification of the treaty, to $34,362,188 in 1855, the first year in which the treaty was in force;" and "our imports during the same period increased from $6,527,559 to $15,118,289," or double, in round numbers. What we bought from them—the thing that you seem to think makes us poor—our purchases doubled, only, during the same period. I think the increase in both exports and imports is what equally enriched both of us.

This rapid increase continued, preserving almost the same ratio during the first two years the treaty was in operation. During our civil war the exports and imports grew nearer together, owing to the curtailing of our production and the increase of our consumption, until, in 1864, the imports exceeded the exports, and so again in 1865 and 1866.

And those are the only three years during the life of the treaty; and why? Because when men are fighting they can not plow. When men are on steamships at sea in deadly conflict with their foes they can not be working in shops on land manufacturing things. No country can go to war without increasing its consumption and decreasing its production.

The treaty was terminated in 1866, and the excess of our imports over exports continued until 1874, or a period of seven years after the termination of the treaty.

Why? Because we were still trying to catch up with the waste of the war.

The years when this treaty was in force were far more prosperous for the commerce between Canada and the United States than had hitherto been or since.

Now, the trade may have been more prosperous at some periods since, understand me, because both countries have since become more prosperous, more populous, more productive, and therefore both possess greater interchangeable value, one for the other; but it was relatively prosperous then than at any equal period since.

In fact it was the very beginning of what has since developed into an enormous commerce between these two neighboring peoples. During the period of a little less than twelve years that the treaty was in force the balance of trade in our favor—was $57,000,000.

Now, if it had been the other way, provided the volume of trade, in the aggregate, had grown, it would still have proven that we had benefited; but still, for men who believe in the "balance-of-trade" theory, I give you the true figures to think about; even the "balance of trade" was in our favor.

Being more than double the entire trade between the countries during any year prior to the ratification of the treaty, and the total commerce grew during that period—

Now, hear this:

The total commerce grew during that period from $18,000,000 per annum to $70,000,000. As these countries have prospered and increased in importance, the commerce between them has continued to grow, until in the fiscal year just ended the total commerce reached almost to $140,000,000, the balance of trade being greatly in our favor. The present condition can not, however, long continue.

Our average tariff on dutiable goods coming from Canada to the United States is 46.83 per cent, and the Canadian average tariff on dutiable goods going from the United States into Canada is 24.46 per cent. Unless commercial reciprocity is soon attained, Canadian tariffs will undoubtedly be raised to approximately the level of our own, which will practically destroy commerce between the countries.

THE PROPOSED "BROWN DRAFT" TREATY.

In 1874 a treaty was negotiated between the United States and the Dominion government which is known in Canada as the "Brown Draft treaty." This treaty contained three schedules, and by its terms it was agreed that the duty on articles named in these schedules, being the growth, products, and manufacture of the Dominion of Canada and of the United States, on their importation from one country to the other, should, from the 1st day of July, 1875, to the 30th day of June, 1876, inclusive, be two-thirds of the rate paid at the date of the treaty, and, from the 1st day of July, 1876, to the 30th day of June, 1877, inclusive, be one-third of such rate, and on and after the 1st day of July, 1877, for a period of twenty-one years, all such articles should be admitted free of duty into each country, respectively.

Eighteen hundred and seventy-four was during General Grant's Administration. The treaty of that year was approved by him.

I want to remind you gentlemen upon that side of this House that General Grant, after he began to give up thoughts of military affairs and began to betake himself to thoughts about political affairs, was classed as a Republican.

Mr. LIND. Before the gentleman leaves that article, I would like to state to him that Mr. Hay, the writer of that article, is one of the Republican tariff commissioners or appraisers at the port of New York, recently appointed by President Roosevelt. He was the Republican candidate for Congress in my district at the last election.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. And, Mr. Chairman, I would like to add, he was not nominated.

Mr. LIND. Well?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Your President by appointing a man with his ideas, a man that could write that article showing such research and sound economical judgment, reflects more credit upon your party than was reflected upon it by having him beaten for a nomination in one of your districts. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I wanted to call your attention to the fact that in 1874 a treaty was negotiated under General Grant's Administration, he being very much in favor of it, being a repetition of the treaty of 1854, except that it went further.

Now the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] tells us that the treaties negotiated by Mr. Kasson, approved by Mr. McKinley (because Mr. McKinley sent them to the Senate), are "not Republican" treaties and that the Republican party was consistent and true to its idea in defeating them. Who had the better right to judge what is and what is not sanely Republican, Grant and McKinley or he, I leave as a thought to be digested by the country. Then he goes on to say, that, of course, I know, that "the period for ratifying these treaties under the Dingley bill has passed." That is true; but the period to obtain the fruit of these treaties in another way has not passed.

I have introduced into this House a bill—and if I could just get the Ways and Means Committee favorably to report and this House to pass all my bills that are pending in that committee, this country would be great, grand, and glorious beyond all precedent in less than three months. [Laughter.] I have introduced a bill into that committee, and the purpose of the bill is to fix the rates of duties upon certain articles as shown by a certain schedule in that bill.

Now, then, these articles and these duties shown by that schedule are the articles upon which the duties were fixed by us as our proposed import duties in the proposed treaty which was negotiated by William McKinley's administration with France. A clause of my bill provides that that schedule of reduced duties shall not go into effect until the President of the United States shall "by proclamation make known the fact that France" has done a certain thing. What? Why, the thing that France promised to do in the treaty, viz, give to American products in her market her minimum rates.

Now, here is my friend from New York [Mr. PAYNE], who denies the Senate's right to enter into reciprocity treaties, anyhow, without the House, and here is my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] who takes that view also, I believe. Now, I have come in to their aid. I now say, by this bill, "Away with the Senate; brush it aside; let us have 'McKinley reciprocity,' by legislation originated in the House of Representatives." [Applause on the Democratic side.] And when you pass this bill I will introduce three or four others, based on treaties that Mr. McKinley approved and Mr. Kasson negotiated.

But get back to this matter of Canadian reciprocity. While I am upon that question, Mr. Chairman, I want to read something from Mr. McKinley:

The period of exclusiveness is past.

It has been read so often that it has become trite, but it is worth reading.

The expansion of our trade and commerce is the present problem. Commercial wars are unprofitable. A policy of good will and friendly trade relations prevents reprisals.

If he did not fear reprisals, why did he want to "prevent reprisals?" The gentleman from Pennsylvania tells us to-day that he has heard this wolf cry of "reprisals and retaliation" so often that he pays no attention to it. That is substantially what he said. Now, if it had that effect upon Mr. McKinley's mind, if he was not afraid of retaliation and reprisal, why did Mr. McKinley say:

Reciprocity is in harmony with the spirit of the times. Measures of retaliation are not.

Why did he say that, unless he was afraid that there would be "measures of retaliation?" Mr. McKinley had sense enough not only to feel, but to know, that there would be reprisals and measures of retaliation. Why, of course, you must have measures of retaliation unless you have the balance of the world in such a slavish adulation of you that they will stand still and give you all advantages to enter their markets while you deprive them of such as you can.

There is just one advantage that you can not deprive them of, and it is the advantage of their shipping to our markets the things which they grow or make, that we can not grow or make in this country—the noncompetitive articles.

These very things you propose to make the sole basis of so-called "Republican reciprocity." Do you really think that foreigners can be so foolish as not to know that you propose to get something for nothing, or that they will trade on that basis?

"Republican reciprocity" on noncompeting articles!

I hold in my hand President Eckhart's introductory address to the Illinois Manufacturers' Association, and a part of that I want to read. Now, I do not know whether President Eckhart is a Republican or a Democrat; some of you Illinois people do, I suppose. He says:

Great Britain, our largest consumer for our agricultural and manufacturing products, is now agitating the question of a retaliatory tariff and commercial policy of free trade, based on giving the power of preferential tariffs to its colonies, in order to deal with the view of securing reciprocal trade arrangements with other nations.

And in that connection, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania still has by him the North American from which he read this morning there are some figures there which I will insert in my remarks. I want to say—I can not remember the figures exactly—Canada first gave Great Britain 15 per cent preferential; she then gave her 25 per cent, and then she gave her 33⅓ per cent.

Mr. DALZELL. Twelve and one-half per cent was the first.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Twelve and a half per cent first, and then 25, and then 33⅓. Now, when Canada began that policy she found her purchases of Great Britain to amount annually to about $20,000,000. I will put the right figures from the magazine in the RECORD. Now, those purchases from Great Britain have increased, at the expense of our manufacturers and our producers mainly, from $20,000,000 to $[illegible], as I remember the figures. It has been a month nearly since I read the article and some time since it first came out.

Here is what the article says:

The Chamberlain proposition for colonial preferential trade marks a conspicuous in the reciprocity issue at the present time. Last year Mr. Chamberlain spoke [illegible] favor of Great Britain, of 10 per cent, and several days later [illegible] appointing, and that it was chiefly valuable as an evidence of loyal sentiment. This estimate of value was wide of the mark. The preference had actually resulted the British export trade to Canada from [illegible] tion. This trade had gone down from $68,000,000 in 1873 to $[illegible] in 1897. The effect of this Canadian preference has been to bring this trade up to $[illegible] in 1903.

Since the gentleman from Pennsylvania has read so much and commented so much on this article, I will supply the reader with more of it.

For example, this:

In the history of the two countries there was a period of twelve years, from 1854 to 1866, when their trade relations were of a mutually [illegible] character, and were exerting a powerful influence in the direction of community of interest and the broadening of national sympathies. The civil war in the United States gave rise to circumstances that arrested and [illegible] feeling toward Canada in that country, based upon misrepresentations to facts, for the great majority of Canadians were friendly to the Union.

A mistaken impression that this treaty was much more favorable to Canada than to the United States was entertained by the majority of Americans. For the period during which the treaty was in force the balance of trade was decidedly in favor of the United States. According to Canadian trade returns, the total imports and exports, 1854 to 1866, inclusive, were:

Imports from the United States	$[illegible]
Exports to the United States	[illegible]
Balance of trade in favor of the United States	[illegible]

These returns did not include Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland, and British Columbia.

According to American returns, the total exports and imports to all of British North America, 1854 to 1866, inclusive, were:

Exports to British America	$343,326,000
Imports from British America	318,760,000
Balance in favor of the United States	24,566,000

And this:

One of the unexpected trade developments of late years is the growth of an extensive demand in various parts of Canada for American farm products, and the fact that this demand has turned the tide of trade in this line in the direction of Canada. The Canadian market for American farm products is found in British Columbia and the Yukon and the Klondike region, in the maritime Provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and Prince Edward Island, and in the lumbering and mining regions of Ontario; and for Indian corn, hides, flaxseed, wool, tobacco leaf, etc., in all parts of the Dominion.

In the fiscal year 1902-3 the importation of farm products into Canada for consumption from the United States was as follows: Dutiable farm products, $8,960,000; free farm products, $14,612,000, a total of $21,581,000. The same year the export of farm products to the United States was $8,200,000, the Canadian exports of imports [illegible] from the United States being $12,[illegible]. The dutiable portion of the imports was subject to the same rates of duty substantially as were imposed by the United States upon articles of the same class imported from Canada.

This conclusive [illegible] the trade leads to the conclusion that if free trading farm products were [illegible], the importation by Canada from the United States [illegible] domestic consumption would [illegible] export in the same line to the United States for consumption. This, of course, would not apply to wheat, flour, and [illegible] articles of which both countries have a surplus for export, as the United States in importing such products would export either of them or a [illegible] depleting amount of United States products, and they would [illegible] as a factor, securing for American manufactures [illegible], [illegible], and commission merchants [illegible] every way desirable trade.

Also this:

The annual table showing the Canadian importation of manufactures from Great Britain and from the United States [illegible] interest, especially when taken in conjunction with the fact that Canada has given a [illegible] preference to Great Britain first of 12½ per cent, then of 25 per cent in 1900, and of 33⅓ per cent since that time.

There is [illegible] the American Reciprocity [illegible] the British market, and the [illegible] a strong position [illegible] Canada. The greater the [illegible] of American [illegible] would be the result.

This excellent gospel for full measure:

Free trade in natural products and all other products, has [illegible] in the United States since that [illegible] was adopted. In that country there is [illegible] variety of soil, climate, [illegible] and the kind and [illegible] trade has been found to be mutually advantageous to all the States. The same policy will apply with equal force to Canada.

This also for patriotic Americans, whether of the United States or Canada:

The day will come when [illegible] people who speak the English tongue will occupy [illegible] in America. Since [illegible] good will and [illegible] advantageous relations shall prevail. [illegible] that it may, and let all the agencies [illegible] realize that the worthy and [illegible] American and American [illegible] in the interests of the future [illegible] we are laying down the lines.

Mr. DALZELL. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. DALZELL. Does the gentleman mean to say that British exports to Canada have increased in larger proportion than ours?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. No: I do not. No: I do not say that. I was telling just what they had increased. Why, when Canada began that policy Great Britain had almost lost the Canadian market. She had sunk so low she did not export to her own colony but about $20,000,000 per annum, and now the amount has gone up to the neighborhood of $60,000,000 a year.

It is increasing at the expense of our people, consisting of things that would have been shipped by us to Canada but for this preferential duty which enables Great Britain to sell the same articles cheaper.

In the light of all these facts—

Says Mr. Eckhart—

how much longer may we hope to continue to find a ready and profitable market for the increasing surplus of our agricultural and manufacturing products with our gates of commerce swinging but one way? Has not the time come for our doors to be so hung that they can swing both in and out?

In connection with that, I want to insert in the RECORD, for my voice is in a bad condition, a part of the speech made by John Charlton, a member of the Canadian congress, the author of the very article read by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, at the Auditorium, Chicago, November 10, 1903, on "Reciprocity with Canada."

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. You mean member of Parliament?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I meant member of Parliament, of course. There is a little that I would like to read, though—the first beginning of it:

Between the Gulf of Mexico and the Republic of Mexico on the south, and the Arctic Ocean on the north, stretches a vast territory, 7,000,000 square miles in extent, with resources of soil, mine, forest, and fisheries many times in excess of present development; bounded on the east, west, and north by oceans; invulnerable to foes if united in purpose; inhabited at the present moment by 84,000,000 English-speaking people, the home of the highest form of civilization, and possessed of the most advanced condition of human liberty.

What shall be the future of this most favored of all of earth's continental areas? Shall this early morning of its history advance to a resplendent noonday of power, development, and mutually peaceful and advantageous relations, with, ultimately, 200,000,000 of our race dwelling together in peace and unity, or shall we deliberately shape the conditions of the present in such a manner as to secure the establishment of two rival, mutually repellent, and possibly hostile powers, swayed by the influences of prejudices and animosities, and spurning the conditions that will bear the blessed fruits of peace, harmony, and mutual advantage?

I want to read you some figures now which the gentleman has not read. I want to call the gentleman's attention, and I shall insert in the RECORD the Canadian free list—the list of the things that they now admit from our market free:

CANADIAN FREE LIST.

Of Canadian imports from the United States last year, $69,485,000 were upon the free list, and embraced in this list were the following:

Manufactures	$23,000,000
Forest products	4,986,000
Indian corn	3,250,000
Flaxseed	1,303,000
Tobacco leaf	2,241,000
Hides and skins	2,612,000
Wool	397,000
Sundry agricultural products	2,050,000
Sundry animals and products	2,267,000
Total	42,016,000

These are the things which they will put a duty upon, if they are driven by hostile legislation, or rather by a continuance of it, to retaliate. Again:

CANADA AS A CUSTOMER FOR OUR MANUFACTURES.

Even under her moderate tariff Canada has become the best customer for manufactures that the United States possesses, and her trade with the United States largely exceeds that of all Latin America, with 56,000,000 inhabitants. The imports of manufactures from the United States were:

Manufactures from United States, 1902	$99,596,000
Excess over Great Britain in 1902	27,000,000

Mr. DALZELL. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. DALZELL. Will the gentleman tell me what American manufactures are on the Canadian free list?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I do not know specifically. I can probably get the details before to-morrow morning, and if so, I will put them in the RECORD. There were twenty-three millions of our manufactures imported into Canada, which were, in 1902, on the free list.

Now, then, "under moderate tariff Canada has become the best customer for manufactures that the United States possesses, and their trade with the United States largely exceeds that of all Latin America with 56,000,000 inhabitants."

This vast market will expand indefinitely. Canada has room for 100,000,000 inhabitants. The question is whether we shall preserve that market or whether we shall act in such a way as to close it by reprisal and retaliation.

Now, a great deal has been said this morning about Canadian reciprocity hurting our farmers in the Northwest. I want to call the gentleman's attention to these figures:

WHEAT.

United States production, 1900	$369,945,000
United States importation from Canada for consumption	596,000
Proportion of import to production, 0.02 per cent.

OATS.

United States production, 1900	$217,098,000
Importation from Canada for consumption, 1903	39,062
Proportion of import to production, 0.002 per cent.

BARLEY.

United States production, 1900	$41,631,000
Importation from Canada for consumption, 1903	17,148
Proportion of import to production, 0.035 per cent.

POTATOES.

United States production, 1900	$98,380,000
Importation from Canada for consumption, 1903	56,969
Proportion of import to production, 0.005 per cent.

HAY.

United States production, 1900	$484,254,000
Importation from Canada for consumption	1,924,598
Proportion of import to production, 0.04 per cent.

HORSES.

Value in United States, 1900	$1,060,526,000
Importation from Canada, 1903	340,289
Proportion of importation to stock held, 0.034 per cent.

CATTLE.

Value in United States, 1900	$1,516,337,000
Importation from Canada, 1903	282,298
Proportion of importation to stock held, 0.034 per cent.

SHEEP.

Value in United States, 1900	$170,881,000
Importation from Canada	961,109
Proportion of importation to stock held, 0.09 per cent.

EGGS.

Production in United States, 1900	$144,240,000
Importation from Canada, 1903	6,436
Proportion of importation to production, 0.0005 per cent.

LUMBER.

United States production, lumber and lumber products, 1900	$566,021,000
Importation from Canada, 1903	16,977,000
Proportion of importation to production, 3 per cent; proportion of importation of sawn lumber to production, about 2 per cent.

Ah, but I hear some gentleman say that if we reduce the duty more farm products will come in. I know that will be so on some parts of the boundary, because it is a queer fact that at one end of the long line of division we buy a thing of Canada and at the other end she will buy the same thing of us. It will work both ways.

Mr. Charlton further says:

It must not be supposed that the trade in natural farm products would be exclusively from Canada to the United States. At the present time and for years past the interchange of farm products has been greatly in favor of the United States. In 1901 the export of farm products from Canada to the United States was $8,200,000. The import of farm products from the United States to Canada, exclusive of raw cotton, was $21,000,000, of which $9,989,000 was dutiable and $14,022,000 free. So that we sell more farm products to Canada than Canada buys from us by a very great deal—more than twice as much.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. May I ask the gentleman what he is reading these statistics from?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. From the speech of John Charleton, a member of Parliament, made before the Illinois Manufacturers' Association, November 10, 1903, and I so stated when I began to read them.

Mr. PAYNE. I did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says the Republican party is not engaged in "bookkeeping reciprocity." I thought that just what the Republican party believed in in connection with the tariff laws, whether treaties, reciprocity laws, or general laws, was "bookkeeping."

I have been hearing so long that the Republican party was "upbuilding the private industries of the country" that I thought they kept a credit and debit account with every private industry in the United States—manufacturers getting protection, Republicans getting campaign funds. But I think if the gentleman does want to keep books in connection with reciprocity he will find the books are more apt to bring prosperity to the United States in proportion as he takes the trammels off our trade.

The gentleman then says, "What is the matter with our foreign trade?" Why, our foreign trade is all right, except in just so far as it is trammeled by Republican legislation. What we want is to make it "all righter." The gentleman quotes our imports from foreign parts of the world, and he boasts about the amount of our imports and says they are increasing.

That is a very high tribute to the laws of God as against the laws of the Republican party, because if you could have carried your Republican policy to its ultimate analysis you would not have any imports at all except in noncompeting products. And what sort of products are there upon the face of this globe that would be strictly noncompeting in the American market?

A Republican policy carried to its bitter end would build a wall against every article in the world the like of which could be raised in the United States. What are the articles the like of which can not be raised in the United States? Polar bears, guava, and breadfruit, and a few things of that sort constitute about all. [Laughter.]

The gentleman would quit buying from any country under the sun anything except the things that could not, even with legislative hothousing, be produced in the United States. Every dollar that we import is a blow at the success of your miserable Republican tariff legislation, and is a proof of the inability of human legislation to violate always and forever the laws of God and of trade. The gentleman says our foreign trade has grown. So it has. But our domestic trade has grown, too. It has grown a great deal more, and nobody contends that the tariff has had anything to do with that.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit an interruption, my recollection of the debates in the Senate last fall is that Senator DOLLIVER, in a colloquy over there as to whether or not Mr. Dingley placed reciprocity rates in the Dingley tariff, said he had placed and that there were in the present Dingley law reciprocity rates for the purpose of forcing foreign countries to enter into specially good reciprocal rates with us. Did the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] allude to that in his argument?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. No.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I was not here, and I did not hear all of his speech.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman did not allude to what Mr. DOLLIVER said. I knew of that.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The point I was about to make is this: They put the rates in the tariff law, and yet they have not entered into any reciprocal contracts with foreign countries, and the result is that we pay a revenue and a protection rate and the reciprocity rate as well.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And Senator DOLLIVER said that Mr. Dingley had told him just what the gentleman says, but others have disputed that, and thus that is a question of veracity into which I did not care to enter. The fact is that the Dingley bill itself proves that that was the author's view of the law, because it contains a clause enabling the President to enter into reciprocal relations with a 20 per cent reduction.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Just a moment more. There was a reciprocity convention held in the city of Washington since this tariff law was enacted, and it is in the proceedings of that convention that one gentleman, or several gentlemen, came here for the purpose of getting reciprocal trade relations entered into, and they were informed by leading Senators here, so the report states, that it is a fact that these reciprocal rates were placed in the Dingley tariff and are there now. At a convenient season I will exhibit the pamphlet to my friend from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] or any other gentleman on the other side who desires to read it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I wish to say this, that not all the misapplied figures and not all the more narrow nationalism of the world can divide the world any farther than God has already divided it—by oceans, by speech, by mountain ranges, and by racial characteristics.

Men can not live as nations upon any different footing than the footing upon which they must live as individuals, and nations must prosper and grow and be loved or be hated for the same reasons that individuals, in dealing with other individuals, prosper and grow and are loved or are hated. All the Chauvinism in the world can not change the eternal principle that in trade relations, as in our other relations in the world, friendship is better than enmity, peace is better than war, reciprocity is better than retaliation.

You can not continue always to take and never to give. You can not continue always to sell and never to buy. You can not continue always to frame your legislation upon an assumption that foreigners are necessarily enemies and have them treat you otherwise than as enemies. What is the consequence of all this?

You have gone on until you have erected a great house, that will have to be taken down very gradually to keep from hurting your own people, and yet taken down it must be in the course of time, not by us alone, but by all nations in the world, who are indulging in the same sort of laws of corelationship. Every barrier to trade, every barrier to transportation and travel, every barrier to the access of literature and the productions of art, is a step in the direction of keeping the peoples of the world apart, an obstruction in the pathway along which they ought to travel in getting together.

The gentleman may talk; he may produce abnormal figures, all he pleases; but I say he is standing to-day with his face turned backward toward the time when foreigners were regarded as necessarily enemies, and when people thought that if they had any trade with foreigners at all everything bought was that much lost.

It is true also that those of us who are looking the other way, whether we succeed immediately or whether it be a long time before we succeed, have our faces turned to the future—the future when men would rather live in amity than live at war—the time when they would rather "live, and let live," treating one another as trade equals, one buying from the other that which the other, with his climate and soil and industrial character, can best and most effectively and most cheaply produce, and the other buying from him that which, with his climate and soil and peculiar genius, he can most effectively and most cheaply produce.

All the statistics in the world cut no figure in comparison with the eternal principle; but since the gentleman has undertaken to furnish figures for the policy which he follows, I have undertaken to furnish the counter figures; and if I had had time to hunt up at my room the things which I have there, lying around helter-skelter, I could have supported my proposition even more conclusively than I think I have done already.

There is not a shred of fact in the statement that even from the standpoint of a "balance-of-trade" economist, except during the few abnormal periods of war time, your reciprocity treaty with Canada carried even "the balance of trade" against us. I have shown that; and the true test—the growth of the volume of trade, both exports and imports—I have also furnished. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LOVERING].

Mr. LOVERING. Mr. Chairman, I have always believed in reciprocity that did not sacrifice the interests of our home manufacturers. It seems to me that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] has very aptly set forth the only correct principles upon which we can establish reciprocal relations with any foreign country.

The lines of the true and only practical reciprocity lie parallel with the great American system of protection to our home industries. We recognize this as a principle, and in providing legislation for reciprocal trade with foreign countries we must bear in mind that when it is sought to have any product, manufacture, or commodity placed on the reciprocal list it must first be ascertained whether the interests of American labor are threatened or not. But, Mr. Chairman, we are prone to lose sight of or obscure the fact that what our industries are most suffering from to-day is the want of an enlarged outlet for our surplus products.

There is another way far more potent and practicable to extend our foreign trade than by reciprocity. It is by liberalizing our drawback laws.

The trend of public opinion with reference to new markets for American products shows that our manufacturers now keenly realize that production has passed far beyond consumption, and that new markets in the foreign field must be found if our workmen are to continue to receive adequate employment.

There is one fundamental principle underlying our tariff legislation which, I regret to say, has not been adhered to by Congress, and which in a large measure is responsible for the loss of very valuable foreign markets, viz., that the tariff was only intended to protect the home market from foreign competition. The protection which American manufacturers now enjoy was based on that implied condition.

Opposition to the amendment of our drawback laws and bonded warehouse system on the part of certain large manufacturing interests has proved effective up to the present time.

After we have attained all that is practicable under reciprocity there still remains an enormous field for the expansion of our foreign trade by enlarging and extending the scope of our drawback laws, by amending the administrative act of the tariff, and this may be done without disturbing a single schedule or taking a single step in the direction of the revision of the tariff.

Whatever it may, sooner or later, be thought best to do in this direction, there is no reason why those wholesome provisions for a rebate of the duties on foreign materials entering into domestic manufactures for export should not at once be made.

It is well known that our manufacturers have lost millions and millions of dollars of trade, and that thousands and thousands of our workmen have been deprived of employment since the passage of the Dingley bill that might easily have been saved to the people of our country excepting for the neglect of Congress to adopt a very simple amendment to the administrative act of the Dingley bill.

We may ignore it if we please. Members of either party may shut their ears to the cry for relief. They may despise and belittle the honest efforts of those who are laboring to accomplish needful legislation. A languid leadership may not care to be wakened from its lethargic slumbers nor be stirred to an active regard for the public welfare, but the fact remains that while all this inert and stand-pat policy prevails the great ship of business is drifting onto the rocks and our boasted prosperity is fast coming to an end.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer a few remarks upon what seems to me to be a very critical situation of one of our industries to-day. With a crop of hardly more than 10,000,000 bales of cotton this season we shall be facing a cotton famine. Next to food crops of the world, the cotton crop holds the most important place.

The wool crop, the flax crop, and the silk crop might be total failures and not carry with them so much discomfort and hardship as the failure of the cotton crop.

Cotton has come to be a more important article of clothing than even wool. The articles and purposes for which it is used have multiplied within the last score of years to a degree which would amaze the uninformed or casual observer. Even when found combined with wool it is generally to the advantage of the manufactured article.

It must not be thought that because good cotton is mixed with wool that the joint product is a shoddy fabric. True it is cheaper, but properly manufactured it is not less useful, less enduring, or less sightly.

Mixed goods of this kind are not to be classed with what are called "shoddy." Shoddy manufactures are generally made from torn-up woolen rags which have already served a purpose and have been cast aside. Such goods are not to be compared with those made of wool and cotton mixed or even of cotton alone.

It will be seen, therefore, that a short crop of cotton is a great hardship. Its cheapness is not alone its greatest recommendation, although the fact that it is ordinarily the cheapest known fiber brings its manufactures within the reach of everyone.

More people in the world are clothed entirely in cotton than in wool or any other material. The price at which cotton is being sold to-day restricts its use in many fields.

I believe the day is not far away when the cotton belt of this country will have to produce 15,000,000 bales of cotton. I believe there is no place in the whole world where cotton can be grown so cheaply and to so good advantage as in this country, and while I regret that the present price will bring distress to the spinning industry, I congratulate our good southern neighbors upon the great wealth it is bringing to the planters.

The cotton manufacturers of the world are prospecting everywhere for new cotton fields. England, France, Germany, and Russia are using every endeavor and are subsidizing the growth of cotton wherever there is the least promise of a crop.

While it may seem impossible that the supremacy of the southern planter shall be wrested from him, it is not well to ignore these efforts. The South should stir itself to raise all the cotton it can rather than to be devising plans to curtail its production.

The highest price is not always an unmixed blessing. It stimulates production elsewhere and restricts its use. The cotton States can, if they will, grow all the cotton the world needs, and for all time cotton may be king, so long as he exacts only a reasonable tribute from all mankind.

Cotton is a tender plant and has its enemies. It is subject to the vicissitudes of the weather and the ravages of parasites. I believe the Government should spare no expense to study and exterminate the boll-weevil pest. I should favor any reasonable additional appropriation for the purpose.

The value of last year's cotton crop, including cotton seed, was $565,000,000, and it is confidently estimated that the present crop of cotton and cotton seed will yield a value exceeding $625,000,000. When it is taken into account that the South adds still further to the value of its great staple by spinning two and a half million bales of cotton, and by making oil and other by-products from the cotton seed, we begin to form some idea of what a source of wealth cotton is to the Southern States and to the whole country. And let me say right here to my friends from the Southern cotton belt, you possess a wealth there which has never been worked out. Year after year we denude the forests in the North to make paper. Thousands and thousands of acres are cut down every year, and our forests are gradually disappearing. You grow every year in the South cotton stalks that will make the paper of this country five times over, but you burn it and use it for fertilizer or plow it in for fertilizer. You have a wealth there which you know little about. I have samples of cotton paper pulp which surpass anything except the finest pulp made from linen rags.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will come down there and help us manufacture that as he has helped us to manufacture our cotton, we certainly shall welcome him.

Mr. LOVERING. I beg to say that steps are already being taken to develop that industry. It is said that the State of Texas alone can grow the cotton crop for the world. Probably the only obstacle to growing a 15,000,000-bale crop of cotton is the absence of labor in the right places at the right time to pick the crop, and this brings us to the consideration of a question which must, sooner or later, engage the attention of the planters of the South.

Accurate statistics of the growth of cotton in Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Texas show that in 1876 40 per cent of the total crop was made by whites and 60 per cent by negroes; whereas in 1900 statistics show actually the reverse, namely, 60 per cent of the cotton was made by the whites and 40 per cent by the negroes.

I will submit tables showing this, with other tables to be printed with my remarks in the RECORD. But the most interesting phase of the question is in connection with the relative increase of the white and colored population of the South, as shown by the census of 1900. Taking the States of Texas, Mississippi, Georgia, Alabama, South Carolina, Tennessee, Florida, Missouri, Arkansas, Louisiana, North Carolina, Virginia, and Kentucky, we find that the white population in 1880 was 5,576,933, and in 1900 was 8,772,950, an increase of 57.3 per cent. The population of the negroes in the same States in 1880 was 4,409,210, and in 1900 was 6,061,748, an increase of 37.5 per cent.

The cotton crop of 1880 was 5,721,026 bales. The crop of 1900 was 9,250,303 bales, or 61.7 per cent increase. I ought to say right here that I have only taken what are known as the cotton-growing counties in these States, which number 749, and for the purpose of comparison have taken only those same counties at each period.

The white population in these States in 1900 was 59.1 per cent of the total and the negro population was 40.9 per cent of the total, while in 1880 the white population was 55.8 per cent of the total to 44.2 of the negro population, showing plainly that the negro population has relatively decreased as compared with the white population.

I have another table which shows that while the tendency of the whole population is to become urban and less rural, it is more marked in the case of the negro than in the white. The tendency of the negro to the cities is greater than that of the white. If this relative increase of the white population to the colored continues, we will find in another score of years the white population in the neighborhood of 65 per cent of the total to 35 per cent of colored.

To raise 15,000,000 bales of cotton will require an increase of laboring population, and the South must look to immigration to supply it. Immigration not necessarily from abroad, but from other parts of the country, and in immigration, I believe, will be found the ultimate solution of the race question.

It would appear that the comparison of the crops shown by census years 1880 and 1900 is reliable. The crop of 1900 (growth of 1899) was the smallest produced in the five years between 1897 and 1902. The average crop of this five-year period was 10,595,070 bales, or more than 1,000,000 bales in excess of the growth of 1899. The 1900 crop was 9,534,707 bales, of an average net weight of 471 pounds. The quantity of cotton accounted for in Table 1 for 1900 is 9,250,303 bales. The quantity not accounted for (284,404 bales) is practically the crop of Oklahoma and Indian Territory. The Territories have been omitted from the table because of the impossibility of making the comparison with 1880.

The total number of counties producing cotton in 1900 was 767,[a] and of this number 749 are included in Table 1.

The growth of 1879 (census year 1880) was 5,761,352 bales, of an average net weight of 454 pounds. The average crop of the five-year period between 1877 and 1881 was 5,333,604, or 427,648 bales less than the growth of 1872. This goes to show that the tendency indicated by the statistics of Table 1 would be increased were the average crops of these two periods taken as the basis of the comparison instead of the crops afforded by the census years. [Applause.]

a Census statistics covering the growth of the preceding year.

b The statistics for 1865 are estimated. The census of negro population in 1870 is disregarded as incorrect, and an estimate based upon the average annual increase from 1860 to 1880 employed instead.

c Decrease.

And then, on motion of Mr. MCCLEARY of Minnesota, the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LAWRENCE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12833, the District appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 2596. An act granting a pension to Frances S. Hopkins; and

S. 2809. An act granting an increase of pension to Jesse G. Finley.

J. HUDSON KIBBE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, February 29, 1904.

Resolved, That the action of the President pro tempore in signing the bill (S. 2[illegible]) "granting an increase of pension to J. Hudson Kibbe" be rescinded, and that the bill be returned to the House of Representatives, with the request that similar action be taken by the House with respect to the signature of the Speaker, and that the passage of the bill be reconsidered, and that it be postponed indefinitely, the beneficiary of the same being dead.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Speaker will consider himself authorized to cancel his signature to the bill.

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

And then, on motion of Mr. MCCLEARY of Minnesota (at 4 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Winchester, Idaho, praying for an investigation of the charges made and filed against Hon. REED SMOOT, a Senator from the State of Utah; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. HEYBURN presented a petition of R. B. Hayes Post, No. 2, Department of Idaho, Grand Army of the Republic, of Lewiston, Idaho, praying for the enactment of a service-pension law; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HANSBROUGH presented petitions of the congregations of the First Methodist Episcopal Church and the Presbyterian Church of Fargo; of the congregations of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the First Presbyterian Church of Tower City, and of sundry citizens of Fargo, all in the State of North Dakota, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of the Citizens' Trade Association of Cambridge, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the New England Postmasters' Association, praying for the passage of the so-called "stamp-certificate bill;" which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Eustis, Houlton, Fairfield, Waterville, Monroe, Wilton, Hiram, Freedom, Palmyra, and Bath, all in the State of Maine, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS AND THEIR PEOPLE.

Mr. LODGE. I present a paper on the Philippine Islands and their people by Henry Gannett, chief geographer, United States Geological Survey, and assistant director of the Philippine census. I move that the paper be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FORAKER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3329) for the erection of a memorial structure at Fort Recovery, Ohio, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BEVERIDGE, from the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3339) providing for the election of a Delegate to the House of Representatives from the district of Alaska, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. McCUMBER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 671) to increase the pensions of those who have lost both eyes or have become totally blind from causes occurring in the military or naval service of the United States, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6758) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER. In connection with the two bills reported, I wish to ask the Senator from North Dakota a question. I presume, however, it is unnecessary.

I noticed in a newspaper this morning a statement that it is proposed to place on the pension appropriation bill the bill to increase pensions of soldiers who have lost both eyes. I take it from the fact that two bills have been reported that that is not the intention of the committee.

Mr. McCUMBER. Both bills have been reported, and it is supposed that both will pass the House. We increased the general appropriation $201,000 over the amount adopted by the House to cover the pensions of the blind.

Mr. GALLINGER. But the committee did not add to the pension appropriation bill a provision increasing the pensions of soldiers who have lost the sight of both eyes?

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, no; nothing of that kind.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is what the press said had been done, but I thought it improbable that it had been done in that shape.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bills will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9658) to provide for the withdrawal, free of duty under bond, from the Louisiana Purchase Exposition of any articles and materials donated to incorporated institutions established for religious, philosophical, educational, scientific, or literary purposes, or to any State or municipal corporation, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1379) for repayment of duty on anthracite coal, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. BURNHAM, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8835) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Jackson, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

HEARING BEFORE COMMITTEE ON WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. BACON on the 22d ultimo, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the stenographer employed to report the hearing before the Committee on Woman Suffrage on the joint resolution (S. R. 4) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, extending the right of suffrage to women, and the bill (S. 2728) to protect the right of women citizens to register and vote for Members of the House of Representatives, be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

REPRINT OF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom the subject was referred, to report a joint resolution authorizing the reprint of certain documents to be sold by the Superintendent of Documents. I also submit a letter accompanying it. I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution and that the letter be read.

The joint resolution (S. R. 53) authorizing the reprinting of certain documents to be sold by the Superintendent of Documents, was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it resolved, etc., That there shall be printed 3,000 copies of the Special Report on Diseases of the Horse and 1,500 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of Cattle, for sale by the Superintendent of Documents under the provisions of section 61 of an act providing for the public printing, binding, and the distribution of documents approved January 12, 1895, and the Superintendent of Documents is hereby authorized to order reprinted from time to time such public documents as may be required for sale: Provided, That the appropriation for printing and binding shall be reimbursed for the cost of such reprints from the moneys received by the Superintendent of Documents from the sale of public documents.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE,
OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT OF DOCUMENTS,
UNION BUILDING,
Washington, D. C., February 27, 1905.

Hon. T. C. PLATT,
Chairman Committee on Printing, United States Senate.

DEAR SIR: I inclose herewith, for your consideration, a resolution authorizing the printing of 3,000 copies of the Special Report on Diseases of the Horse and 1,500 copies of the Special Report on Diseases of Cattle for sale. The resolution also provides that reprints of documents may be ordered from time to time as required for sale and that the appropriation for printing and binding shall be reimbursed out of the moneys received from the sale of documents.

There has been a constant demand, both domestic and foreign, for the report on Diseases of the Horse and Diseases of Cattle. These books are very highly regarded by the people and are desired by those who are unable to obtain them gratuitously. As there is no means of obtaining the books except by purchase from the Government, it appears to me to be a reasonable request that a sufficient number of copies should be printed to supply those who are anxious and willing to pay the cost.

There is also a great demand from the farmers of the country especially and from schools, colleges, and foreigners for many of the small bulletins issued by the Department of Agriculture which are not distributed free except to agents and special correspondents of the Department. The Department usually supplies the office with from 25 to 50 copies of each bulletin for sale, which is inadequate, as in many cases 1,000 or more could be sold. These publications are very valuable to the people; they are doing a wonderful work in assisting in the development of the country; they can not be obtained from any other source, and it would seem proper and right for Congress to give the Superintendent of Documents authority to order such documents reprinted when necessary, paying for the same with moneys received from the sale of documents.

The resolution has been submitted to and approved by the Public Printer.

Very respectfully,

L. C. FERRELL, Superintendent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12220) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments and to submit a report thereon.

I wish to say—I do not desire to put it in the form of giving notice, as is the habit of Senators, but which gives no additional right—I wish to say that I shall call the bill up to-morrow morning immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator from Maine, who has just made a report on the naval appropriation bill, will allow me, I should like to ask him a question. Will the Senator from Maine explain to me the amount of money that is carried by the bill as he has reported it and expects to have passed?

Mr. HALE. About $97,000,000. There have been very small additions made, I will say, by the Senate committee. The House bill carries ninety-six-odd million dollars. Very slight changes have been made in the House bill. The committee accepted that bill, generally speaking, and its total as reported to the Senate—the figures are given in the report—is about $97,000,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Mr. PLATT of New York introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 4673) granting an increase of pension to Rosette E. S. Grow;

A bill (S. 4674) granting an increase of pension to Isabel Ward; and

A bill (S. 4675) granting a pension to Angeline B. Whitney.

Mr. KEAN introduced a bill (S. 4676) for the relief of Franklin Patterson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4677) for the relief of George F. Fuller; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BALL introduced a bill (S. 4678) granting an increase of pension to John W. Paris; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GAMBLE introduced a bill (S. 4679) granting an increase of pension to Samuel R. Shankland; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4680) granting an increase of pension to Samuel T. Dixon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4681) granting an increase of pension to John H. Stubbs; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4682) for the relief of Henry Bradley; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Depredations.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 4683) to provide for the erection of a monument to the memory of Maj. Gen. John C. Frémont; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4684) granting an increase of pension to Ella M. Ewing; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 4685) for the relief of Adolph Wennald; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4686) to provide for the better registration of deaths and births in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. I introduce a bill for reference to the Committee on the Judiciary, and I ask that the bill may be read at the desk.

The bill (S. 4687) relating to the salaries of the President and Vice-President of the United States, the Senators of the United States, Representatives and Delegates in Congress, and the members of the Cabinet was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after March 4, 1905, the salaries or compensation of the heads of executive offices or members of the executive, legislative, and judicial departments of the Government of the United States shall be as follows:

The President of the United States, $75,000 per annum; the Vice-President of the United States, $15,000 per annum; the Speaker of the House of Representatives, $15,000 per annum; each member of the Cabinet, $15,000 per annum; Senators of the United States, $8,000 per annum; Representatives and Delegates in Congress, $8,000 per annum.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 4688) for the relief of the Atlantic Works, of Boston, Mass.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4689) to amend the military record of Henry W. Dunbrack; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PLATT of New York introduced a bill (S. 4690) granting an increase of pension to Andrew Switzer; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 54) to permit Maj. Thomas W. Symons, Corps of Engineers, to assist the State of New York by acting as a member of an advisory board of consulting engineers in connection with the improvement and enlargement of the navigable canals of the State of New York; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment authorizing the issuance of a patent in fee to Samuel J. Brown, a member of the Sisseton and Wahpeton tribe of Indians, for lands heretofore allotted in severalty in Roberts County, S. Dak., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the assistant sealer of weights and measures of the District of Columbia from $1,200 to $1,800, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut submitted an amendment providing that all lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians directed to be sold at public auction for cash, by the act of July 1, 1902, shall instead be sold under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, after due advertisement, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. KEAN (for Mr. ELKINS) submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $200,000 for the purchase of a semisubmerged torpedo boat of the divided hull, subsurface type, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

FORT HALL INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. DUBOIS submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That the President be requested to return to the Senate the bill of the Senate (S. 258) relating to ceded lands on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation to correct a clerical error.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow at 4 o'clock the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of unobjected pension bills on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that to-morrow at 4 o'clock the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of unobjected pension cases. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11825) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and asking for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked for by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PROCTOR, Mr. HANSBROUGH, and Mr. SIMMONS were appointed.

HARRY HALLER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6582) granting an increase of pension to Harry Haller and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment and agree to the request of the House for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. PATTERSON were appointed.

AUSTIN ALMY.

Mr. McCUMBER submitted the following report:

[illegible] of the two Houses on the [illegible] granting an increase of pension to Austin Almy, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment to the amendment of the House and agree to the same.

P. J. McCUMBER,
A. J. FOSTER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
H. C. LOUDENSLAGER,
WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

TRANSPORTATION OF SUPPLIES FOR THE ARMY AND NAVY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate Senate bill 2263.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2263) to require the employment of vessels of the United States for public purposes.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] is ready to proceed.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, on Saturday I took the floor to make some objections to the bill, when the Senate postponed the further consideration of the bill until this morning. I desire now to submit a few objections to the measure.

I stated on Saturday that this is a ship-subsidy bill of a very objectionable class, in my opinion.

In saying that it is a ship-subsidy bill, and that I am opposed to it because it is a subsidy bill, I did not mean to be understood, nor do I now mean to be understood, that it may not be in the province of the Government, in the wise province of the Government perhaps, to give some encouragement to American shipping. What I desired to say was that I was going to object to this character of encouragement. I object to it because it is a partial subsidy and because it gives an absolute monopoly to a certain class of the commerce of the United States.

If the reply to that shall be that the coastwise trade is a monopoly, I think I shall be able in a very few words to distinguish between the ordinary coastwise trade and this trade. While I would not interfere with the present coastwise trade, and while I do not desire to make any criticism of that trade, I think any Senator who will consider for a moment will distinguish the difference between the trade in all the ports of the United States we have heretofore had and the special significance of a limitation of trade between the islands known as the Philippines that bear a relation to the Government of the United States which no other section of the United States bears to the Government.

I do not know myself whether the Philippines are a part of the United States or not. Neither do I know what relation they bear to the United States in a technical, legal, and constitutional way. But I know this involves a very serious question. The Philippine Islands, whether they are a part of the United States or whether they are not a part of the United States, bear a special relation to the Government of the United States. They are not a colony of the United States; they are not a Territory of the United States. Our peculiar relation with the Philippine Islands is at least that of a trustee, or, we might say, the Philippines occupy the position of a ward. I think perhaps if I would read an extract from the address of the Chairman of the last Republican state and convention I should be able to state what the relation of the present Administration is at least to the Philippine Islands and the people thereof.

It seems to me that is a subject to be considered when you come to consider not only the bill that is pending but the bill which follows—Senate bill 2262, which follows on the Calendar—and which is, I suppose, a companion bill to the pending measure, this bill dealing only with the Government transportation and the other bill dealing with all commerce between the islands and the different parts of the United States.

The junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] was the presiding officer of the last Republican national convention. He is the chairman of the Committee on the Philippines and a prominent and influential member of this body. His deliberate utterance at the convention may be taken as the platform of the party on this subject. He said, in addressing the convention:

We [illegible] not proposed being interested in the Philippines [illegible] We propose to [illegible] the American people that we are [illegible] as well as others. We believe in trade expansion [illegible] the promotion of a commerce and legislation [illegible] extension of our trade and to open new markets [illegible]

Mr. President, I think that will be sufficient to show that at least when our relation is that of a trustee that is the relation we propose. I know everything indicates that the first sentence I read, that "we make no hypocritical pretenses of being interested in the Philippines solely on account of others," is another [illegible] true. But there is anything which would prove that, it is the present proposed legislation, for I intend to try to show in the brief time I shall occupy the floor on this point that it is inimical to the interests of the people of those islands, and that it was [illegible] or of the one which is to follow.

I do not know but that we are powerful enough and perhaps disregardful enough to the inferior state to be able to make any relations we choose between them and us with reference to commerce and [illegible], but if we do occupy the position of trustee in all our relations, we ought at least to have some regard to the interests of the ward in trust and that is the people of the Islands.

That this bill and I am speaking now of the bill before the Senate) will raise the price of transportation between all the American ports and the Philippines no one denies. Indeed, that is the main [illegible] proposition. And this proposition only applied to the Government of the United States, transportation would be a [illegible] a very serious matter; but when applied as it will be after the passage of this bill by the passage of another, it becomes an important question to consider.

As it stands with this bill, it will be only increasing the appropriation for the Army and Navy a certain sum each year. And in that way it would be a subsidy to the ships that are carrying [illegible] and navy [illegible] from the United States to the Philippine Islands, for of course these ships will bring nothing back, except it may be occasionally the dead body of a sailor or soldier.

The people who are doing the commercial business between the Philippine Islands and the United States are under the impression that it will increase the transportation prices at least 50 per cent. The late Secretary of War has declared that it would increase the expenditure, or 50 per cent.

On Saturday I called the attention of the Senator from Maine to the fact that the present Secretary of War had had a hearing [illegible] which I understood he had expressed himself as decidedly opposed to the passage of this bill and to the passage of the House bill, S. 2263. I made an effort by a letter to the Secretary of War to secure a transcript of the evidence given before him on Thursday of last week, and which I know was taken down by a stenographer. Up to the present time I have not been able to do that; but I shall make the statement here, upon authority which I do not believe can be questioned, that the present Secretary of War, not only in his report as governor-general of the Philippine Islands, but as Secretary of War, has expressed decided disapprobation of the passage of these bills.

Ordinarily, I should not pay very much attention to the expression of an executive officer upon a matter of this kind, but in this case the present Secretary of War, having for several years been the presiding officer of the Government of the United States in the Philippine Islands, is entitled to some consideration that ordinarily would not be accorded to any other officer. He says, not only as the Governor of the Philippine Islands but since, that it will be a great hardship upon the Philippine people, and will increase the price of their transportation to a considerable degree. Whether it will increase it threefold or 50 per cent I do not know. I do know, Mr. President, that it creates an absolute monopoly; that all competition is destroyed with other vessels, save those that are registered as United States vessels.

The hearing before the Senate committee is full of testimony as to the ability of the United States to furnish the necessary ships to do this work. I do not care to go into that in detail. While one shipowner declared that it was impossible to supply the required transportation, another one said that there would be abundance of it. At all events, up to the present time, according to the reports of the Government officials, with the limited commerce between the United States and the Philippine Islands, not over 3 per cent of the whole has been carried in American ships. That is sufficient to show at least that the transportation of goods will not be carried in American ships in a normal state; that is to say, in a natural condition of commerce; and we shall give to the American shipowners who will do this business some special privileges and advantages.

Top[illegible] the whole question of a ship subsidy, which I do not intend this morning to go into except to say that whenever the Government of the United States, great as it is, comparing the position it does toward those islands, shall conclude that it wants a ship subsidy, I think common fairness and common decency ought to dictate that it should not grant this subsidy at the expense simply of its wards. If we are to pay a ship subsidy to the men who carry goods from the United States ports to the Philippine Islands, it should be paid by all the people of the United States and not by the unfortunate people who occupy the position the Philippine people do.

The commerce between the United States and the Philippine Islands is and is probably limited one. It is a little difficult to say just what its advantages are to us and whether it is of any advantage. The amount of commerce between the Philippine Islands and the United States is insignificant. I have some tables here to which I propose to call the attention of the Senate briefly, and to put into the Record.

While I do not believe that at the present time, if the transportation of produce both ways shall be confined to American vessels, there are sufficient ships to do the business promptly and properly at a fair price, yet I have no doubt that in due time enough ships will be provided to carry on this commerce. The commerce, however, being limited—the commerce existing practically only one way—there can never be cheap transportation. There will be in weight probably five or six times the amount coming this way that will ever be found going the other way, and the experience of the world has been that, in order to make shipping profitable, ships must carry products both ways, or one way at least there will be a heavy price charged.

It is a little difficult to say what this transportation will be. I suppose, speaking extravagantly, the business done between the Philippine Islands and the United States will not exceed 150,000 tons. About 100,000 tons of hemp come this way, and perhaps twenty-five or thirty thousand tons of other freight go the other way. If any considerable number of ships leave New York for the Philippines, and if that number shall be sufficient to bring the hemp to us—it is a great trade, amounting to practically the entire import trade—some of the ships will necessarily go empty. Ships can not go with a full cargo, because only a few ships would be able to do that. Some of them would go entirely empty. The freight rate now from the United States to these islands is much higher than the freight rate from these islands to the United States.

I need not go into any discussion to demonstrate why this is so. The great bulk and the great amount of weight being from the Philippines, necessarily the empty ships going out will charge more than they would if they were full. At the present time any ship, no matter what flag it flies, no matter where it was built, and no matter who owns it, can enter into this trade. It is privileged to get a cargo wherever it can, to take it there, and to bring back a cargo if it can get one. It is now proposed to say not only that the Government transportation, but that private transportation shall be wholly carried on in American bottoms.

Mr. President, what is the necessity for this change in the law? Two years ago, in 1902, this present month, we passed a bill which did not apply the coastwise laws to the Philippine Islands, but provided that they should apply on the 1st of July, 1904. I am not able to say, from an examination of that statute, exactly what it means, but I suppose that is what it does mean—that after the 1st of July next the coastwise laws of the United States shall apply to the Philippine Islands. It was then thought it would not do to apply them. Nothing has since occurred; no new condition has since arisen; and if it was unwise to apply those laws then it is unwise to apply them now.

I can not say with any certainty what is the purpose of Senate bill 2259. If it is admitted that this is the law, or will be the law on the 1st of July next, there may be some other things that ought to be provided for.

There has been much said about the value of the Philippine Islands to us in the way of trade. The great bulk of the business now done between the United States and the Philippine Islands is done by way of the Suez Canal. One of the urgent reasons given why we should have a ship canal across the Isthmus has been that we would thereby secure this great and abundant trade of the Philippine Islands to be done through that canal. If that canal across the Isthmus were finished to-morrow and a vessel was going to leave New York for the Philippine Islands, it would go by way of the Suez Canal. It would still continue to go that way; but, of course, if it were going to the northern part of Asia, it would go the other way.

It would take a sailing ship six months to go around the Cape of Good Hope to the Philippine Islands; it takes a good steamer to go there and return between sixty and one hundred and twenty days. The great bulk of the trade between the Philippine Islands and the United States is done in steamers, and will be done in steamers, by way of the Suez Canal. There are some sailing ships that bring hemp, but not a great many, because the length of time taken by the trip locks up the investment to such a degree that the hemp dealers do not desire to be out of their money and therefore they ship, as a rule, by the steamers.

I want to call the attention of the Senate to the increase in the hemp trade between the United States and the Philippine Islands. In 1901 the imports to the United States were 23,948 tons, of the value of $3,478,581; in 1902 that trade had increased to 50,361 tons, of the value in round numbers of $10,000,000; in 1903 the value of imported hemp was $11,338,587, of the weight of 64,990 tons, or practically 65,000 tons.

Our exports at that time were in the neighborhood of $4,000,000. I shall not go into any of the details in relation to that subject at this time, except to say that they amounted to about $4,000,000, made up of a variety of articles, including provisions and quite a large item of liquors and wines—not much wine, but principally malt and other liquors.

Mr. President, I want to very briefly call attention to a statement made by the Secretary of War, which has heretofore been alluded to, as to the bill now before the Senate. I also want to call attention to one or two other things, and then I am disposed, so far as I am concerned, not to interfere further with the progress of this bill except by my vote.

The Secretary of War has written this letter:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 14, 1905.

SIR: Referring to Senate bill 2263, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session, in response to your request for suggestions touching the merits of the bill and the propriety of its passage, I have the honor to transmit a report by the Quartermaster-General of the Army to the Secretary of War, dated December 28, 1903, a further report by the Quartermaster-General to the Secretary of War, dated January 9, 1904, in response to a request for detailed information, and a report from the same officer to the Secretary of War, dated January 13, 1904, in response to further specific requests for information.

The great bulk of freight shipped by the War Department to the Philippines goes upon the transports owned by the United States. The remainder goes chiefly in foreign bottoms, because the owners of foreign vessels uniformly underbid the owners of American vessels. Every opportunity has been given to American vessels to compete, and the standing instructions of the Department are to prefer American vessels wherever there is such substantial equality between the bids as to make it lawful to do so.

I have no doubt whatever of the wisdom of a provision which shall make it possible to do this business through the employment of American ships. I think, however, that there is great danger that the passage of this bill in its present form would involve the Government in serious difficulty and unwarranted expense. The number of American vessels available for shipment from the Atlantic coast to the Philippines is so small that a rigid requirement that shipments should be made in American vessels only would put the Government entirely at the mercy of a very few individuals, who could charge any price they wished. The only alternative to the possible payment of exorbitant prices for shipments from New York to Manila would be sending the freight by rail to the Pacific coast, and thence by ship to Manila.

Your committee will observe, by examining the Quartermaster-General's report of January 13, that the average cost of transporting all classes of freight from New York to Manila during the calendar year 1903 has been $11.91 per ton of 2,000 pounds, while the average cost of transporting all classes of freight by rail from New York to San Francisco has been $23.70 per ton of 2,000 pounds; that is to say, it now costs two and one-half times as much to get freight from New York to the Pacific coast as it now costs to get it from New York to Manila. Under these circumstances, if we were confined absolutely to American bottoms for this business we would have no way of escaping from the payment of at least three times as much as we now pay for this class of transportation.

I think the same result can be accomplished and this danger avoided by changing the form of the bill so that it will authorize a preference to American shipping, providing the charge made does not exceed the prices bid by the owners of foreign vessels more than a specific percentage.

A bill providing for such a preference in respect of shipments on the Pacific was introduced in the House in the first session of the Fifty-seventh Congress (H. R. 14410). It was favorably reported by the House Committee on Military Affairs (Report No. 2348). It had the warm approval of this Department, but was defeated on the floor of the House upon the avowed ground that it would amount to a kind of a ship subsidy. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol 35, pt. 7, pp. 6887-6891.)

For greater convenience, I take the liberty of inclosing a copy of that bill as indicating the form of the provision which, it seems to me, would best accomplish the desired object of doing the Government business in such a way as to promote American shipping. I should be in favor of increasing the preference to, say, 25 or 30 per cent.

Very respectfully,

ELIHU ROOT, Secretary of War.

Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

Mr. President, if what the Secretary of War states is true as to Government transportion, the Government having access to all the American bottoms, it will be true, then, when you come to the transportation of the ordinary imports from and exports to that country. Do the people of the United States want, does this Senate want, to put upon that trade a burden of that kind? If so, Mr. President, we should do it deliberately. If we want to say that every article that is brought from the Philippine Islands to the United States shall be at the mercy of American shipowners, who, if they are to do the business, may compete with each other, and naturally will fix the price of freight between the two countries, why, then, we should go into it deliberately. We shall do this, if we do it at all, in the face of the opinion of every official whose opinion is worth anything as to the merits of this subject—the opinions of the late Secretary of War, of the present Secretary of War, who was the governor of the Philippine Islands, and of the Commissioner of Navigation, who has also given this subject considerable attention.

What will be accomplished by this bill if it should become a law, Mr. President? I am assuming that nobody will dispute but that the price of freight will be raised and materially raised, because, unless it shall be, this legislation can not help the American shipowner. So, as I say, the rate must be raised.

If a condition exists now in which the shipowners of the United States carry only 3 per cent of the trade, there must be a very radical change which will enable them to carry it all. There are undoubtedly many more than enough ships flying the American flag and entitled to be called ships of the United States to carry this freight, but it will not be carried unless it is done at a paying price.

There has been very little or practically nothing said in this debate as to Senate bill 2259, relating to trade between the United States and the Philippine Islands; and I am somewhat at a loss to know what the purpose of that bill is. But I suppose it will be passed; and then, when it is passed, I assume there will be no controversy, but that all goods carried from the ports of the United States to the Philippine Islands must be carried in American bottoms and at such price as the American shipowners who are willing to do that business shall demand. That it will be a higher price, as I have said before, nobody will deny, because the fact that it will be for their benefit indicates that it will be at a higher price.

We are told that this subsidy—for that is what it is, a monopoly—that this subsidy is in the interest of American shipowners and to encourage the running of American ships. A suggestion was made a day or two ago on the other side of the Chamber that we adopt what was known as President McKinley's proposition for the relief of American shipping. That does not seem to meet with the favor of the party at present in power, but a direct subsidy is to be made.

The testimony taken before the Senate committee on Senate bill 2259 is, I think, very instructive. I am not going into the details of that testimony, but I learn from it that there is a large amount of American shipping now tied up for want of business. Several shipowners so declared before the committee. A statement was made that, in view of what they supposed to be the policy of the party in power—namely, the granting of subsidies to ships—a large number of ships were built, and when they were built there was not any business for them and they were tied up.

It is said now that in justice to these shipowners we ought to say to the other shipowners of the world, "You must keep out of the trade between the United States and the Philippine Islands, and these ships, whose owners were misled by the proposed subsidy scheme, must have an opportunity to gather business, and it must be done in the way of a monopoly."

Mr. President, that set me to thinking somewhat about the ship business. We have been trying for very many years to increase American shipping. We have been told over and over again of the large amount of money we pay every year for foreign ships. I was told the other day by a member of this body that we were paying out $200,000,000 a year to foreign ships to carry freight from the United States to other countries and bring back the things that we buy in other countries, while our own ships were carrying less than 8 per cent of the immense trade involved in our export and import business.

It does not seem to me that what we need just now is more ships. If we have got ships, steamers, and sailing vessels tied up, looking for trade which they can not find, we do not need more ships. We need more freight. That is what we need. If, instead of turning our attention to building more ships, ships that we find we can not run in the present condition of the world's affairs unless we give to our own shipping some special privileges that we deny to others, it seems to me we had better turn our attention to getting more freight. That may be as difficult a thing to do as it is to induce American shipowners to run ships and carry freight in competition with the rest of the world.

I want to call attention for just a moment to the decrease in shipping. In his last report—October 17, 1903—the Commissioner of Navigation tells us that:

American sail vessels registered for foreign trade and the whale fisheries have decreased from 1,094, of 638,709 gross tons, in 1893, to 818, of 361,356 gross tons, in 1903.

I read from page 46 of the Commissioner's last report—

The decline has been uninterrupted and, as was pointed out in last year's report, British and German square-rigged tonnage is also declining rapidly.

Here is a thing to which I desire to call special attention:

All competent nautical authorities agree that training on a square-rigged ship is necessary for the officer of a steamer. Such training is obligatory in our navy. The great German steamship companies within the past few years [illegible] to training schools for their officers [illegible] Congress or private [illegible] for examination for lack of competent officers for American steamships may soon prove a serious handicap to any development of American shipping [illegible]

In the meantime the operation of the coastwise navigation laws [illegible] against sail vessels in the coasting trade [illegible] tonnage. The [illegible] are imposed by State laws from Virginia [illegible] Statutes in the same [illegible] tionality of the Virginia law has been called into question before the State courts.

That, however, is not a matter of much consequence. It is pending in the Supreme Court of the United States.

The trouble with the American shipping is simply this: We can build ships as cheaply as anybody in the world, I think, and just as good. If we can not and we desire to increase the amount of our tonnage, it seems to me the wisest thing we could do would be to say to the American man of means: "If you want a ship and can not build it in the United States cheap enough to compete with the rest of the world, go and buy it wherever you can find it, and when you bring it here and put it under American registry we will let you run it just as if you built it in this country."

The testimony of shipping men before the committee at this session shows that there are ships that can not now find freight. So the question comes to us, Are we to help out those shipowners by giving them a monopoly of the trade? Are we to apply a rule to them that we do not apply to any other business in the country?

Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. TELLER. Yes.

Mr. MALLORY. Does the testimony show why our ships can not procure freights?

Mr. TELLER. Yes.

Mr. MALLORY. What is the reason assigned?

Mr. TELLER. They say it is because of the high rate of wages on our ships.

Mr. MALLORY. In my judgment, the fact that the wages of the masters, the mates, engineers, assistant engineers, and even the seamen on board ship are so much greater on American ships, probably to the extent of nearly 30 per cent, is the principal reason why American ships can not compete with foreign ships in carrying freights.

Mr. TELLER. The testimony all shows that you can not run American ships as cheaply as you can run foreign ships. The reason given by most people, not only in this case, but in various other hearings which have been had here, is that we pay too high a price. I have something here which perhaps might be worth the attention of the Senate for a moment as showing why the American shipowner can not operate his ship as cheaply as a foreigner. However, I do not put my hand on it and I will not stop, for I do not care to go into it now, except to say that it is the consensus of opinion that you can not run an American ship as cheaply as the foreigner operates his. That is the complaint.

That brings us to the question not whether we are going to encourage shipbuilding, but how we are going to secure profitable employment for American ships. I think that is a question of importance to us. If we are to build a great navy, if we are to spend, as we appear now to be spending, practically a hundred million dollars a year for the Navy, building ships every year, increasing our Navy, we must have sailors, and heretofore we have supposed it was necessary to train on the merchant ships of the country sailors for the battle ships. Whether that will always be necessary may depend upon what policy the Government adopts with reference to the education of sailors and officers for its war ships and war vessels.

I am quite sure, Mr. President, that any attempt to give to these ships a monopoly will not increase the number of ships, nor do I believe it will bring to the shipowners a profit such as they expect, for the result will be, in my opinion, that when they raise the price of freight between New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and other cities on the Atlantic coast and the Philippine Islands to such an extent as they will, the freight that now comes here, the sixty-four or sixty-five thousand tons of hemp that come to us, will go to Europe instead of coming here. It will also raise the price of freight from the United States to the Philippine Islands, and thus put the manufacturers and producers of articles in this country which heretofore have been going to those islands at a disadvantage as compared with the producers of similar articles in other sections of the world.

I think this bill ought to be changed in its title and it ought to read "A bill to attempt to destroy the commerce between the United States and the Philippine Islands." It is neither just to us as a nation nor is it just to the Philippine Islands. Take the hemp trade, with all its advantages, as respects the United States, which I admit now it has in the fact that it pays no export duty when coming to the United States, while it does when going to England. The difference in freight will seem be so great as to send it, notwithstanding that advantage, to the European markets, and we will be compelled to do what we have been doing until very recently—buy our hemp for American manufactures in Europe and not in the Philippine Islands.

The bill is neither in the interest of commerce nor in the interest of the people of the United States generally nor in the interest of the people of the Philippine Islands. The trade is so limited between the United States and those islands that it will not afford any considerable relief to American shipowners, but it will enable a combination of some of them to be made which will raise the price to such an extent that in my judgment it will discourage importations from those islands and exportations to those islands.

Mr. President, I hope somebody who is in favor of this subsidy will have the graciousness to tell us why we should especially go into a subsidy in this particular way. I believe that so far we have had only a general statement. I should like to have somebody particularize and tell us what benefit, what advantage, it will be; whether it is simply to be based on the hope that it will give to the shipowner a compensatory freight, or whether it is to encourage the further building of ships, or whether it is to be an advantage given only to those ships, which is to be denied to all ships that do not ply between the particular Philippine Islands ports and the United States. I should like also, if the act of March 8, 1902, is in effect, to know what particular benefit or advantage we are to have from the passage of Senate bill 2259.

Mr. President, I have made a table or two, with some remarks that are simply explanatory, which I desire to add by way of an appendix to what I have said.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to the insertion of the tables in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

APPENDIX.

The voyage from the Philippines to New York or Boston via the Suez Canal is about two months by steam vessel. (P. 90, hearing before the Senate committee.)

By sail via Cape of Good Hope from four to six months.

Our trade with the Philippines is limited to about $18,000,000, and the weight is supposed to be about 80,000 tons. (P. 46, hearing before the committee.)

We imported from the Philippines during the fiscal year 1903 496,000 bales of hemp of the weight of about 63,000 tons. (P. 46.)

The value of the hemp imported into the United States from the Philippines for 1903 was $12,314,312; sugar, $1,395,826; tobacco, copra, and other articles to the amount of $212,921, making a total of $13,866,059, and our exports were less than $4,000,000. (Pp. 22 and 28.)

Our exports were mainly from the Pacific ports, consisting of flour, canned goods, clothing, hardware, etc. (P. 22, hearing before the committee.)

The exports of hemp from the Philippines has increased from $11,398,943 in 1903 to $21,701,575, of which we got $11,338,587. (P. 23.)

The hemp of the Philippines is the outer bark of a species of palm.

The 1,000,000 bales of hemp will make a tonnage of 126,000 tons, of which practically one-half, or 63,000 tons, comes to the United States. A bale weighs 275 pounds.

American shipping appears to be in a bad condition, and it is quite apparent what we need is not more ships, but more freight. Mr. Clyde said: "The past year has been a year of extreme depression in the shipping business." (See pp. 52, 68, and 77, hearing before the committee.)

The ship-subsidy bill that did not become a law appears to have stimulated the building of ships. It appears from the evidence of Mr. Clyde and others that a number of ships were built while that proposition was being considered, with the expectation not of making money by carrying passengers or freight, but by securing the subsidy proposed. (See p. 52; also statement of Mr. Jones on p. 68, hearing before the Senate committee.)

These references are to the hearings before the Senate committee of this session.

In 1901 the imports into the United States from the Philippines were $4,527,071.

In 1902 they were $10,211,303, an increase of $6,474,232, or very nearly double that of the year before.

This increase is made principally of the import of hemp.

In 1901 the imports of hemp were 23,948 tons, of the value of $3,478,581, and in 1902 50,361 tons, of the value of $10,003,954, and in 1903 the value of the imported hemp was $11,338,587, or 64,990 tons.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I believe there is an amendment now pending to the bill; one offered by myself. I should like to have the amendment read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the end of section 1 the following:

And provided further, That this section shall not apply to any particular contract for the transportation of troops or stores therein described, where, after due public advertisement, schedule for the transportation of the articles specified therein, in a vessel of the United States, shall have been received at reasonable rates.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, this amendment contains precisely the principle of the amendment which on Saturday afternoon last was suggested by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to meet the views which were then being expressed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], and it is drawn nearly in the language of the recommendation of the late Secretary of War, Mr. Root. I do not see the Senator from Maine in his seat at this moment, and I should prefer that he be in the Chamber before it is acted upon.

Mr. President, it does not appear from our present reports as to the merchant marine of the United States that it is in quite so desperate a condition as might be inferred from some remarks that have been made concerning this bill. The latest intelligence that I have derived on this subject is in a letter in the New York Herald which was published on Sunday last, and the views expressed in that letter are not without interest in reference to this bill. In that letter it is stated:

American merchant marine shows up somewhat better in a report just published by the Department of Commerce and Labor than would be expected from the arguments of ship-subsidy advocates. Great Britain main tains the lead in numbers and tonnage of both steam and sailing vessels, but the United States ranks second in tonnage of sailing ships and third in tonnage of steamers.

This is an important fact, Mr. President, which it seems to me ought to be noted while we are formulating measures on this subject.

The report—

That is, the report from the Department of Commerce and Labor to which the letter writer refers—says: "How long Great Britain is to maintain her present position is to depend very largely upon the still further development of the foreign trade of the United States. If the average annual increase recorded in recent years is kept up the United States will soon be [illegible] a very large part of the world's total exports and imports. When that time comes the United States will [illegible] have much more than at present rates. If it is to develop as it should, it will have to have its own ships."

Following that statement there are given the figures of the merchant marine of the principal governments for 1903, and I should like to insert this extract, as it is an interesting item on this subject.

The figures of the merchant marine of the principal governments for 1903 are given as follows:

Country.	Sailing vessels, 50 tons and more.		Steamers, 100 tons and more.
	Number.	Tonnage.	Number.	Gross tonnage.
Great Britain	6,839	2,[illegible]	5,929	13,666,972

The other countries are as follows: [illegible] Siam, Venezuela, Egypt, [illegible] Dominican, Liberia, [illegible] Honduras, Persia, Uruguay, Corea, Zanzibar, Morocco, and Servia.

I would also advert to the fact, Mr. President, that the number of Americans who are engaging in sea life shows a constant progression. This is an indication that we have reached a period in our civilization when our younger men and those who are without employment are more and more likely to take to the sea.

On page 28 of the annual report of the Commissioner of Navigation to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, which is contained in House Document No. 14 of the present session of Congress, we are furnished with a table showing the nationality of the men who are shipped on American vessels. This table, which I also desire to have inserted in my remarks, shows that since 1894 the Americans who are thus engaged have grown in number from 22,143 to 59,498.

There are other items here and there in the story of our merchant marine which show that it is by no means a hopeless department of our national industry and commerce. On page 7 of the same report of the Commissioner of Navigation it is said:

The documented tonnage of the United States on June 30, 1902, for the first time in our history exceeded [illegible] gross tons register, comprising [illegible] of 6,685,[illegible] gross tons. These figures do not include 1,[illegible] tons, of 74,000 gross tons, which, of course, are not engaged in trade.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. DANIEL. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. I ask the Senator if he is aware that this increase in tonnage and seamen for the last few years is entirely in the coastwise trade. There has not been laid the keel of a ship to be engaged in the foreign service, outside of the coasting trade, for the last three years. The tonnage is dwindling and the number men employed is dwindling; but in the coasting trade, which we protect and from which we exclude all other people, there is a large, a constant, a gratifying increase.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, no nation can increase in everything and in every distinctive feature of everything at the same time. I am aware of the facts which are stated in the report of the Commissioner of Navigation for the most part, and I have my eye at this time upon what the Commissioner states as to this increase in tonnage. He says:

The entire increase of American shipping during the decade has thus been employed in the improvement of domestic transportation facilities. * * * About one-half of our increase in tonnage—has been on the Great Lakes.

He adds:

Then he adds this, which is not exactly in line with the observation of the Senator from Maine:

Our shipping on the Pacific has increased more rapidly than on the Atlantic in consequence of growing trade with Alaska, Hawaii, and the East. The figures for the Atlantic coast include vessels employed on the Hudson, Delaware, Susquehanna, and other large rivers of that seaboard.

Mr. HALE. That is coastwise trade.

Mr. DANIEL. Now, it is true that some of our trade with the East is coastwise trade in a certain sense. It is true also that our trade with Alaska and Hawaii is counted in the coastwise trade; but the fact appears that American shipping is advancing on these lines; that more and more men in this country are going into the business of the sea, and that the tendencies of our civilization are such that we are approaching that stage in the evolution of this branch of our commerce when we the more and more expect an advance in sea progress on all lines of maritime industry.

There is a comparison on page 9 of the report of the Commissioner of Navigation as to the number of vessels and as to the gross tonnage of vessels in the years 1902 and 1903.

Comparison of 1902 and 1903.

Geographical distribution.	1902.		1903.
	Number.	Gross tonnage.	Number.	Gross tonnage.
Atlantic and Gulf coasts	17,040	2,978,876	17,218	3,149,711
[illegible]	42	6,180	59	7,062
[illegible]	2,492	741,825	2,535	775,859
[illegible] Islands	61	32,388	69	36,390
[illegible]	3,[illegible]	1,[illegible]	3,[illegible]	1,902,[illegible]
[illegible] rivers	1,466	222,124	1,[illegible]	215,095
Total	24,273	5,797,902	24,425	6,087,345

From this comparative table it will be seen that the year 1903 showed an aggregate gain in the number of vessels engaged in sea commerce of 152. It shows, also, that in some sections or departments of that commerce there was a loss in the number of vessels. To indicate: In 1902 there were 3,172 vessels engaged on the northern lakes, while in 1903 there were only 3,110, showing a loss of vessels on the Great Lakes of 62. But on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts there was a gain from 17,040 to 17,218 in vessels, and a gain in gross tonnage of the difference between 2,978,876 and 3,149,711.

The shifting currents of commerce, the wars that occur in the world, the acquisitions, by one country or another, of additional territory, the movements of armies and fleets will, of course, to a certain extent, and in more or less degree, show a constant fluctuation in the commerce that follows them. But the main facts to which I call attention are these: First, that more and more Americans are going into sea service; that there are three times as many shipped in the current period as were shipped ten years ago.

Mr. President, the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] says that the reason of the increase in the new vessels on the Pacific coast is the fact that the builders of those vessels were anticipating a subsidy from Congress. In other words, the proposition to Congress is through this bill to make good the losses in a speculative venture. It would be just as correct to declare that we ought to make good the losses of those who embarked their investments in the collapsed shipping trust of New York as to predicate legislation in Congress upon the alleged or the real anticipations of those who are calculating upon Congressional favor.

This is simply one of the accidents of life. A farmer may pitch his crops, anticipating that there is going to be a war next year and that the price of cereal products and other produce of the farm is going to be very high. Congress is under no obligation to make war next year in order to foot his losses, nor to go out of the regular course of legislation to meet those losses by giving him a benefaction. It is no part, as it seems to me, Mr. President, of the just and appropriate functions of legislation to have the Congress of the United States employed as freight agents of either railroads or of maritime lines.

Supply and demand, the wants of the world and the competitions of the world, must more or less forever enter into those concerns, and the future will be more easily read by those who are projecting their investments toward them and more correctly weighed and measured if Congress lets them take the natural course than by the interjection here and there of propositions or of laws to fix them in a particular way at preferred rates for preferred people.

I will ask the attention of the Senator from Maine now to the amendment that is pending. The debate on Saturday, while it consumed a number of hours in the Senate, was not wholly disadvantageous. It led at least to a modification of opinion on the part of the Senator from Maine, and perhaps, as was indicated, of others, respecting the propositions contained in the second section of the bill, that the President should have the power to suspend this law.

The distinction between giving the President the power to suspend the law and making the law itself operate in order to conform its application to a particular state of facts is a very broad and, it would seem to me, a very visible distinction. If Congress were to enact that the Secretary of War should buy a thousand horses for the purpose of hauling trains across the great plains, or anywhere else, but were to provide that in the event those horses could not be purchased at a reasonable price the goods and wares which were to be consigned to the wagons they were to haul should be given a different direction of freightage, there would be no authority given to anybody to suspend a law. There would be authority given to the Secretary of War to determine whether or not he could purchase certain goods at a reasonable rate. If he could not purchase them at that rate, the law would go on and take its effect, just as Congress provided, and if they could be purchased at a reasonable rate, so, also, the law would still apply.

So it is no invasion of the rights and exclusive privilege of Congress in the field of legislation to provide that an executive officer shall exercise his discretion as to the reasonableness of a certain line of conduct or as to the reasonableness of a certain price, and predicate the operation of the law upon the contingencies of his decision.

Therefore I ask the attention of the Senator from Maine to this amendment, the principle of which I think he consented to on Saturday afternoon. If the bill is amended as he then suggested, there will be no use for this amendment. If he accepts this amendment, the subsequent suggestion as to the reasonableness of price becomes inapplicable. It is a mere question as to which is perhaps the better phrase to meet the object in view.

I care nothing about the amendment which I have offered if the principle is adopted anywhere else in the bill, and if it has been adopted I will withdraw the amendment; if not, I will ask for a vote upon it. In this respect I ask the attention and the information of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. I think as a result of the suggestions and the colloquies between Senators on Saturday we have not only a better bill, but a good bill. I have no pride in the other bill, which the Senator refers to, which was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs. The subject-matter more distinctly, perhaps, belongs to the Committee on Commerce, because, while its provisions are to be carried out by the War and Navy Departments, the subject-matter is transportation—commerce—a matter in the purview of the Committee on Commerce instead of the Committee on Naval Affairs or the Committee on Military Affairs.

As I think the same features are found in the bill as we perfected it Saturday, I should prefer to pass this bill rather than to take the bill which I reported. I think it was a wise suggestion, as I said at the time. It was a suggestion that had struck the lawyers upon both sides. It does not transfer the legislative power to the President, but leaves it for him to decide as to certain matters of fact upon which the law shall be invoked. Of course, practically that discretion will be conveyed to the heads of the two Departments that conduct this transportation, but it will be tantamount to an executive act by the President.

Therefore I say to the Senator, appreciating his suggestion that he will prefer to take up a bill, that on the whole, considering that this bill came from the Committee on Commerce, I prefer its passage rather than to substitute my own bill for it.

Mr. DANIEL. The copy of the bill which I have before me contains only the amendments that have been adopted, but I do not perceive any phrase that seems to embody the amendment to which the Senator spoke on Saturday afternoon.

Mr. HALE. Perhaps the Senator has not the last print. There are two copies.

Mr. DANIEL. I should like to have the last print of the bill sent to me.

Mr. HALE. Here is one, Mr. President.

Mr. DANIEL. I think I have the last print. I remember very distinctly the Senator from Maine on Saturday afternoon assented to the proposition that the reasonableness of the freight price should be fixed.

Mr. HALE. We struck out after "Navy," in line 7, "but this section shall not be construed to prohibit the transportation of such articles by any vessel owned by any Department of the Government"——

Mr. DANIEL. Oh, yes.

Mr. HALE. And inserted:

Unless the President shall find that the rates of freight charges by said vessels are excessive and unreasonable.

Then the question was raised, if he did find that what course he would pursue in conducting the business, and upon a suggestion by a Senator upon the other side, I added the words, "in which case contract shall be made under existing law."

That was more a matter of course; it would follow as a matter of principle; but it was done out of a great measure of precaution, so that the President should not find himself tied up and not able to make any contracts. The Senator will recollect (I think he was here at that time) there was considerable discussion, and what might more properly be called "colloquy," between Senators.

Mr. DANIEL. I perceive those words in the last print.

Mr. HALE. So I think everything the Senator wants is covered.

Mr. DANIEL. Though I shall make no aggressive point about it, at least I would have preferred that the subject of the reasonableness of charges had been put in the opposite light from which it was. It requires here that "the President shall find that the rates of freight charges by said vessels are excessive and unreasonable, in which case contracts shall be made under existing law." I would have preferred that the other face of the question should have been turned and that it should have simply been provided that the President should so send freight, provided the charges were reasonable, leaving the burden upon those who make the charges to show their reasonableness. But I shall make no further question about it, as I think the spirit of fair concession has justly prevailed, at which I am, of course, gratified.

Mr. HALE. I am obliged to the Senator. I hope we may have a vote now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further amendments to be offered in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. CARMACK. Is there a pending amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no pending amendment.

Mr. CARMACK. What became of the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]?

Mr. HALE. It was withdrawn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was withdrawn.

Mr. CARMACK. I offer an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 1 add the following:

And provided, That none but citizens of the United States are employed on such vessels.

Mr. HALE. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore put the question and declared that by the sound the "noes" had it.

Mr. HALE. I call for a division. Does the Senator from Tennessee desire to discuss the amendment?

Mr. CARMACK. No; I do not want to discuss the amendment; neither do I want to disclose the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HALE. Then we shall have to have the yeas and nays.

Mr. CARMACK. I say I do not want to disclose the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HALE. There is a quorum in the building undoubtedly. Senators are at their lunch now.

Mr. CARMACK. But I want to have the amendment carried.

Mr. HALE. Let the Chair put the vote again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will again put the question. The question is on agreeing to the motion to lay the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee on the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate refuses to lay on the table the proposed amendment.

Mr. HALE. Now the question comes up on the amendment.

Mr. DANIEL. I wish to ask the Senator from Maine a legal question. It has been suggested to me that there may be some ambiguity about the bill in the fourth line, page 2, in the phrase "under existing law."

Mr. HALE. I had thought of that.

Mr. DANIEL. I merely make the suggestion that it shall read:

In which case contracts shall be made with vessels of any other country according to existing law.

Mr. HALE. I would not want to insert that. If there is any doubt about the effect of the words "under existing law," that may be suggested, but I will say to the Senator from Virginia generally that provisions of this kind, and the construction is that "under existing law" means the law as it exists before the passage of the bill.

Mr. DANIEL. That is what I assumed to be meant.

Mr. HALE. Then, Mr. President, as suggested by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], if we strike out section 4 that would save all possible question. So it would be under existing law, which does, without our asserting it in form, provide that the contract shall be made on bids without any restriction.

Mr. DANIEL. What is the objection to inserting "vessels of any other country?" That makes it plain what Congress intends to do.

Mr. HALE. I do not desire to put that in the bill.

Mr. BERRY. "The law as it now exists."

Mr. HALE. "The law as it now exists" does include that.

Mr. DANIEL. I understand it does, and that is the reason why I thought we might as well express what the law designed to do.

Mr. BERRY. If the Senator will permit me, I suggest that the word be transposed and that we say "as the law now exists."

Mr. HALE. "Made under the law as it now exists."

Mr. BERRY. "As it now exists." That would cover everything.

Mr. HALE. There is no objection to that. "To be made under the law as it now exists."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine modifies his amendment. The modification will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 4, after the word "under," strike out "existing law" and insert "the law as it now exists."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON. I would ask the Senator from Maine a question. I call the attention of the Senator from Maine to the third line of the first section, and ask him whether, after the words "or belonging," the words "or chartered by" should not be inserted, so that it will read:

That vessels of the United States or belonging to or chartered by the United States.

Mr. HALE. That would precisely defeat the object of the bill, because it would authorize them, impliedly at least, to charter vessels of any kind. Now, we do not want to do that. We want this transportation to be either in Government vessels which the Department owns or in American vessels engaged in trade. We do not want the Department to have the discretion. You may say "vessels of the United States chartered or belonging to the United States." There is no objection to that, but we do not want to leave open the opportunity for the Department to charter foreign vessels. Still, practically, I will say to the Senator, and I see what he has in his mind——

Mr. BAILEY. I suggest to the Senator from Maine that the term "vessels of the United States" has a technical meaning.

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. BACON. It does not mean vessels owned by the United States.

Mr. HALE. It does not.

Mr. BAILEY. It is found under the navigation laws, and means vessels of American registry.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Iowa brought that point out the other day very clearly.

Mr. BACON. I beg pardon; I did not know that.

Mr. HALE. That is the reason why I suggested "or belonging to the United States." So I think it is all covered.

Mr. PATTERSON. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Maine that not infrequently the United States charters vessels for the transportation of troops. I discovered in the letter from the Secretary of War that much of the supplies for the army in the Philippines were carried there by chartered vessels, but the greater bulk were carried under what they called "contracts," that is carried by the ordinary form of contracts on ordinary merchant vessels. The Government frequently charters vessels for the transportation of troops. It might charter them for the transportation of horses and things of that kind. It seems to me that in some such case where the vessel is chartered by the United States for army purposes, upon that vessel the Government might transport supplies for the Army or the Navy. That is the matter I have in mind.

Mr. HALE. There is no special objection to that. Still, I think we have covered practically all the case. The charter of vessels has disappeared in the Departments, and all American ships that are used are those that are owned by the Government. The ships, aside from what is already covered by this bill, have to be chartered.

That vessels of the United States, or belonging to the United States, and no others, shall be employed in the transportation by sea of coal, provisions, forage, or supplies of any description.

That is all done, I will say to the Senator, by the Department in chartering. The transportation takes the form of a charter, and is covered entirely by the two propositions, one of which was suggested by the Senator from Iowa the other day, as the vessels of the United States have a technical meaning, those that are registered by us. American vessels. All the rest is covered. It has got to be done by chartering.

Mr. PATTERSON. Those are registered vessels in foreign trade, but I have in mind an emergency which might arise for the transportation of troops, and the vessels owned by the United States might not be sufficient to meet the requirement. Now, then, it might be quite desirable to transport supplies in connection with troops upon chartered vessels which would not be owned by the United States. Under the bill as it now stands it would be unlawful to place supplies for the Army on such a vessel.

Mr. HALE. It would if it was a foreign vessel, but if it is——

Mr. PATTERSON. I beg pardon. Suppose an emergency requires the Government to charter foreign vessels for the removal of troops, why should not the Government in a case of that kind be permitted to carry on such vessels supplies for the Army?

Mr. HALE. That is all covered by the proviso. If in an emergency the President finds there are not enough vessels bid at a reasonable rate for the carrying of all the freight he wants, then he acts under the provisions of existing law. If he finds enough to do the business at reasonable rates, then he must take American ships. It was substituted, I will say to the Senator, at the suggestion of Senators on his side of the Chamber for the other provision, that the President might in an emergency hold up this bill. This provision is intended to cover and does cover all that.

Mr. PATTERSON. Let me call the attention of the Senator to the provision in the second section of the bill as it was reported:

That the President of the United States may from time to time suspend, in whole or in part, section 1 of this act whenever, in the interests of the national defense or for the protection of the interests of the Government, such suspension may seem to him desirable.

I could understand if section 2 remained in the act that then, in the event of an emergency, the Government might carry supplies for the Army upon chartered vessels; but having stricken out section 2, I suggest, in the best of faith, it would be impossible for the Government to do that, and that can be remedied by the reinstatement of section 2. Why should not section 2, as reported from the committee, continue to be a part of the bill?

Mr. HALE. Senators objected to that because it was transferring the lawmaking power to the President, and we substituted this provision.

Mr. PATTERSON. I recall that ground. Yet the section might be modified so as to evade that objection.

Mr. HALE. I am entirely certain that the point of any practical difficulty arising is covered by this proviso. If the President finds for any reason that he can not get the transportation needed at reasonable prices in American vessels, then he falls back upon existing law and has to charter foreign vessels.

Mr. PATTERSON. I can only say that under the language of the act as it now is, "that vessels of the United States, or belonging to the United States, and no others, shall be employed" for this specific purpose, the only exception being in the event the charges are found to be unreasonable or excessive, if the Government observed the law it could not carry supplies for the Army upon vessels that it had chartered for any purpose whatsoever. It might ignore the law under the plea of public necessity, but it would be compelled to do it under the wording of the law as it stands now.

Mr. HALE. I think the wording of the law covers that entirely.

Mr. PATTERSON. That is a difference of opinion. I will not offer an amendment, because I realize that if it is objected to by the Senator it will be voted down.

Mr. HALE. What is the pending question, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK].

Mr. HALE. Let us have a vote directly upon that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "ayes" have it.

Mr. HALE. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON (when Mr. DOLLIVER's name was called). I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. DOLLIVER] is necessarily absent. I think he is paired, with whom I do not know.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired on this bill and all amendments with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. QUARLES (when his name was called). I should like to inquire whether the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] is recorded?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. QUARLES. I have a general pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SCOTT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO]. I will transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], and vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. QUARLES. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CLAPP. I have a general pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. I observe that he is absent. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. CLARK]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. BURTON], and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CARMACK. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. I transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr. BATE], and vote "yea."

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MILLARD]. I desire to withdraw my vote.

Mr. KEARNS (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. GIBSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], and will let my vote stand.

Mr. CLAPP. I am paired with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. If a transfer can be arranged, I will vote. I have not kept track of pairs so to know whether one can be arranged or not.

Mr. HALE. The Senator can arrange a transfer with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE]. That would allow both Senators to vote.

Mr. CLAPP. I will transfer my pair to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], and vote "nay."

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. May I ask what the Senator from Maine suggested?

Mr. HALE. A transfer of pairs; but a transfer has already been arranged by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. CULBERSON] is unavoidably detained from the Senate, and that if he were here he would vote "yea." He is paired on this vote with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE].

Mr. QUARLES. I wish to make a similar announcement in regard to my colleague [Mr. SPOONER], who is detained by illness.

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 38, as follows:

YEAS—19.

Bacon,	Cockrell,	McCreary,	Overman,
Bailey,	Daniel,	McLaurin,	Patterson,
Berry,	Dubois,	Mallory,	Pettus,
Carmack,	Foster, La.	Martin,	Tener.
Clay,	Latimer,	Newlands,

NAYS—38.

Aldrich,	Dietrich,	Hale,	Mitchell,
Alger,	Dryden,	Heyburn,	Perkins,
Allison,	Elkins,	Hoar,	Platt, N. Y.
Allison,	Frazier,	Hopkins,	Proctor,
Ashley,	Frazier, Wash.	Kean,	Quarles,
Ball,	Frye,	Kearns,	Scott,
Beveridge,	Fulton,	Kittredge,	Stewart,
Burnham,	Gallinger,	Lodge,	Wetmore.
Clapp,	Gamble,	Long,
Cullom,		McCumber,

NOT VOTING—32.

Bard,	Culberson,	McComas,	Quay,
Bate,	Dolliver,	McEnery,	Simmons,
Blackburn,	Dillingham,	Millard,	Smoot,

Burton,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Stone,
Clark, Mont.	Hansbrough,	Nelson,	Taliaferro,
Clark, Wyo.	Hawley,	Penrose,	Tillman,
Clarke, Ark.		Platt, Conn.	Warren.

So Mr. CARMACK's amendment was rejected.

Mr. CARMACK. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Tennessee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 1 it is proposed to add:

And provided, That not less than 75 per cent of the crew of such vessels are citizens of the United States.

Mr. HALE. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine to lay the amendment on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CARMACK. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of section 1 the following:

And provided, That such freight charges do not exceed by 50 per cent the lowest bid offered for transporting such freight in foreign vessels.

Mr. HALE. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the end of section 1 the following:

And provided, That such freight charges do not exceed by 100 per cent the lowest bid offered for transporting such freight in American vessels.

Mr. HALE. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. CARMACK. I ask the yeas and nays on that motion, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BEVERIDGE (when his name was called). Under the pair and transfer announced on the former vote, which will hold for this and all subsequent votes on the pending bill, I vote "yea."

Mr. CLAPP (when his name was called). I transfer the pair which I have with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], who is absent to-day. I therefore withhold my vote at this time, and shall do so on other questions on this bill as they arise.

Mr. McCOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], who is absent, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. I do not see him in the Chamber, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut (when his name was called). Mr. President, I understand—having just come into the Chamber—that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] has transferred his pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] to me. I will let that arrangement stand, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CLAPP. I will withdraw my vote if the Senator desires to vote.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I am not particular about the matter. I will say to the Senator.

Mr. CLAPP. I withdraw my vote, Mr. President.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Then, I vote "yea."

Mr. QUARLES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SCOTT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO]. I will transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], and vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HOAR. I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS], and therefore withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CARMACK. My colleague [Mr. BATE] is unavoidably absent. If he were present, he would vote "nay" on this motion. I have a general pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], which I will transfer to my colleague. I vote "nay."

Mr. McLAURIN. The junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] requested me to say that he has a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. If the Senator from Alabama were present, he would vote "nay."

My colleague [Mr. MONEY] is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 15, as follows:

YEAS—36.

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Gamble,	Mitchell,
Alger,	Dietrich,	Hale,	Nelson,
Allee,	Dryden,	Hansbrough,	Penrose,
Allison,	Fairbanks,	Heyburn,	Perkins,
Ankeny,	Foraker,	Hopkins,	Platt, Conn.
Ball,	Foster, Wash.	Kittredge,	Platt, N. Y.
Beveridge,	Frye,	Lodge,	Scott,
Burnham,	Fulton,	McComas,	Stewart,
Burrows,	Gallinger,	McCumber,	Wetmore.

NAYS—15.

Bacon,	Clay,	Latimer,	Newlands,
Bailey,	Daniel,	McEnery,	Overman,
Berry,	Dubois,	McLaurin,	Teller.
Carmack,	Foster, La.	Money,

NOT VOTING—38.

Bard,	Dietrich,	Nelson,	Quay,
Bate,	Dillingham,	Newlands,	Scott,
Blackburn,	Dolliver,	Patterson,	Simmons,
Burton,	Foraker,	Pettus,	Spooner,
Clapp,	Frye,	Platt, Conn.	Stewart,
Clark, Mont.	Gamble,	Platt, N. Y.	Taliaferro,
Clark, Wyo.	Hansbrough,	Proctor,	Tillman,
Clarke, Ark.	Heyburn,	Quarles,	Warren.
Culberson,	Hopkins,	Scott,
Cullom,	Kittredge,	Stewart,

So Mr. CARMACK's amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to section 1 the following:

And provided also, That in all cases it shall be ascertained at what cost [illegible] War and Navy, respectively, and by him transmitted to Congress.

Mr. HALE. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask the Senator from Maine to withdraw his motion for a moment, in order that I may explain this amendment.

Mr. HALE. I withhold the motion for that purpose.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I think if the Senator from Maine will read the amendment he will accept it.

Mr. HALE. I have just heard it read. That is the reason I do not accept it. [Laughter.]

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I have to say that this amendment simply provides that in all these cases the cost at which this transportation can be secured from foreign vessels shall be ascertained, and if the service is given to American vessels at a cost exceeding that for which the service is offered by foreign vessels, the fact shall be reported by the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of War, as the case may be, to the President, and by him transmitted to Congress, together with a statement of the circumstances and conditions, the differences in the charges, and the reason for the preference.

It seems to me that this is simply giving that publicity to transactions of this kind which the public interest requires. These are days in which the hand of publicity is being thrown upon all transactions involving monopoly, combination, consolidation, and preferences. The purpose of this bill is to give a preference to American ships, and in that way build up the American merchant marine.

I am sure we all sympathize with the purpose of this bill in so far as it tends to build up the American merchant marine, though we may differ as to the methods that ought to be employed, but it does seem to me that whenever a bill is passed which provides for a particular method, either of bounty or of subsidy or of preference, every fact should be plain to the vision of the people of the United States, that if a preference is given the amount of the preference should be known, should be reported to the Secretary of the Navy, and to the Secretary of War, and by the Secretary of the Navy or by the Secretary of War, as the case may be, reported to the President, and by him transmitted to Congress, so that we may know, as a mathematical proposition, just how great the difference is between the charges imposed by American vessels and those imposed by foreign vessels, and so that we may know mathematically what the exact cost of this bounty or this preference is.

It seems to me the Senator from Maine ought not to object to information; ought not to object to publicity. There is no reason why these transactions should be done in the dark. The President, in his message to Congress in relation to trusts and combinations, said that publicity was desirable. I am sure the Senator from Maine does not wish anything that is secret or dishonest to be transacted; and if every one of these transactions is honest there is no reason why it should not be spread before Congress for its information as a guide to legislation upon this subject. That seems to me to be a very reasonable request.

You propose to pay these American vessels a higher price than you pay foreign vessels; you propose to give them that preference for the purpose of building up an American marine; and there is every reason why we should know to a mathematical certainty the exact cost of that preference.

Mr. HALE. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on that motion.

Mr. TELLER. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLAPP (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], and withhold my vote.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MILLARD]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HOAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS]. If he were present, I should vote "yea." I make this announcement for all the rest of the votes on this bill.

Mr. McCOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. As he is not present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. McLAURIN (when Mr. MONEY's name was called). My colleague [Mr. MONEY] is paired with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. QUARLES (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], and withhold my vote.

Mr. MALLORY (when Mr. TALIAFERRO's name was called). My colleague is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT].

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 14, as follows:

YEAS—35.

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Gamble,	McCumber,
Alger,	Dietrich,	Hale,	Mitchell,
Allee,	Dryden,	Hansbrough,	Nelson,

So Mr. NEWLANDS's amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. CARMACK. I wish to ask when it will be in order to amend the title of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. After the bill has been passed.

Mr. CARMACK. I wish to suggest an amendment to the title of the bill; that is, to add——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not in order until after the bill has passed.

Mr. CARMACK. I know. I was merely making the suggestion to the Senator from Maine. I shall move to add "and to encourage the growth of American shipping."

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator will offer it.

Mr. CARMACK. I suggest the amendment in good faith, because I think for certain considerations it is important to the purposes of the bill. I will state my reasons for that a little later.

Mr. President, this bill, it seems to me, simply opens the door of the Treasury to certain governmental favorites and invites them to help themselves to the public money, with no practical limitation on the amount of their taking except the size of their hands and the capacity of their wallets. They are permitted to take whatever they are able to carry off. That is about the meaning of the bill, as I understand it. It is in plain words simply a sort of legislative jimmy by which a lot of burglarious shipowners are trying to break into the Treasury of the United States.

At this time, when we are confronted with a deficit in the revenue, when we are compelled to stint the appropriations of the Government for the most important purposes, when we have to do without a river and harbor bill to improve the commerce of our own country, because of the vast sums of money we are squandering abroad, it is proposed to put this additional burden upon the Treasury simply to help a few New England shipowners.

The cost of transportation is already a very serious item in our military and naval appropriation bills, and it will be very greatly increased by the passage of this bill. I read the other day from a report of the Bureau of Equipment a statement to the effect that in the matter of transporting coal on our own coast American vessels have always taken advantage of the necessities of the Government and charged unreasonable and excessive and extortionate prices. The advocates of this bill practically admit that its object is to give an opportunity to American shipowners to charge extortionate prices by refusing to put any limitation whatever upon the charges they are allowed to make.

The Secretary of War suggested first that they be allowed an increase of 25 or 30 per cent over the charges made by foreign vessels for the same service. That was rejected with scorn by the advocates of this same bill, and then 50 per cent or even 100 per cent was proposed as better than the pending bill. They refused that. They demanded an opportunity to charge two or three hundred per cent, or whatever the necessities of the Government may compel it to pay.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] offered an amendment the other day which he seemed to think would cure all the evils that we have criticised in this measure. I do not think it will have any effect whatever. The Senator's amendment provides that no greater charge shall be made for transporting army and navy supplies than is made for transporting like articles for private persons. I should like to know, for instance, how that would affect transportation charges between this country and the Philippine Islands. Practically all our commerce with the Philippine Islands is carried in foreign bottoms. No coal or fodder or other articles named in this bill are transported in American vessels for private consumption, and if that condition should continue there would be no basis of comparison by which the charges could be regulated under the bill, and no check whatever is provided in that amendment. It would simply be a dead letter.

Now, I know that under a law which is to go into effect on the 1st of July, unless amended, it is proposed to give American vessels a monopoly of all the carrying trade between the United States and the Philippines, and it is supposed that it will bring a number of them into business. But if it does, it will do so only under such conditions as will enable them to have a monopoly of the business and to charge two or three times what the service could otherwise be obtained for.

These two measures will create two classes of beneficiaries, who are invited to help themselves ad libitum from the public Treasury, and the Senator from North Dakota has devised the ingenious scheme of limiting the rapacity of one class by providing that it shall not exceed the rapacity of the other.

I know the Senator from Maine has offered an amendment to the effect that the President shall employ only American vessels in transporting these supplies, unless he finds the charges to be excessive or unreasonable, in which case he is to be allowed to suspend the operation of the law. I wish in the first place to state an objection that goes to the principle of this amendment. I know that in its present shape it seems to come within the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Clark v. Field, but that does not, in my opinion, relieve it of the objection that it is a plain delegation of legislative power.

With all due respect to all concerned, I do not see how the exercise by the President of his individual judgment and the forming by him of an opinion upon a state of facts, passing an opinion upon the importance of those facts and weighing the significance of the facts in a case where there is room for an almost infinite diversity of opinion, can be called the finding or ascertaining of a fact. And this, it seems to me, is especially true in a case where the fact to be found is not a substantive and independent fact, but is to be regarded as a fact or not a fact according as in the President's opinion it will tend to promote or to defeat a certain policy of the Government. To ascertain a fact is one thing, and to weigh the importance of that fact and to determine whether it is sufficiently important to justify the abrogation of a law is another thing. That, Mr. President, in my opinion, is not the ascertaining of a fact.

Now, this amendment provides that the President may suspend this law if he finds the charges to be unreasonable. How is he to determine whether or not the charges are unreasonable? What is to be the principle that is to guide his action? From the standpoint of a business man—and that must be the standpoint of the Government, unless other considerations control—any charge would be unreasonable if the same service could be had for a less charge. But we know that no such test can be applied in this case. The President is expected to pay more for the carriage of goods in American vessels than he would be required to pay for their carriage in foreign vessels. This bill is intended to promote and encourage the growth of the American merchant marine, and the President must execute the law with that purpose in view.

Now, I say, how is he going to determine whether a charge is reasonable or unreasonable? If an advance of 100 per cent does not sufficiently encourage the growth of the American merchant marine, may he go to 200 per cent? How will he determine that question? In the very nature of things an opinion as to the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the object to be accomplished by this law and his opinion as to the effectiveness of the method adopted to accomplish that object, and upon his opinion as to whether or not the benefits to be derived would justify so great a charge upon the public Treasury.

I say all these considerations must enter into the question when the President comes to form an opinion as to the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the charge, and all of these are considerations which should be addressed to the legislative and not to the executive department of the Government. So, it seems to me, it is a plain delegation of legislative power.

Again, Mr. President, I do not think it will be very effective. The President is known, the executive department of the Government is known, to be in favor of the subsidy policy, and he will feel bound in good faith to carry out the purposes of this law. And where he knows by the action of Congress that 100 per cent advance is not regarded as an unreasonable charge, he will be very slow under any circumstances to lay himself open to the charge of having defeated the purpose of this law by refusing to employ American vessels on account of the unreasonableness or the excessiveness of the charges made by them. So I do not think the amendment will accomplish anything whatever.

The only thing that could effectively limit the charges to be made by these vessels, which will have a monopoly of the carrying trade, is to put the limitation in plain letters and figures in the body of the bill. Unless you do that there will be practically no limitation, and the authors of the bill refuse to admit any such amendment. They mean that there shall be no limitation on the rapacity of these shipowners and upon their exorbitant charges.

Mr. President, I have offered some amendments here to another bill that is a complement to this, on which I had intended to make some remarks, but I think I will not do so at this time.

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Maine, if I may have his attention for a moment, if in his judgment this measure as it now stands requires that proposals for the transportation of supplies, etc., referred to in the measure are to be submitted in competitive bidding?

Mr. CARMACK. You mean as between American shipowners?

Mr. MALLORY. As between American shipowners.

It does not strike me that that interpretation can properly be placed upon the bill in the shape in which it is, although there is a provision as an amendment which was adopted by the Senate to the effect that no greater charges shall be made by such vessels for transportation for the use of the Army and Navy than is made by such vessels for the transportation of like goods for private parties.

If the bill does not require that the two Departments shall advertise for bids from the owners of American vessels, it strikes me that it would be proper if that were provided for. I have an amendment to that effect, which I will send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). The Senator from Florida offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "Navy," in line 7, section 1, it is proposed to insert the following:

Said employment to be given to the lowest bidder after an advertisement for bids for a period of not less than five days.

Mr. MALLORY. I will state that that is the present law so far as concerns transportation by vessels, foreign or domestic. I do not think the bill in its present shape can be construed to mean that there should be an advertisement for bids for five days. I make it obligatory by the amendment that there shall be.

Mr. HALE. The bill does not interfere in the least with the five or six provisions of the Revised Statutes that require bidding. That has to be done and will be done anyway. This bill merely provides the kind of vessels that shall do this transportation. But the general law as found in the Revised Statutes as to contracts of Departments is not in the slightest degree interfered with by this bill, and it was not intended to be.

Mr. MALLORY. Section 3718 of the Revised Statutes has reference to this subject, and is in the following language:

All provisions, clothing, hemp, and other materials of every name and nature for the use of the Navy and the transportation thereof, when the time will permit, shall be furnished by contract by the lowest bidder, etc.

"When the time will permit." And that is confined exclusively to the Navy. I do not know that there is any provision in the Revised Statutes covering this question, so far as it applies to the Army, and if there is not—and I have not been able to find it—the transportation of supplies for the Army would not necessarily come under the provisions of section 3718, for it is confined exclusively to the Navy. I have not heard any law cited here which would require transportation of such supplies for the Army to be given out after public bids.

Mr. HALE. The law covers that.

Mr. McCOMAS. If the Senator from Maine will permit me, from the Revised Statutes it appears that the army appropriation act of July 5, 1884, provides:

All transportation of stores by private parties for the Army shall be done by contract, after due legal advertisement, except in cases of emergency, which must be at once reported to the Secretary of War for his approval. (Sup. Rev. Stat., vol. 1, p. 456.)

Mr. MALLORY. That is the act of 1884?

Mr. McCOMAS. Yes; the act of 1884.

Mr. MALLORY. Conceding that is so, then comes the other question—does a general law apply in a case of this character? I heard the Senator from Iowa the other day say he thought it did, but I do not think we should leave it to possible construction.

Mr. McCOMAS. Is it not manifest that it applies to all goods "purchased pursuant to law for the use of the Army or Navy," the only purpose being to name the class of vessels that are to carry the supplies purchased pursuant to law—pursuant to section 3718 in respect to the Navy and under the provision I have just read in respect to the Army, or such others as there may be relating to bids for supplies for the Army or the Navy, or both? I think that is plain; I submit to the Senator from Florida—"purchased pursuant to law."

Mr. MALLORY. I do not think the fact that they are purchased pursuant to law would necessarily make this particular law subordinate to the general law. This is clearly designed for one specific purpose; that is, to place transportation of these supplies, both for the Army and the Navy, in American vessels; and while I am inclined to think that the weight of reasoning would be in favor of the view which the Senator from Maryland takes, at the same time I do not think it is conclusive. If it is the purpose of those who favor the bill to have it so that it shall unquestionably be submitted to advertisement, I can not see any harm in making it perfectly clear by such an amendment as I have proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY].

Mr. HALE. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, the Secretary of War, in his letter to the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, objected to the form of this bill and insisted that proper legislation would put it in the form of a preference to American shipping to the extent of 25 or 30 per cent.

On the 27th of February I offered an amendment to the bill along this line, reducing it to 25 per cent. I now move to amend by striking out all after the enacting clause in section 1 and inserting the following:

That in the transportation by sea of coal, provisions, fodder, or supplies of any description, purchased pursuant to law, for the use of the Army or Navy, vessels of the United States shall be preferred, provided the charges made do not exceed the prices fixed by the owners of foreign vessels more than 10 per cent; but this section shall not be construed to preclude the transportation of such articles in any vessel owned by the United States.

This amendment, Mr. President, simply puts the other suggestion of the Secretary of War in the form of law; that is to say, instead of 25 per cent, I move to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause in section 1 and inserting "30 per cent" in lieu of the amendment I have heretofore offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas offers an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I have been out of the Senate for an hour or so, and I am just informed by the Senator from Florida that an amendment proposing 50 per cent reduction has been voted down.

Mr. BERRY. A hundred per cent has been voted down.

Mr. CULBERSON. I therefore withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. HALE. Let us have a vote, Mr. President.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. HALE. I move to strike out section 4. I thought it had been done. It is section 2 in the last print.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine offers an amendment which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out section 4, in the following words:

That all acts and parts of acts in so far as inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. BERRY. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to know what amendments, if any, have been made to the bill to-day.

Mr. HALE. None, except that section 3 has been stricken out.

Mr. TELLER. I wanted to ask to have the bill read as amended; but if that is the only amendment which has been made, I do not care to have it done.

Mr. HALE. That is all. I thought it already had been done.

Mr. PATTERSON. Section 3 will now be section 2?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. CARMACK. None of the amendments I offered were adopted?

Mr. HALE. None.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Colorado that a slight amendment was made, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 4, the words "existing law" were stricken out and the words "the law as it now exists" were inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BERRY (when Mr. BLACKBURN's name was called). I desire to state that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS]. If the Senator from Kentucky were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. CARMACK (when his name was called). I again announce the transfer of my pair with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] to my colleague [Mr. BATE], who, if present, would vote "nay." I vote "nay."

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas (when his name was called). If the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MILLARD] were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CULBERSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES]. He is not in the Chamber, and I withhold my vote. If he were present, I would vote "nay."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (when Mr. FRYE's name was called). The junior Senator from Maine announces on this final vote a pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. McCOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. The Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], so that the Senator from Florida and myself will be allowed to vote. Upon this question the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] would vote "nay." I vote "yea."

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). As has just been stated by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS], he is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. Both these Senators are absent. The Senator from Maryland and I transfer our pairs to them, respectively. I vote "nay."

Mr. McLAURIN (when Mr. MONEY's name was called). My colleague [Mr. MONEY] is unavoidably absent from the Chamber. He is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Under the transfer of pairs heretofore announced, I vote "yea."

Mr. ALLISON (after having voted in the affirmative). I understand that the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] has not voted. I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 17, as follows:

YEAS—35.

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Heyburn,	Nelson,
Allison,	Dietrich,	Hopkins,	Penrose,
Ankeny,	Dillingham,	Kean,	Perkins,
Bail,	Fairbanks,	Kittredge,	Platt, Conn.
Beveridge,	Foraker,	Lodge,	Platt, N. Y.
Burnham,	Foster, Wash.	Long,	Smoot,
Burrows,	Frazier,	McComas,	Stewart,
Clapp,	Gamble,	McCumber,	Wetmore.
	Hale,	Mitchell,

NAYS—17.

Bacon,	Daniel,	Mallory,	Simmons,
Bailey,	Foster, La.	Martin,	Teller.
Berry,	Latimer,	Newlands,
Carmack,	McCreary,	Overman,
Clay,	McLaurin,	Patterson,

NOT VOTING—37.

Allison,	Depew,	Hawley,	Quay,
Bard,	Dillingham,	Hoar,	Scott,
Bate,	Dolliver,	Kearns,	Spooner,
Blackburn,	Dryden,	McEnery,	Stone,
Burton,	Dubois,	Millard,	Tallaferro,
Clark, Mont.	Frye,	Money,	Tillman,
Clark, Wyo.	Gallinger,	Morgan,	Warren.
Clarke, Ark.	Gibson,	Petus,
Cockrell,	Gorman,	Proctor,
Culberson,	Hansbrough,	Quarles,

So the bill was passed.

Mr. CARMACK. I move to amend the title of the bill by adding at the end the words "and to encourage the growth of American shipping."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to amend the title.

The amendment was rejected.

SHIPPING BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2259) to regulate shipping in trade between ports of the United States and ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, between ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. CARMACK. What is the motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is to proceed to the consideration of the Philippines bill. [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and the motion is agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not want to make any objection to anything that has passed, but it was absolutely impossible for any Senator in this part of the Chamber to know what was going on. I believe the Senator from Massachusetts has called up a bill and that it is before the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. I moved to take up Senate bill 2259, and the Chair declared the motion carried.

Mr. TELLER. I rather think we ought to have order enough in the Senate so that Senators who are trying to know what is going on may know what is going on, and that can not be done in the present condition of the Senate. I do not want to interfere with the bill. I should not have objected to its being taken up if I had heard the motion, but I should like to know what is going on.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to yield to me to call up an unobjected and very brief bill that is on the Calendar. It is just five lines long.

Mr. LODGE. I will yield to the Senator from Indiana for that purpose——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am sure there will be no objection to it.

Mr. LODGE. But I can not yield further for unobjected bills. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

CITY OF GEARY, OKLA.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3658) to ratify an act of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Oklahoma legalizing the waterworks bond election held by the city of Geary, in said Territory. It is a bill which has passed the House and has been reported favorably from our committee. It is five lines long. I am much obliged to the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Oklahoma, approved March 5, 1903, entitled "An act legalizing the waterworks bond election held by the city of Geary," be, and the same is hereby, ratified and confirmed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CULBERSON. Had we not better have the act read that it is sought to ratify by this act of Congress?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; the act sought to be read is about as long as the bill. I will send it to the desk.

Mr CULBERSON. Very well; have it read, then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The act will be read.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is in the body of the report.

The Secretary read as follows:

An act legalizing the waterworks bond election held by the city of Geary.

Be it enacted by the legislative assembly of the Territory of Oklahoma:

SECTION 1. That the election held in the city of Geary, Blaine County, on Tuesday, the 24th day of February, 1903, for the purpose of voting $42,000 for the purpose of constructing a system of waterworks in and for said city of Geary be, and the same is hereby, legalized, and the mayor and city council of said city of Geary are hereby authorized and empowered to issue the bonds of the said city for the purpose of constructing the said waterworks system in the sum of $42,000, in accordance with said election, and the said bonds are declared to be a legal and valid outstanding indebtedness against the said city of Geary.

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage and approval.

Approved this the 5th day of March, A. D. 1903.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. If there is going to be debate on the bill——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I did not know there was going to be debate. If there is, I will not press it.

Mr. CULBERSON. I was simply going to ask a question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly; I will be glad to answer the question, but I do not want to delay the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. CULBERSON. There is some question about the validity of the bonds, I take it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana to explain what the question is.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I shall be glad to do so if the Senator from Massachusetts will permit me.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The reason for this act of the legislature of Oklahoma is as follows: The town of Geary is a town of about 2,000 inhabitants. It needs waterworks. Under the law of Congress of 1898, all municipal corporations in Territories are permitted to issue bonds for waterworks, sewerage, and other purposes affecting public health, without regard to the Harrison limitation, provided the school census shows that the town has a population of not less than 1,000.

Now, in Oklahoma, in accordance with this act, the city of Geary held an election, and out of all the votes cast but four were against the bond issue. It developed, however, that they have no such thing in Oklahoma as a school census, but only a census of school children, which was an anomaly. Therefore, when they came to sell the bonds under the act of 1898 this defect was pointed out, that the act of 1898 requires a school census, whereas in Oklahoma they have no such thing. It was immediately called to the attention of the legislature of Oklahoma, which passed the act just read. Still, the purchasers of the bonds felt that they would like to have the school-census matter cured, and the bill was presented to both Houses of Congress. It passed the House. It came to our committee, which has examined it very thoroughly, and reports it favorably to the Senate.

That is a brief statement of the reason of the act of the legislature of Oklahoma and of the history of the bill.

Mr. BACON. If the act of the legislature is not too long, I hope it will be read again.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very well. I am sorry the bill is taking time. I did not know it was going to take any.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The act will be again read.

The Secretary again read the act.

Mr. BACON. I understand there is no doubt about the fact that the requisite population is there.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. None whatever. There is no point raised whatever about that. It is merely the anomaly that in Oklahoma there does not happen to be a school census, but only a census of school children.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Territories with an amendment, in line 7, after the word "confirmed," at the end of the bill, to insert:

And the bonds to be issued in pursuance of said election are hereby legalized and made valid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SHIPPING BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND THE PHILIPPINES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2259) to regulate shipping in trade between ports of the United States and ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, between ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the Philippines with an amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the committee amendment may be acted on.

The SECRETARY. In section 8, page 3, line 24, after the word "act," insert "except as otherwise provided in section 3;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall, from time to time, issue regulations for the enforcement of this act, except as otherwise provided in section 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I also move to amend, in line 2, on page 3, section 5, by striking out, after the words "owned by," the words "any Department of the Government" and inserting "the United States."

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if there is a report accompanying the bill?

Mr. LODGE. There is.

Mr. PATTERSON. Let us have it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an amendment pending.

Mr. PATTERSON. Let the report be read immediately after the amendment is disposed of.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me to dispose of one or two formal amendments, I will have the report read.

Mr. PATTERSON. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 2, section 3, after the words "owned by," strike out the words "any Department of the Government" and insert "the United States;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That sections 1 and 2 of this act shall not apply to vessels owned by the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In line 4, page 2, there is a misprint. The word "unladed" should be "unladen" or "unloaded." I move to strike out "unladed" and insert "unloaded," so as to read "and which shall not have been unloaded."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Now the report can be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read at the request of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. CARMACK. Is the amendment I offered the other day pending? I do not know whether it was formally offered or not.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think the Senator formally offered it. I think he gave notice of it.

Mr. CARMACK. I believe that is true.

Mr. LODGE. I know the Senator has amendments to be considered.

Mr. CARMACK. I simply want to offer them at the proper time.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Colorado desires to have the report read, and it might as well be read now.

Mr. PATTERSON. I think we ought to have the report read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an amendment here which the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] proposed to offer. It is printed and on the table.

Mr. CARMACK. I will offer it after the reading of the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. LODGE from the Committee on the Philippines, December 17, 1903, as follows:

The Committee on the Philippines, to whom was referred Senate bill [illegible] report back the bill with the recommendation that it pass with an amendment.

The object to be attained by this legislation is contained in section 3, the other sections being merely amendments of existing law, and a [illegible] for a statement of the act providing revenue for the Philippine Islands, approved March 8, 1902. It will be seen that it was provided:

"That [illegible] have been the provisions of law relating to vessels of the United States [illegible] to vessels of the United States to American ports of [illegible] and shall be applicable to foreign vessels engaging in trade between ports in the Philippine Archipelago."

By this provision it will be observed that on July 1, 1904, the coastwise laws of the United States go into effect [illegible] to vessels trading between the Philippine Islands and the United States, [illegible] trade between the ports of the Philippine Archipelago.

There is an American tonnage now in existence, and [illegible] are constantly being made steady additions to it, [illegible] between the Philippine Archipelago and the United States either by way of the Pacific or via the Suez Canal and the Atlantic. In regard to the coastwise traffic, however, the conditions are widely different. [illegible] carried on almost exclusively in vessels belonging to other ports of the Philippines or to foreign owners and most of the carriers in foreign bottoms. [illegible] on the 1st of July, 1904, without the change being made which is provided by this bill, the entire traffic between the ports of the Islands would [illegible] immediately annulled, because practically none of the vessels now engaged in the interisland traffic would conform to the coastwise laws of the United States. This would be a blow to the prosperity of the islands and cause [illegible] great inconvenience and hardship, but would permanently prevent all good [illegible] commerce. It is therefore absolutely necessary to remove the interisland traffic from the application of the coastwise laws of the United States upon July 1, 1904, and this is effected, as has already been said, by section 3 of the bill.

Section 7 of the bill excepting Spanish ships from the operation of this and previous acts is necessary in order to comply with the terms of Article IV of the treaty of peace with Spain, signed at Paris on the 10th day of December, 1898, which provides that "for the term of ten years the United States will admit Spanish ships and merchandise to the ports of the Philippine Islands on the same terms as ships and merchandise of the United States."

The committee has been informed by the War Department that there is now ample tonnage, amounting to over 140,000 tons, which is ready for the carrying trade between the Philippine Islands and the United States, and the committee appends to this report a partial list of the vessels now engaged, or ready to engage, in this commerce.

Mr. CARMACK. I offer the amendments of which I gave notice the other day, with the exception of the amendment on page 2.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, page 1, line 3, it is proposed to strike out the word "four" and insert the word "nine;" so as to read:

That on and after July 1, 1909, no merchandise shall be transported, etc.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I hope that amendment will not be adopted. It is making a needless extension, it seems to me. If we are not ready to carry that traffic now, we never shall be ready to carry it. I see no ground for applying that at this time. If the Senator from Tennessee wishes to debate the amendment, of course I shall not move to lay it on the table.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I do not care to debate this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the "noes" have it.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

Mr. CARMACK. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. ALLISON. I was about to offer an amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee, if that is in order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I move to strike out the word "four" and insert the word "five" wherever it occurs and wherever such an amendment is applicable, so as to make the date 1905 instead of 1904. I move that as an amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK].

Mr. LODGE. I will accept that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa offers an amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed wherever the date "1904" appears to strike out "4" and insert "5."

Mr. ALLISON. I do not offer the amendment precisely in that form. There are one or two places where the date should be 1904, and in those places I do not wish to strike that date out.

Mr. LODGE. There are some places where that date will have to remain.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, section 1, line 3, after the word "and," it is proposed to strike out "4" and insert "5;" so as to read:

That on and after July 1, 1905, etc.

Mr. ALLISON. I move the same amendment on page 2, section 2, line 8.

Mr. CARMACK. Is this an amendment to the amendment that I offered?

Mr. ALLISON. I have offered it as such, so that the whole question may be pending.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest to the Senator from Tennessee to withdraw his amendment for the time being, and to let the friends of the bill perfect it as they want it.

Mr. LODGE. Very well.

Mr. TELLER. Then the Senator from Iowa can move his amendment; which I understand the chairman of the committee is disposed to accept.

Mr. LODGE. I am.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee withdraw his amendment?

Mr. CARMACK. I do not see exactly what is to be accomplished by that, Mr. President.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Tennessee can again offer it.

Mr. CARMACK. Of course, I can offer it again.

Mr. TELLER. What I propose is with this view: I prefer to see the date "1905" rather than "1904." When, however, the Senator from Iowa moves to amend the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee, which is for 1909, I prefer 1909, but I do not wish to vote against the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa, for, if I can not get the date fixed at 1909, I prefer to have it 1905 rather than 1904, as it now stands in the bill. I make the suggestion for that reason.

Mr. LODGE. I suggest that we first take the vote on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK], and then we can take the vote on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Mr. TELLER. Very well. The Senator can do that if he prefers, and first take the vote on making the date 1909.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I withdraw my amendment for the present, and will permit the vote to be taken on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK].

Mr. CARMACK. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLAPP (when his name was called). I have a general pair, as before announced, with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], and shall therefore withhold my vote. I make the announcement for the day.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN]. I do not see him in the Chamber, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CARMACK. I will say that the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] is compelled to remain at home on account of sickness in his family, and probably will not be here to-day.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington. As I have stated, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. He not being present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PATTERSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE]. He is not here. If he were present, he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BEVERIDGE (after having voted in the negative). I should have stated when voting that I did so under the transfer of pairs announced on the previous bill, which will hold good for the remainder of the day.

Mr. ELKINS (after having voted in the negative). I voted under a misapprehension. I have a pair with the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], who, I find, has not voted. I therefore withdraw my vote. The Senator from Texas, if present, would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

Mr. FOSTER of Washington. My general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN] has been transferred to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], leaving me at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CULBERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 33, as follows:

YEAS—18.

Bacon,	Cockrell,	McCreary,	Teller.
Berry,	Daniel,	Martin,
Carmack,	Gorman,	Newlands,
Clay,	Latimer,	Overman,

Depew,	Lindsay,	Pettus,

So Mr. CARMACK's amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLISON. I now move, on page 1, section 1, line 3, after the words "nineteen hundred and," to strike out "four" and insert "five." I also move the same amendment—and it may all be considered as one amendment—in section 2, page 2, line 8; in section 4, page 2, line 25, and in section 6, page 3, line 15. I will state that the amendment merely changes the date from 1904 to 1905.

Mr. CARMACK. I suppose we might just as well have all of my amendments voted down without any roll call.

Mr. ALLISON. I suppose so; but I do not know what the amendments are.

Mr. CARMACK. The amendments I have offered.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator has only offered an amendment to the first section.

Mr. CARMACK. That is the only one that has been voted on, I understand.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Senator desire a vote on each amendment?

Mr. CARMACK. I have moved to insert the same amendment all the way through the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. A vote has already been taken.

Mr. CARMACK. They can be voted down if you are determined to vote them down.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] is agreed to by the Senate, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] could not offer an amendment increasing that time limit. It would not be in order.

Mr. ALDRICH. It could be done in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It could be done in the Senate, but not as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment of the Senator from Tennessee has just been voted down.

Mr. CARMACK. My amendments were to strike out the date "1904" and make it "1909" in various parts of the bill. We did not vote on all of them, but only on the amendment to the first section.

Mr. LODGE. Then, I suppose, we must take a vote on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee at each place in the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw my amendment so as to enable the Senator from Tennessee to offer his amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa withdraws his amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Let the amendments of the Senator from Tennessee be considered as voted on in gross.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I suggest that the Senator offer them as one amendment.

Mr. CARMACK. That is what I intend it to be.

Mr. ALLISON. I supposed that the Senator from Tennessee made his amendment, striking out "four" and inserting "nine," apply to the various sections of the bill.

Mr. CARMACK. That is what I intended.

Mr. ALLISON. If so, the Senator's amendment has already been voted down; but if not, the amendments can be considered as one amendment and voted on, unless the Senator wishes otherwise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Tennessee applied only to one section. The other amendment of the Senator from Tennessee, relating to the date, will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, section 2, line 8, it is proposed to strike out "four" and insert "nine:" and in section 6, page 3, line 15, it is proposed to strike out "four" and insert "nine."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, Mr. President, I offer as a single amendment the amendments I have heretofore indicated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, on page 1, section 1, line 3, to strike out "four" and insert "five;" on page 2, section 2, line 8, to strike out "four" and insert "five;" on the same page, section 4, line 25, at the end of the line, to strike out "four" and insert "five;" and on page 3, section 6, line 15, to strike out "four" and insert "five;" so that the date in each case will be "1905."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. PATTERSON. I hope the Senator from Iowa will not press his amendment to a vote at this time, because, under the ruling of the Chair, if his amendment is agreed to, an amendment to increase the time limit will be out of order until the bill gets into the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. Until it gets into the Senate.

Mr. PATTERSON. That is what I understood was the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. ALDRICH. But the Senator from Colorado understands that when the bill is in the Senate any amendment will be in order.

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes; then any amendment will be in order.

Mr. ALDRICH. Or the Senator can offer his amendment as an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa, if he pleases.

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not want to do that at this time. But the purpose I have in making the suggestion to the Senator from Iowa is this: This is a bill to extend [illegible] the coastwise laws of the United States to the sea traffic between the United States and the Philippines.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator will excuse me, but he is not stating that quite correctly. The coastwise laws are now extended by law to take effect on July 1, both as to the transoceanic and the interisland traffic of the Philippine Islands.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. By existing law.

Mr. LODGE. By existing law, and, unless this bill is passed, the coastwise laws of the United States will cease to take effect both as to the interisland traffic and the transoceanic traffic on the 1st day of next July. This bill relieves the interisland traffic entirely. It leaves it in the hands of the Commission to determine when it shall be [illegible] to vessels of the United States registry.

Mr. PATTERSON. If the amendment of the Senator from Iowa is adopted, it will extend the operation of the coastwise laws one year—that is, until 1905—on traffic between the Philippine Islands and the United States.

Mr. LODGE. It will defer their operation.

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes. My point is that the amendment of the Senator from Iowa should not be voted upon now is based upon the following proposition: There is no doubt, as I understand, that some time before the close of the Senate's consideration of the coastwise laws to the Philippine Islands—that is, to the traffic between the United States and the Philippine Islands—but the time at which those laws should go into effect is of the utmost importance. If I am not mistaken, the present Secretary of War, and the late Secretary of the Treasury, has expressed to that effect of the bill at the present time. I do not remember [illegible] I am mistaken about that, the substance of it I have been told that such is the case, and that the Secretary gives very important and powerful reasons in opposition to the extension of these laws at this time.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. I suppose that I am entitled, in view of his question, to state what the Secretary of War stated to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] and myself the other day when the bill was passed was under discussion. He stated that he was very anxious to have the traffic opened in American bottoms; that he thought it would be beneficial to the islands by attracting to them American capital; that he thought to put the law into effect on the 1st of July would be too soon, but that he should be satisfied if it was postponed for one year, and that his ultimate desire was that before that time there should be a further reduction in the existing duties. The Senator from Iowa, I think, will bear me out that I have stated the views of the Secretary correctly.

Mr. PATTERSON. I have no question but that the Senator from Massachusetts states the interview correctly.

Mr. LODGE. I mean, as I am stating it from memory, and the Senator from Iowa having been present, he would be able to bear me out.

Mr. PATTERSON. But I want to suggest, if there is discussion upon this subject that it might result in a time being agreed upon for these laws to take effect, not in 1905, but perhaps in 1906. If a vote was deferred upon the measure, we could all vote upon the question with such light as we should have as a result of any discussion which may arise.

I am inclined to think that the extension of the coastwise laws to that trade in 1905 would work a very great hardship upon the people of the Philippine Islands, upon the exporters and importers living in those islands. The only motive I and my colleagues would have would be to defer the putting of these laws into operation until such reasonable time as would enable proper preparations to be made to substitute American vessels for foreign vessels. Ultimately the Senator from Iowa may insist upon his amendment; but it seems to me that if it was deferred for a time, if there is to be discussion upon it, we might all agree upon some time that would be satisfactory to the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. The Secretary of War is contented with the bill as proposed to be amended by the Senator from Iowa, involving a year's postponement. That is as far as I should feel at liberty to go. I see no reason for further extension. I have accepted the amendment of the Senator from Iowa and shall vote for it.

Mr. CARMACK. If the Senator from Colorado will permit me, I have here what the late Secretary of War and the present Secretary have said on this question.

I will say that I also had a conversation with Secretary Taft. I have not felt at liberty to say anything about it before, as other Senators had not mentioned the matter; but I got a very different impression from that which he seems to have conveyed to other Senators; and that was that he was very much opposed to the operation of this bill without extending the time for the coastwise laws to go into effect, unless the tariff on Philippine products should be very materially reduced before any such legislation was had. That was the very distinct impression left upon my mind.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me, I do not think that the Secretary of War conceals the fact that he is very much interested in dealing further with our tariff laws between the United States and the Philippine Islands; I think he has very decided views upon that subject, but in the conversation alluded to between the Secretary of War, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and myself he intimated his desire, I think, to have these two questions as nearly as possible considered together. Of course, it is impossible for the Senate to consider the other question now, because we have no power to originate a tariff bill in this body. My object in offering this amendment to increase the limit one year is to give an opportunity for the consideration of the two subjects together. I think I have fairly stated, and the Senator from Massachusetts has fairly stated, the substance of the views of the Secretary of War.

Mr. CARMACK. The Secretary of War——

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me a minute, I want to ask the Senator from Iowa, in view of the fact that there is no possibility, under the predetermined arrangement, as we understand it, for adjournment, that that question of tariff can be considered at this session, and it is not probable that it will be possible to consider it at the short session, whether it is not better to now increase the limit two years instead of one?

Mr. CARMACK. I was going to offer an amendment to that effect.

Mr. ALLISON. As stated by the Senator from Massachusetts, the Secretary of War is satisfied with the extension of one year, and in view of that fact I offered the amendment which I have sent to the desk. I think one year will suffice. I hope so, at least.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not see why it would not be possible at a short session to take up the simple question of the reduction of duties upon Philippine products. It does not involve the whole tariff question.

Mr. BACON. Not at all.

Mr. ALDRICH. It certainly, I think, can be disposed of in a short session without any question.

Mr. PATTERSON. It seriously involves——

Mr. BACON. Pardon me. That question was up at the last session. The Senator will remember that an unexpected complication caused Senators to postpone that question until the last day of the session, and the bill was brought up on the last day of the session, although it came over from the House in the early part of January. I am not criticising anybody; I am simply replying to the suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. BACON. In one moment, if you please.

The Senator used the word "possibility." I should say as to the probability that in the short session, with the vast amount of business which is necessarily crowded into the short session, there would not be any legislation practicable upon that question unless it should be a measure without very material opposition on the part of anybody.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I suggest to the Senator that his point is met by the fact that even if it be true that no tariff legislation could be considered at a short session, this could be immediately extended for another year.

Mr. BACON. That is true.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That could be done in a short session.

Mr. BACON. If we could be assured——

Mr. CULBERSON. As I understand——

Mr. CARMACK. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CULBERSON. I thought the Senator from Tennessee had concluded his speech.

Mr. CARMACK. I yield to the Senator very cheerfully. I am very glad to do it.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understand that by the act of March 8, 1902, after the 1st day of July, 1904, the coastwise laws of the United States will apply to trade between the United States and the Philippine Islands and between ports in the Philippine Islands. The report of the committee on this bill states that the sole object of the bill is to relieve the situation in the archipelago—that is to say, that the object of it is to repeal so much of section 8 of the act of March 8, 1902, as will put the coastwise laws of the United States in effect between ports and places in the Philippines after the 1st of July, 1904.

Instead of stopping at that, instead of accomplishing that purpose simply, the bill goes beyond it and reenacts in sections 1 and 2 the act of 1902, though in different language. So Senators on this side of the Chamber, if they vote in favor of this bill, will vote affirmatively to put the coastwise laws in operation between the United States and the Philippines.

Now, in view of that, it seems to me that if the Senator from Massachusetts would accept an amendment which I will send to the desk perhaps the matter can be settled. Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a provision that will repeal so much of the act of 1902 as has application to ports and places in the Philippine Islands solely. In that way the law as it exists will not be disturbed, except in so far as the interisland Philippine trade is concerned, and Senators on this side of the Chamber can consistently vote for it. There is really no necessity for a reenactment of the act of 1902, so far as the trade between the United States and the Philippines is concerned.

With this purpose, Mr. President, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an amendment now pending.

Mr. CULBERSON. Then I will offer it at the proper time. It is in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator from Tennessee allow me to make a suggestion to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. I submit to the Senator from Texas that that will not accomplish all I want to accomplish; namely, that as to the traffic between the United States and the Philippine Islands the law of 1902 shall be extended for one year.

Mr. CULBERSON. That is true; but it may be done by an amendment, which the Senator may offer to my amendment, which I will gladly accept.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator from Tennessee yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator in charge of this bill. We have just passed a bill this afternoon which provides:

> That vessels of the United States, or belonging to the United States, and no others, shall be employed in the transportation by sea of coal, provisions, fodder, or supplies of any description, purchased pursuant to law, for the use of the Army or Navy.

When that measure was pending I offered an amendment that it should not take effect until the 1st day of July, 1905. That amendment was voted down and the bill passed as originally drafted, with the amendment attached, proposed, I think, by the Senator from Iowa, that the act should take effect sixty days after its passage.

The bill now pending provides:

> That on and after July 1, 1904, no merchandise shall be transported by sea, under penalty of forfeiture thereof, between ports of the United States and ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, directly or via a foreign port, or for any part of the voyage, in any other vessel than a vessel of the United States.

Now, the first measure, the bill we have just passed, is general in its character, except it is limited to Government supplies, and it goes into effect, provided it shall become a law, sixty days after its passage. Suppose the bill we are now discussing should be amended as proposed by the Senator from Iowa, so that it will not take effect until the 1st of July, 1905, and it becomes a law. What will be the status then—the then state of the law—in the face of the two laws, which will have to be construed together, I presume, as to Government supplies? Is this latter bill a modification of the former one? Is it not a repeal by positive enactment of the former law—I mean the bill which passed the Senate to-day—in so far as the date of its operation is concerned?

Mr. HALE. It would depend entirely upon the bill just passed. The two are entirely distinct.

Mr. LODGE. They have no relation to each other.

Mr. MITCHELL. I beg pardon, with all due deference to the Senator. The one provides that no vessel but a Government vessel or one owned by an American shall be employed in transporting Government supplies.

Mr. HALE. It goes everywhere.

Mr. MITCHELL. It goes everywhere. I understand that. I do not misunderstand the bill. I may be wrong in my deduction, but I know what I am talking about.

Mr. HALE. It is not in any way on all fours with this bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. Not at all; and yet it is similar in some respects, because the bill we have just passed provides in so many terms that no Government supplies shall be shipped anywhere from this country to any ports except in an American vessel. That is that bill, is it not?

Mr. HALE. A United States vessel.

Mr. MITCHELL. A United States vessel or a vessel belonging to the United States.

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL. Now, this bill provides that on and after July 1, 1904, no more [illegible] shall be carried except in home vessels. It does not say "no merchandise other than Government supplies," but "no merchandise."

There is no exception made as to Government supplies, and my opinion is, although I may be about [illegible] we say, that if you pass this bill now and extend it so that it does not become operative until the 1st of July, 1904, you will find that there is a conflict there which will need construction. And I am inclined to think it absolutely repeals the act you have just passed in so far as it relates to Government supplies, and certainly renders inoperative the provision in the bill passed this morning providing the President under certain circumstances to suspend the law.

Mr. HALE. I do not think so. As representing the bill which has just been passed, I am willing to take that risk. That is a distinctive matter entirely, and is cared for by the bill itself. I will take the chance of its being in any way repealed.

Mr. MITCHELL. You make no exception, with all due deference to the Senator.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President——

Mr. MITCHELL. In one moment. In this last bill you include all merchandise. All merchandise includes Government supplies just as much as it includes any other thing. You make it apply to all merchandise, and you say that the bill shall go into effect until the 1st of July, 1904, while the other bill goes into effect within sixty days after passage.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator from Oregon permit me to call his attention to the fact that the provision adopted as an amendment to the bill which passed to-day providing that under certain circumstances, if the rates are excessive or unreasonable, the President should step in, would be affected by this bill if it passes now and relatively, because under that provision the President could give a preference to a foreign vessel, whereas under the bill which is now pending that preference is taken away from the President and it is confined to American vessels?

Mr. MITCHELL. This is not relatively so.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to ask the Senator from Oregon a question. Even if his contention be correct, that the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa may by construction be extended to the other bill, would he object to that construction?

Mr. MITCHELL. I would be in favor of making each of these bills take effect one year hence.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then, if that is true, supposing the objection he makes is valid, is not that just what he wants?

Mr. MITCHELL. It is just what I want, but I do not think it is what is wanted on the other side.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But the Senator from Maine is willing to take his chances; and if the Senator from Oregon is satisfied with it, does not that dispose of the point? Is not that just what the Senator from Oregon himself wants?

Mr. MITCHELL. What I should like to do would be to reconsider the other bill and make it take effect at the same time that is proposed by the Senator from Iowa as to the pending bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In other words, what the Senator points out as the defect of the amendment of the Senator from Iowa is precisely what the Senator from Oregon desires; and since the Senator from Maine is willing to take his chances, it seems to me that point is disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. LODGE. It is obvious we can not have any action on the bill this evening, as Senators evidently desire to discuss this amendment. There is some executive business that certain Senators desire to have disposed of, and therefore I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After [illegible] spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, March 2, 1904, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

Mr. PUJO. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent for the purpose of making a [illegible] of reference of the bill (H. R. 12873) for the completion of a dam and locks in the Mermentau River, in the State of Louisiana, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. [illegible]) for the completion of a dam and locks in the Mermentau River, in the State of Louisiana.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent for a change of reference of this bill from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

By unanimous consent, other changes of reference were made as follows:

House Document No. 405, from the Committee on Appropriations to the Committee on Indian Affairs;

House Document No. 564, from the Committee on Appropriations to the Committee on Indian Affairs; and House Document No. 558, from the Committee on Appropriations to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the agricultural appropriation bill, with Senate amendments, and agree to them.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the agricultural appropriation bill, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Chair appoints the following conferees: Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. HENRY of Connecticut, and Mr. LAMB.

JULIETTE WESTBROOK.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the action of the Speaker in signing House bill 5611, granting a pension to Juliette Westbrook, be rescinded; that the bill be returned to the Secretary of the Interior; and that similar action be taken by the Senate with respect to the signature of the President pro tempore, and that the passage of the bill [illegible] be and the same be postponed indefinitely, the benefiary of the same being dead.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

REMOVING RESTRICTIONS ON SALE OF PUYALLUP ALLOTTED LANDS.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I now send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9891) giving the consent of Congress to the removal of the restrictions [illegible] Puyallup allotted lands, and confirming and legalizing [illegible]

Be it enacted, [illegible] That the Puyallup allottees and true owners of lands situated in the Puyallup Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, shall have [illegible] the lands so allotted, and [illegible] persons [illegible] the lands so allotted, and [illegible] the lands so allotted, and [illegible] the lands so allotted, and print with my remarks fully explain the exact reason why additional legislation is needed to make definite and specific the conditions of the titles to this real estate.

It is proper to state that the bill which I originally introduced was H. R. 5767. After its introduction it was referred to the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for their official report and opinion as to the necessity and propriety of such legislation. The two letters—one from the Secretary of the Interior and one from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs—I will print with my remarks.

It will be noticed by reference to these two official letters that both the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs agree that some such legislation as is contemplated by this bill is not subject to objection. The Secretary of the Interior in his letter submits a proposed substitute for all that portion of H. R. 5767 following the enacting clause. This proposed substitute is as follows:

That nothing in the act of Congress approved March 3, 1893 (27 Stats., p. 633), authorizing the sale of the Puyallup allotted lands, with restrictions upon alienation for a period of ten years from the date of the passage thereof, shall be taken and construed as giving the consent of the United States to the removal of restrictions upon alienation by said Puyallup Indians of their allotted lands prior to the expiration of the period of ten years, and after the expiration of said period shall be given the effect of having been made without any restriction upon the power of the allottee to alienate his land.

This bill (H. R. 9891), the passage of which is recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs of this House, is slightly different than the proposed substitute recommended by the honorable Secretary of the Interior. It is proper to state in this connection that it is apparent from the letter of the Secretary of the Interior that the reasons that induced him to propose said substitute was a desire to further safeguard and protect the rights of the Indian allottees.

This bill (H. R. 9891), which has been favorably reported and which I am now asking the passage of, not only goes further toward the protection of the rights of the Indian than did the bill in its original form, but goes further toward the protection of the rights of the Indian than the substitute offered by the honorable Secretary of the Interior. This statement is made as an explanation of the reason why the Committee on Indian Affairs reported a different bill than the one suggested by the Department of the Interior.

I will insert in the RECORD at this point two letters received by me from the Tacoma Chamber of Commerce and Board of Trade, which present the local conditions which make this legislation not only desirable but necessary:

TACOMA CHAMBER OF COMMERCE AND BOARD OF TRADE,
Tacoma, Wash., November 28, 1903.

Hon. FRANCIS W. CUSHMAN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: There is a matter of great importance which we wish to call to your attention.

The law which created the commissioner to dispose of the Puyallup Indian lands provided that the land should be sold by a commissioner appointed March 4, 1893. There was nothing in the act that direct[illegible] the Indians to sell their lands after that date in preference to other Indians. Somebody in Washington City, either the Attorney in the Indian Department or in the Attorney-General's office, has given an opinion that the Indians have the right to convey, and have had that right since March 4, 1893.

The commissioner in charge of making the sales for the Indians has been advised by the Indian Office at Washington City that he has no further power to make conveyances. Hammond & Hoyt, a prominent firm, have refused to pass titles to these Indian lands on the ground that there is no legislation authorizing the Indians to make any conveyances. This has absolutely stopped the sale of any land. There are over two ways to get nibble deters, for the status of these lands (the title is not clear), would have to be supplied to the United States Supreme Court, and which would cause a delay of from two to five years and which would practically paralyze us from a business standpoint. The other way is for an act of Congress authorizing conveyances by the Indians, and [illegible] any conveyances made by Indians since March 4, 1893, where the consideration was paid to the Indian.

Several manufacturing plants have found a location on these lands on account of their nearness to get a site that they desired but because of the chaos of things before narrated. Put myself [illegible] Congress as quickly as possible, and thereby remove this embarrassing state of affairs which is embarrassing to both the Indians and the whites. Personally if the matter was referred to the Attorney-General for an opinion he would state that there is no reason for the passage of the act, but some Indians already have the right to convey. But unfortunately such opinions do not always make decisions. No harm can be done by introducing the law without delay and speedily. There ought not to be any delay in getting this done.

Very truly,

TACOMA CHAMBER OF COMMERCE AND BOARD OF TRADE,
J. S. WHITEHOUSE, Secretary.

TACOMA CHAMBER OF COMMERCE AND BOARD OF TRADE,
Tacoma, Wash., November 28, 1903.

Hon. FRANCIS W. CUSHMAN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your communication of the 21st with inclosure of the 18th from the Office of Indian Affairs received. I have discussed the matter further with several attorneys, and they still insist that legislation is necessary to enable the Indians to convey lands. You will notice in the letter from the Indian Commissioner he states, on page 3, that the lands could not be conveyed until after state legislation should remove the restriction, and Congress consent to such removal.

Congress has never consented to the removal of such restriction except by implication, which implication is contained in the act of March 3, 1893, and is gathered from the words [illegible] of letter of Indian Commissioner, [illegible] that Indians allotted should not have the power of alienation of the allotted lands not selected for sale by said Commission for a period of ten years from the date of the passage of the act. You will notice that the act does not say that such [illegible] have power to the expiration of ten years, etc., and there is in the way before the giving of consent on the part of Congress to the removal of the restriction provided by the State legislature. Nevertheless, we [illegible] to invest footstools in lands that we pay taxes on, for title rests on a grant from the government, which law is a departure from the fixed policy of the government concerning the Indian for over one hundred years.

I have spoken to a day's legislation on the part of Congress and the Indian Office in consenting to the passage of an act which would remove all doubt, which would in specific terms give the consent of Congress to the act of the State legislature permitting the Puyallup Indians and their heirs to exercise the right of the Indians to convey and [illegible] March 4, 1893, in which the [illegible] to the Indian. The Indians are not [illegible] the Indian office. They decline to think that the law intended to restrict the Indians in a condition where he could not convey, but they do not feel that they should advise their clients to invest money on such interpretation or intention, especially when the remedy is so simple and easy.

I [illegible] in both branches of Congress at the earliest date and passed through. This would [illegible] a very serious hardship upon the city of Tacoma and also upon the Indians. We [illegible] with the letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs which you so kindly forwarded to us.

Very truly,

TACOMA CHAMBER OF COMMERCE AND BOARD OF TRADE,
J. S. WHITEHOUSE, Secretary.

I desire to place in the RECORD at this point the letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to the honorable Secretary of the Interior in relation to this general subject:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, December 16, 1903.

SIR: This office is in receipt, by Department reference, for immediate report, of a communication dated December 11, 1903, from Hon. J. S. SHERMAN, chairman of the House Committee on Indian Affairs, inclosing a copy of House bill 5767, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session, with request for a report on the same in time to be considered at a meeting of the committee for action on Thursday next, December 17, 1903.

The object of the bill is as [illegible] of Congress to the removal of the restrictions on the sale of Puyallup allotted lands and confirming and legalizing sales theretofore made [illegible] March 4, 1893.

In the first part of the preamble to the bill reference is made to the treaty under which the Puyallup Indians [illegible] between [illegible] governor and superintendent of Indian affairs of Washington Territory, on the part of the United States, and the chiefs, headmen, and [illegible] of the Nisqually, Puyallup, and certain other tribes and bands of Indians in Puget Sound, also to the provisions contained in the act approved [illegible] with the Omahas, so far as the same might be applicable thereto.

In the second part of the preamble reference is made to the patents issued because of lands made by the Indians and the allotment of said lands, the approval of the allotments by the Secretary of the Interior, the patents issued, and selections and allotments having been made in accordance with the provisions of the treaties referred to.

The third part of the preamble refers to the fact that the President caused patents to be issued to the Indians of the Puyallup Indian Reservation in accordance with the act approved March 3, 1893.

In the fourth part of the preamble it is indicated that the tracts of land respectively allotted to the Indians within the Puyallup Reservation [illegible] be alienated or leased for a longer term than ten years and [illegible] be exempt from levy, sale, or forfeiture [illegible] in force until a state [illegible] shall [illegible] and [illegible] be formed and the legislature of the State of Washington [illegible] to the fact that no State legislature has removed the restrictions without the consent of Congress.

It is stated in the fifth paragraph of the preamble that the legislature of the State of Washington, by act approved March 22, 1890, [illegible] upon the sale and alienation of the Puyallup allotted lands to take effect upon the consent of the United States thereto.

In the sixth part of the preamble reference is made to the provisions of the Puyallup act approved March 3, 1893 (27 Stat. L., [illegible]), authorizing the sale of these lands upon certain terms, conditions, and restrictions. [illegible] that the Indian allottees should not have the power [illegible] to the removal of restrictions upon the sale and conveyance of the same [illegible] "for the period of ten years from the date of the passage of the act."

In the seventh portion of the preamble the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior rendered February 24, 1903, is quoted to the effect that the [illegible] of the Indians who request to have lands have been [illegible] in the provisions of the act of the legislature of the State of Washington, March 22, 1890, and the Indian appropriation act of March 3, 1893, [illegible] to enable them to receive a patent [illegible] March 4, 1893, [illegible] by the Indians shall have the power to lease, encumber, grant, and alienate the same in like manner and with like effect as any other person may do under the laws of the United States and of the State of Washington.

In the eighth portion of the preamble it is stated that some would be purchasers of these unsold Puyallup allotted lands [illegible] or any portion thereof, because of a doubt as to whether Congress, by said Puyallup act of March 3, 1893, fully and completely removed the restrictions upon the sale and conveyance of those lands by the Indians.

The bill provides that the Puyallup allottees and heirs of said lands shall have the power to lease, encumber, grant, and alienate the same in like manner and to the same effect as any other person may do under the laws of the United States and of the State of Washington.

Also for giving the consent of the United States to the removal of all restrictions in relation thereto. It further provides that any and all sales theretofore made in accordance with the laws of the United States and of the State of Washington since March 3, 1893, shall be confirmed and legalized.

In connection with this subject the office has the honor to state that it has been reported that parties who are interested in making purchases of the Puyallup allotted lands now from the Indians and true owner thereof have some doubts as to the matter of the full and complete removal of the restrictions upon the sale and conveyance of the same, also that attorneys at Tacoma, Wash., and in the vicinity thereof have advised their clients not to purchase these lands pending the doubt of the complete and full removal of the restrictive clause on their sale, and that for these reasons very few, if any, sales have been made thereof since March 3, 1903.

The office has no doubt that the restrictions upon the sale and conveyance of these lands by the Indian allottees or true owners thereof have been removed as [illegible] the negative provisions of the Puyallup act approved March 3, 1893 (27 Stats., p. 633). That [illegible] of alienation of the allotted lands not selected for sale by said commission for the period of ten years [illegible] referred to, the restrictions upon the [illegible] state legislature should remove said restrictions without the consent of Congress.

It is of the opinion that the requirements of the treaties with reference to these lands have been met and that the provisions of the act of the State of Washington of March 22, 1890, and the act of March 3, 1893, [illegible] March 4, 1893, [illegible] to the passage of the bill under consideration [illegible] relating to this reservation and certain correspondence [illegible]

Very respectfully,

W. A. JONES,
Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, December 12, 1903.

SIR: H. R. 5767, which was inclosed with your communication of the 12th instant with request for report thereon, was referred to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who made report under date of the 16th instant, a copy of which is inclosed herewith.

[illegible] matter I doubt the necessity of further legislation [illegible] Department [illegible] Mason & Hoyt [illegible] correctness of the views of this Department to the effect that under the law as it then stood there was no restriction upon alienation after March 3, 1893.

I have therefore caused to be prepared and submit herewith a draft of a provision which I recommend to be substituted for that part of H. R. 5767 [illegible] approved March 3, 1893 (27 Stats., p. 633), and [illegible] "without any restriction upon the power of the allottee to alienate his land" [illegible] to said bill ought to be amended to correspond with these provisions.

Very respectfully,

E. A. HITCHCOCK,
Secretary.

Hon. JAMES S. SHERMAN,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs, House of Representatives.

I shall at this point insert in the RECORD the official letter of the honorable Secretary of the Interior to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. This letter was written February 14, 1903. That date was just about seventeen days before the expiration of the ten-year period of limitation upon the power of the Indian allottee to sell in his own right.

You will observe that the honorable Secretary of the Interior at that time and in this letter expressed it as his official opinion that after the 3d day of March, 1903, the Puyallup Indian allottees will "have power to lease, encumber, grant, and alien the same (the lands) in like manner and like effect as any other person may do under the laws of the United States, and of" the State of Washington.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 14, 1903.

The COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS.

SIR: I have considered your letter of the 29th ultimo, requesting instructions [illegible] in the matter of the appraisement and [illegible] Puyallup Indian reservation in Washington.

[illegible] of these lands is fully discussed in your letter, and shows, in [illegible] State of Washington approved March 22, 1890, [illegible] Puyallup act approved March 3, 1893 (27 Stats., p. 633), agreement. A majority of the Puyallup tribe of Indians, occupying the said reservation, gave proper written consent to the sale of Indian allotments less as surveyed, subdivided, and platted. In all cases of sales for the benefit of allotted lands, the allottees and the true owners thereof gave proper written consent thereto.

VI. There were sold of the allotted lands, prior to March 3, 1903, by the Government, under the provisions of the act of Congress, for the use and benefit of the allottees and true owners thereof, [illegible] acres. The amount of cash paid at the time of sale was $[illegible] [illegible] The amount of deferred payments, principal and interest, [illegible] these tracts were made is $[illegible], making a grand total of $[illegible].

VII. There remained unsold on March 3, 1903, 10,435.7315 acres of unallotted lands.

VIII. There have been sold thus far 2,934 lots within the Indian addition to the city of Tacoma, and four tracts containing 16.57 acres. The consideration therefor is $[illegible]. The amount of cash collected at the time of sale aggregates $[illegible]. The amount of deferred payments, principal, and interest [illegible] on the Indian addition lots since the respective sales were made aggregates $[illegible], making a grand total of $[illegible].

IX. There remained unsold on the Indian addition 649 lots and 6 tracts, containing 24.34 acres.

X. The proceeds arising from the sale of the allotted lands have been deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the respective allottees, and the patents, thereof, and warrants have been drawn in favor of those allottees, or their heirs, respectively, or their heirs, when ascertained, and delivered to them, less 10 per cent retained in the Treasury for the expense of sale.

The proceeds arising from the sale of Indian addition lots and tracts have been deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Puyallup Indians, [illegible] the provisions of and at the usual rates shall draw interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum. Ten per cent of such proceeds are used in paying pro rata the entire expense incurred in the sale of those lands.

XI. The entire Puyallup Indian Reservation outside of the land known as the "[illegible] tract" has been allotted in severalty to the Indians. There does not, therefore, remain on any portion of the said reservation unallotted land.

XII. For your further information, it may be stated that the Annual Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for the year 1884, the same being the year in which the allotments were made in the field to the Indians of the Puyallup Reservation, shows the population to be 950.

In the Commissioner's report dated November 10, 1894, stated that they had issued upon the reservation of the persons named in the [illegible] 195 men, 195 women and 84 children, making a total of 474 patents that since the date of the issuance of patents for those allotments to wit, January 8, 1887, there had died 36 men, 42 women and [illegible] making a total of 78 deaths of the persons named in the patents issued; that they further reported that there were born living children, born to the Puyallup Indians since the date of the patents, January 8, 1887, making a total of 41 who were then, November 10, 1894, patentees or descendants of patentees.

The report of the superintendent of the Puyallup Indian School for the year [illegible] shows the population to be now 509, consisting of 232 males and 277 females.

Very respectfully, A. C. TONNER, Acting Commissioner.

I desire to insert in the RECORD at this point a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under date November 18, 1903, which gives considerable information regarding the Puyallup Indian lands. The letter was addressed to Hon. A. G. FOSTER, United States Senator from the State of Washington, and through the courtesy of the Senator I have received a copy of it.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, November 18, 1903.

Hon. A. G. FOSTER, United States Senate.

SIR: This office is in receipt of your communication dated November 13, 1903, with which you inclose one from Mr. J. S. W[illegible], secretary Tacoma Chamber of Commerce, relative to the Puyallup Indian Reservation lands.

You state that you will appreciate very much a complete statement in regard to the present condition of these lands in so far as the Government is interested. You suggest that the letter from this office be in the nature of a reply to the letter from the secretary of the Tacoma Chamber of Commerce, so that you may furnish that body with it and request the return of the secretary's letter to you.

Mr. W[illegible] states in his communication bearing date November 7, 1903, that the present status of the affairs in the Puyallup Indian Reservation, which were laid out by the Puyallup commission, is very unsatisfactory. As you are aware, the law which provided for the allotment of lands to the Puyallup commission expired last March; that the commission's authority thereunder ceased with it; that the attorneys of the Indians to convey their land since that time without the interference of the Puyallup commission has failed through the action of the attorneys, who propose to permit their clients to purchase the land in the present unallotted portion of the reservation of the Indians to convey; that the Attorney-General of the United States has given the opinion that the patents of the allotments issued prior to the last March and that now the Indians have the right to convey their lands.

He further states that the law which was passed about ten years ago creating the Puyallup commission and giving it certain powers was very silent as to the rights of the Indians to convey their allotments after the law ceased to operate; that the only way this can be determined finally would be by the action of the court, which would probably have to be carried to the court of appeals, and which would mean the Puyallup lands would be tied up for from five to ten years. He is of the opinion that Congress should pass a law which would remove all doubts on this question and would positively declare the rights of the Indians to make conveyances.

In reply, the office has to state that the Puyallup Reservation was set apart under the treaty of December 26, 1854, between the United States and the Nisqually and other bands of Indians (9 Stat., [illegible]) and Executive orders of January 20, 1857, and September 4, 1874, [illegible] Executive Orders Relating to Indian Reserves from May 14, 1855, to July 1, 1902.

These Executive orders and certain letters of this Office and the Department in regard thereto may be found by reference to pages 131, 132, and 133 of the pamphlet herewith.

The Puyallup Reservation lies in townships 20 and 21 north, ranges 3 and 4 east, Willamette meridian, and as finally established contained about 18,050 acres.

The treaty of December 26, 1854, contained this provision:

"ART. 6. The President may [illegible] at his discretion, cause the whole or any portion of the lands hereby reserved, or of such other land as may be selected in lieu thereof, to be surveyed into lots, and assign the same to such individuals or families as are willing to avail themselves of the privilege and will locate on the same as a permanent home, on the same terms and subject to the same regulations as are provided in the sixth article of the treaty with the Omahas, so far as the same may be applicable."

In pursuance of this article the Puyallup Reservation was surveyed into lots and the survey was approved January 30, 1874, by the surveyor-general of Washington Territory.

Prior to January 9, 1887, no lands in this reservation had been patented to the Indians in severalty. On that day 165 patents issued to individual Indians and their families for tracts aggregating [illegible] acres, the [illegible] being a fraction less than 17.463 acres. The recitals and operative clauses [illegible] of said patents were the same in all others. To show the terms of them all a copy of one is here presented:

It will be observed from the stipulations contained in the patent and the treaties referred to that the tract so granted should not be alienated or leased for a longer term than two years and should be exempt from any [illegible] so long as such lands within the boundaries shall have been platted and [illegible] of the State shall remove the restrictions, and the legislature should remove the restrictions, and not without the consent of Congress.

By section 4561, Ballinger's Annotated Codes and Statutes of Washington, page 1[illegible], it is provided that the said Indians, Puyallup, Nisqually, or any member of any of the lands of the reservation in severalty, [illegible] in the State of Washington) by virtue of treaties made between them and the United States, shall have power to lease, mortgage, grant, and sell the same in the manner and with the effect as any other person may do under the laws of the United States and of the State of Washington, and that all restrictions in reference thereto are removed.

It is indicated in a footnote that the act of this section and the succeeding [illegible] "Act to determine the Indians to vote, and assign the lands of the Puyallup Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington."

It is indicated by another footnote that the act from which sections 4551 and 4552 are taken provides that the act shall take effect upon the consent of the United States to the removal of the restriction upon conveyance by the Indians.

It is further indicated by a parenthetical note following section 4551 that the same is found on the laws of [illegible] page [illegible] section [illegible] in force in the State of Washington, Washington Territory, [illegible]

The act of Congress approved March 3, 1893 (27 Stat., [illegible]), authorized the President to appoint a commission to select and [illegible] such portions of allotted lands as were not required for homes for the Indians allotted, and that the proceeds thereof, [illegible] be expended for the purposes in the Puyallup Reservation in the State of Washington, and provided that upon the approval of such selections and appropriations by the commission in the allotted lands so selected should be held for the benefit of the allottees. And the act provides that, for the benefit of all the Indians, [illegible] such lands as could not be sold without injury to the interests of the Indians, or such as should remain unsold, and the remainder of such lands the Secretary of the Interior might determine to be required for yonder's lien on the property [illegible] that the Indian allottees should not have power of alienation of lands and lands not selected for sale and commission for a period of ten years from the date of the passage of the act last named, etc.

A commission was appointed under this act. Surveys and appraisals of allotted lands for sale were made. They were approved by the Secretary of the Interior. Sales were had of such lands at public auction, and were so continued until March 3, 1893, at which time the Secretary of the Interior held that the restrictive clause upon the sale of these lands by the Indians was removed. The Secretary's decision was rendered February 14, 1903. He held that on and after March 3, 1903, the Puyallup Indian allottees would, in his judgment, "have power to lease, encumber, grant, and alien their lands

Mr. MCCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill I send to the Clerk's desk.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13390) making appropriation for clearing the Potomac River [illegible]

[illegible] etc., [illegible] parts, for clearing the Potomac [illegible]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like for the gentleman to make a statement concerning this bill. I have seen other similar bills pass this House time and time again. I want to know what obligation is the House of Representatives or Congress under to clear ice from the Potomac River or any other river of the United States?

Mr. MCCLEARY of Minnesota. By way of answer, Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk a letter from the harbor master, which I desire to have read in explanation of the situation.

The Clerk read as follows:

COMMISSIONERS OF [illegible]

[illegible]

The Honorable COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA:

The appropriation of $5,000 [illegible] work [illegible] ice [illegible] when a thaw comes and the [illegible] will go down [illegible] the Long Bridge and [illegible] Washington. I have [illegible] work [illegible] difficult work, and I most respectfully request that a further sum of $5,000 be provided to carry on the work.

Most respectfully, J. R. SUTTON, Harbor Master, D. C.

Mr. MADDOX. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota how much money has the Government already spent in the prosecution of this work?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Five thousand dollars, appropriated [illegible]

Mr. MADDOX. [illegible]

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, if the proposition [illegible]

Mr. MADDOX. [illegible]

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Yes, Sir.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

[illegible] OF [illegible] APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House [illegible] the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. [illegible] year for the [illegible] and pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I [illegible] limitation [illegible]

Mr. PIERCE. We will be satisfied on this side with two hours on a side.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be closed in four hours from now, two hours to be controlled by my friend from Tennessee and two hours by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that general debate now in order be closed at the end of four hours, two hours on a side, to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PIERCE] and by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. McCLEARY]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The motion of Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union [Mr. LAWRENCE in the chair] and proceeded to the further consideration of the bill H. R. [illegible], the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that much time has been spent on this side thus far, I suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that he now take some time.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for one hour.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, the proposed return of England to the protective system is the most ominous feature of the time. It would mark the disappearance of the most powerful support of the commercial tranquillity of mankind. The world would present the old spectacle of nations armed with retaliatory duties, struggling with the tariff, the cannon, and the sword to monopolize the trade of sufficient territory to meet the demands of growing populations for wider markets, retarding the progress and [illegible] of the [illegible] of the [illegible] bill in the United States in [illegible]

Two years later, in compliance with the request of Congress and in harmony with the sentiment of the country, Alexander Hamilton, the first Secretary of the Treasury, presented a report on manufactures, which voiced the common ambition for industrial independence and recommended definite measures for the encouragement of manufactures. This report is popularly supposed to be the holy writ of contemporary protectionism. And yet it admits in terms the ultimate correctness and desirability of free trade from the standpoint of universal application and places vastly more stress on premiums and bounties as a means of encouraging nascent industry than on protective duties. In fact, Hamilton in this report criticised and deplored protective duties, pronouncing restrictive and prohibitory rates only on the grounds that foreign charges on American products made them temporarily necessary, and that domestic competition would prevent internal monopoly and extortion.

The report discussed the general value of the inauguration of manufacturing enterprises in the United States, then in the main an agricultural country, claiming that they would insure a reliable market for agricultural produce. The duties Hamilton proposed were not half so high as those of the tariff of 1846, the model Democratic tariff of the first six decades of our history. The tariff of 1791, with an average of 11 per cent. was increased in 1792 on the basis of Hamilton's proposals to an average of 13½ per cent. When it is stated that the duties of the present Republican tariff range from 50 to more than 100 per cent it will be seen how infinite a chasm exists between the protection of Alexander Hamilton and the protection of Nelson Dingley.

If Alexander Hamilton could from the grave observe the exorbitant schedules of the Dingley bill, the monopolies and great establishments that have fed upon its abnormal charges, the disappearance of competition, the perversion of his conception of better markets for agricultural produce, the prevalence of conditions wherein American farmers are compelled to purchase the necessities of life in restricted, tariff-burdened markets, in which the manufacturers are shielded from competition by the law, and sell the products of their toil in the open markets of the world, subject to unlimited competition, he would utterly condemn the fabric of industrial oppression which has been erected in his name. [Applause.]

But despite the favorable language of the preamble of the tariff of 1789, despite the arguments of Hamilton, despite the utterances and efforts of Washington, of Adams, of Madison, and of Jefferson, despite the formation of societies for the promotion of manufactures and the flooding of Congress with petitions for indulgent legislation, the United States remained for nearly twenty years after 1789 on the whole an agricultural and seafaring country. The wars which in this epoch distracted Europe made the United States the only neutral power of importance, the sole carrier of European trade. American capital found promising investment in the world's carrying trade, and the American flag became the commercial monarch of the sea.

The agricultural products of the young Republic were furnished profitable markets in the warring countries and their dependencies. In consequence manufactures languished.

During this period twelve tariff acts were passed with successively increasing schedules, the rates of 1808 being almost triple the rates of 1789. While in some instances these increases were made with undoubtedly protective intent, they were enacted mainly to meet the growing financial needs of a new and expanding country.

The close of this era saw the abrupt termination of the conditions which distinguished it.

The fierceness of the European conflict led to a series of retaliatory measures by the Governments of England, France, and the United States, which, beginning with the English orders in council in 1806 and 1807 blockading continental ports, the Berlin and Milan decrees of Napoleon in 1807 blockading the British Isles and denationalizing ships engaged in British commerce, the embargo and nonintercourse acts of Jefferson in 1807 and 1809, and ending with the declaration of war between the United States and England in 1812, destroyed our foreign trade, isolated the American Republic for almost a decade, and left the American people dependent solely on native strength and resource.

It was during these years that manufacture struck permanent root in the industrial life of the country. During this era of segregation manufacture provided the principal employment of capital and free labor. The epoch was one of transition for American industry from the household to the capitalistic stage. The stoppage of imports produced a heavy demand for domestic commodities, especially those of immediate necessity and use, for which the people had relied almost entirely on the foreign supply, and prices of manufactured articles rose enormously. The growth of American manufacture was so astonishing as to cause Niles in 1812 to exclaim that it was without parallel in the world. The peace of 1815 found large and populous sections of the country devoted principally to manufacture.

At this juncture American manufacture met the determining crisis of its history. With the advent of peace came a flood of merchandise from Europe. Prices fell, and American manufacture in its immaturity was at the mercy of European establishments. American industry faced extermination. In his message of December, 1815, President Madison directed the attention of Congress to the threatened calamity and recommended a tariff sufficiently high to shield the young industries from the older rivals across the sea until the former could become strong enough to take care of themselves. The country without division recognized the justice of Madison's recommendation, and the tariff of 1816, the first American tariff designed expressly for protection in the true and economic sense—by no means the present Republican sense—was the result.

By that act the level of duties was raised to 20 per cent and the preservation of American industry was assured through Democratic legislation. I have followed with some detail the economic history of the country prior to the tariff of 1816 in order to show that the Democratic party saved American industry in its most critical moment, forty years before the Republican party was born [applause], and to demonstrate the fact that the Democratic party extended tentative protection to American manufactures at the only period and under the only conditions in which sound principles of political economy and administrative justice would permit its application. [Applause.]

Let me submit in this connection the views of John Stuart Mill, perhaps the clearest thinker and certainly the leading political economist of the nineteenth century:

> The only case in which [illegible] of political economy protecting [illegible] a young and struggling industry, is when the [illegible] in its [illegible] to the circumstances [illegible] another in a state of [illegible] from long [illegible]
> [illegible] advantage on one part, or disadvantage on the other, [illegible] acquired skill and experience [illegible] ground [illegible] after a time he [illegible] good [illegible] for a fair trial of what they are capable of accomplishing. [Mill's Principles of Political Economy, p. [illegible]]

The doctrine of Mill was applicable to the United States in the third decade of its growth. The protection which he advocated was the protection of Madison, of Monroe, of Jackson, of Crawford, and of Calhoun. It was protection in the sense of the temporary encouragement of industry in its cradle and not protection in the Republican sense of permanent tribute to industry in its power. [Applause.] It was adapted to a stage of economic advancement that has long since passed away, its necessity having ceased more than seventy years ago.

To show the gulf between the rational theories of the Democratic party during the childhood of American industry and the illogical and superfluous protection of Republicanism to-day it needs only to be remarked that John Stuart Mill and the other masters of economic science regarded protection as allowable in order to guard young industries from the superior experience and skill of established European rivals, while the Republican party, reversing the position, advocates protection under the farcical pretention that it shields our industries from the inferior skill, the "pauper labor," of foreign manufactures. The idea of "pauper labor" in the mechanic arts and industrial pursuits is a fundamental Republican fallacy. Skilled labor, the labor which is the combined result of mental acumen and manual dexterity, is never "pauper" labor. The skill which enables its possessor to enter the higher grades of industrial work is incompatible with the idea of "pauper labor."

The division of labor made possible by the training and experience of the skilled workman implies a standard of living which "pauper labor" can never attain, and constitutes the basis of the industrial and moral progress of advanced communities everywhere. The negro labor of the South is largely "pauper labor," and it is notoriously impossible of utilization in the factory. When it reaches sufficient excellence to admit it to the factory it is no longer "pauper labor." It is true that the skilled labor of one country may be superior to that of another, and it is also true that American skilled labor is so superior to foreign skilled labor that although the former receives a nominally higher wage, yet when the amount and quality of its products are compared with the amount and quality of those of the latter, it will be at once observed that American labor is paid a smaller compensation than foreign labor.

If the American laborer makes in a day an article or set of articles worth $8 for a wage of $2, and the foreign laborer makes in a day an article or set of articles worth $3 for a wage of $1, the American laborer gets less for his work than the foreigner. The actual labor cost of a ton of steel rails and billets in this country, basing the statement on the statistics for 1901, is lower than in England, although American wages are nominally higher than English wages.

The actual cost of the labor required to produce a certain grade of shoes in Massachusetts is 40 cents per pair, while in Germany the same labor costs 38 cents, although American wages are nominally higher than German wages. American labor is underpaid, not foreign labor. There is no competition to be feared from the alleged "pauper labor" of foreign factories. The cry of "pauper labor" is a political canard devised to frighten the laboring man into the support of the Republican ticket. How long will he permit his intelligence to be thus grossly insulted? [Loud applause.]

For several years after 1816 the protective protection of Madison were continued. But it became evident, as early as 1820, that the protected industries, with a few exceptions, had [illegible] from the Federal Treasury. [illegible] the country to the [illegible] of youth and [illegible] with the [illegible] of [illegible] to protect the [illegible] of [illegible] of the country [illegible] of [illegible] of [illegible] of the Wilson law or with Democratic ascendency, the Democratic party was severely defeated in November of 1894.

It is the fashion of Republican orators to speak with melancholy of the hard times which they claim to have arisen from the Wilson bill. In the present session the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS], the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT], the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] have with an eloquence worthy of a more fruitful theme repeated this monotonous assertion. Not one of them has dared to enter upon a fair and analytical discussion of the Wilson bill. They have ignored the simple fact of human credulity [illegible] by a [illegible] to the depression with which the Wilson bill was by chance synchronous. For Republican enlightenment I commend the words of history as outlined by Johnston and Conway, [illegible] political and fiscal [illegible] in America. [illegible] concerning the origin of the panic of the early [illegible] follows:

When [illegible] hundred million, and in July, [illegible]

[illegible]

Whether Johnston's statement is entirely accurate or not is unnecessary to say. I [illegible] one of our most reputable authorities.

In the same connection Taussig asserts that the Wilson bill—

[illegible] worst [illegible] of the worst [illegible] of the [illegible] of the [illegible] period.

So the Democratic party and the Wilson bill are answerable in no way for the financial and commercial disturbances of a decade ago.

The contest of 1896 centered upon the money question. Such was the vehemence of the controversy that the tariff was given practically little consideration. The success of the Republican party in 1896 was not a partisan success. It was the triumph of a monetary doctrine for which unlimited numbers of the people voted regardless of previous political alignment. It was in no sense an indorsement of the party record or the tariff tenets of Republicanism.

Notwithstanding this fact, the Republican party [illegible] in 1897 by the prompt enactment of the Dingley tariff bill, which not only restored, but in many instances increased the rates of 1890. The Dingley bill laid upon the American people the highest tariff taxes civilization has ever known. It is the boldest example of [illegible] which any country, whether monarchy, kingdom, or republic, has ever witnessed. It [illegible] upon the statute without substantial change to-day—the scarlet sin of American politics.

The election of 1900 was determined by issues inherited from the Spanish-American war and [illegible] the Dingley bill, the demands for revision have multiplied. The American people have [illegible] to plead, they have begun to frown. We are told by the Republicans that there shall be no revision at the present session, and history warns us that there will be no revision by Republicans at future sessions. [Loud applause.]

The Dingley tariff system is the child of violence, the progeny of war. It is a heritage of blood. By virtue of its aid the protected interests have perpetuated and augmented the exorbitant rates of the frightful conflict of nearly four decades ago. Through the tariff they have secured immunity from foreign competition, and through the trust, the tariff's offspring, they have suppressed domestic rivalry. Thus Republican legislation is pouring the national wealth into the possession of the few. And with an insolence unequaled in all former instances of legislative tyranny the Republican party faces the election of 1904 with the defiant policy of "stand pat."

As an evidence of the dissatisfaction within Republican ranks on account of this attitude, I quote an excerpt from the February (1904) Review of Reviews, whose editor is a [illegible] Republican:

Another prominent [illegible] of Mr. [illegible] with [illegible] worthy of a more [illegible] discussion of [illegible] of Democratic [illegible] with which the [illegible] to the depression [illegible] Republican [illegible] the tenets of history as outlined by [illegible] political and fiscal [illegible] concerning the origin of the panic of the early [illegible] follows:

If, Mr. Chairman, this Republican policy of [illegible] had in the past prevailed, no [illegible] years, and [illegible] would [illegible]

[illegible] accomplished, and resolution unpatriotic would make the race of men a rout ignoble, a multitude depraved. The cry for freedom would have died unechoed in the muskentry of revolution, and Bunker Hill would be a British promenade. Liberty, unknown in human institutions, would [illegible] and steam, the builders of our modern development, would sleep within their native elements. The voice of Republicanism is the voice of the past. [Applause.]

The Democratic party fronts the opportunity of the time. The [illegible] Republicans will not revise the tariff with sincerity. They know from history and experience that Democratic principles alone have [illegible] the problems of our customs laws. In every contest where [illegible] the issue of tariff reform is to write the [illegible] warrant of the Republican party. [Loud and prolonged applause on the Democratic side.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HENRY of Connecticut having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a [illegible] from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 11837) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, asked a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and had appointed [illegible] by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PROCTOR, Mr. HANSBROUGH, and Mr. SIMMONS [illegible] on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. [illegible]) granting additional lands adjacent to its site to the University of Montana.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives [illegible] the following titles, and asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. PATTERSON as the conferees on the part of the Senate:

S. 1543. An act granting an increase of pension to William W. Jackson; and

S. 3274. An act granting an increase of pension to Jane I. Long.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to bills of the following titles, [illegible] House of Representatives, [illegible] had appointed Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. PATTERSON as the conferees on the part of the Senate:

H. R. 3032. An act granting an increase of pension to William F. [illegible];

H. R. 9583. An act granting an increase of pension to James H. Harris;

H. R. 8876. An act granting an increase of pension to Jonathan J. Smith;

H. R. 5555. An act granting an increase of pension to James R. Haupt;

H. R. 5067. An act granting an increase of pension to Franklin Moore;

H. R. 4526. An act granting an increase of pension to William J. Shepard;

H. R. 4251. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph Hinkle;

H. R. 4136. An act granting an increase of pension to Caleb Arnett;

H. R. 2923. An act granting an increase of pension to John G. Fairchild;

H. R. 2920. An act granting an increase of pension to Daniel W. [illegible];

H. R. [illegible]. An act granting an increase of pension to John Watt; and

H. R. 2477. An act granting an increase of pension to Frank J. [illegible].

[illegible] also announced that the Senate had passed bills of [illegible] in which the concurrence of the House of R[illegible] was requested:

S. [illegible] An act to provide for sittings of the circuit and district courts of [illegible] northern district of Florida in the city of Fernandina, in [illegible];

[illegible] that a term of the circuit and dis[illegible] of the United States for the district of Vermont may be held at Newport;

S. 3079. An act for the relief of James [illegible];

S. 3218. An act for the relief of Civil Engineer P. C. Asserson, [illegible];

[illegible] An act providing for the erection of a public building in the city of Bluefield, W. Va.

The [illegible] announced that the Senate had passed the following [illegible]; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

[illegible] Resolution No. 49.

[illegible] (concurring), That the [illegible] senate the bill of the Senate (S. 3323) [illegible] ed lands on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation, to correct a [illegible]

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Th[illegible]

[illegible] Mr. Chairman, I yield thirty [illegible] eman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS].

[illegible] CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for thirty minutes.

[illegible] ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, with [illegible] use I have learned the [illegible] can render this body and the [illegible] efforts very largely to the work that [illegible] committees to which he has been assigned and try to [illegible] Hou[illegible] for the ben fit of his constituents. It has been my lot to [illegible] years on the Committee on Foreign Affairs and on [illegible] on Immigration. In the last Congress two bills of great [illegible] affecting the welfare of our country were had [illegible] Chinese-exclusion act be[illegible] Committee on Foreign Affairs and the immigration act [illegible] we sat in the Committee on Foreign Affairs [illegible] the fears expressed by people on the Pacific coast in [illegible] to the yellow peril. We heard from the various labor [illegible] the protests of the [illegible] and fruit grower [illegible] saying that it was [illegible] to secure adequate [illegible] run their work[illegible] their crops. We [illegible] fairest way of all the conflicting interests on the Pacific coast of our country, and I regret to say that that bill failed of passage in the Senate; but, Mr. Chairman, in regard to the bill on immigration, and from the information that was submitted to our committee by those who appeared before it, in my judgment there is a greater peril to our country than that which threatens it from the East.

The Mongolian may come into our country, but he does not assimilate with our people; he does not have any social or moral influence in this country, because, being a race apart, that communism will not exist with which [illegible] will have force. But, Mr. Chairman, there is a tide of immigration pouring into our country which is increasing at a rate that, unless your attention happened to have been called to it, would not strike the ordinary observer. It was the facts, Mr. C[illegible], which were laid before our committee [illegible] which exists on the Atlantic coast. In the present year that has just passed 1,000,000 of immigrants entered the ports of the United States; two-thirds of th[illegible] came from southern Europe. Those [illegible] as a class are not desirable immigrants, and yet that is a section that furnishes two-thirds of those who come into our ports. Why are these immigrants not desirable?

I insert a table from the report of the Commissioner-General for the year ended June 30, 1903, which bears on this subject strongly.

It is not only that these people are so diseased that careful inspection is needed to exclude them, but with all care some escape and enter the country to spread it among our people. But they are not of a prudent and thrifty class, as the following will show:

It is upon this state of facts that I [illegible] this House, to which I wi[illegible] which is now before the Committee on Immigration and has [illegible] received there with considerable favor, and I am in hopes it will be reported favorably for your action thereon. In the last fiscal year the increase in immigration has been 208,303, a matter of 38 per cent, and this increase is mostly [illegible] Europe. Five hundred and seventy-two thousand seven hundred and twenty-six came from Italy, Russia, and Austria-Hungary. These people, according to the reports of the Commissioner of Immigration, are [illegible] judgment, is greater than that of the M[illegible] who escape the inspection at Ellis Island and the other ports can spread these diseases among our people.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I would rather not be interrupted.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. I would like to ask a single question and I will not interrupt further.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Very good.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. I ask for infor[illegible] whether or not, under the laws these immigrants who are afflicted with [illegible]

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. There is undoubtedly provision for that, [illegible] guage of the law, or however good may be the [illegible] inspectors, many do escape, and when you turn to the north numbers come in through Canada, which is practically an open door.

In the last twenty years the influx into [illegible] has vastly increased. In 1880 35 per cent of the population lived in cities of 4,000 and upward; in 1890 it [illegible] cent and is steadily increasing. In addition to this influx into the [illegible] as the foreign immigrants, especially from southern Europe, [illegible] I insert a table showing the foreign-born population [illegible]

Mr. Chairman, the ratio of paupers that come from those countries and have to be deported is very large. I will not weary the House with statistics. I have them here, and I will publish them in my remarks. They substantiate the statements that I make. The number of immigrants that have to be deported is very large from this section, but the great evil that is inflicted upon this country by those that come from southern Europe is that they remain almost entirely in the cities. They do not go out and occupy the farm lands, and when we know that in our own country, according to the reports of the census, the tendency is for people in the country to migrate toward the cities, you have got a double influx pouring into those thickly populated centers which certainly does not tend to the welfare of our people. I have collected some statistics from the State of New York which are official and which I believe to be correct. They show the influence and the result that this migration has upon our people.

Of course I admit it is greater in the State of New York, because it is nearer to the principal entrepôt where all these aliens land, but it is in proportional extent to Pennsylvania, and Massachusetts, and Rhode Island, and New Jersey, and Delaware, and the evil spreads in lesser degree throughout all the country. Those that entered in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, were 401,057. It is a well-established fact that in a little over a year 580 of these became a public charge upon the almshouses of New York. It costs the State of New York $80 a head for alms to sustain a pauper, and that puts a charge on that State of $46,400 [illegible] in which they have [illegible] In New York almshouses there were 66,400 in the year ending September 30, 1901, and of these 37,422 were foreign born. More than one-half of the inmates of the almshouses of the State of New York were of foreign birth and being supported at a cost to the State of $15,941,622, and this is [illegible] expended in the insane asylums, where almost the same ratio prevails.

The value of the property of the public charitable institutions of the State of New York is $68,177,725, and at 5 per cent that represents a cost of $3,408,886, or a total of $24,350,580 that it costs the State of New York to support these people in its charitable institutions. Taking that as against the figures I have already given, it makes a cost of $12,000,000 annually to the State of New York to support these immigrants which have so recently come into the country. Surely this is a showing that should [illegible] the people of the United States to pause and think why this refuse of Europe, these paupers, who should be a charge on their own country, should be dumped on this Republic of ours, no matter how great our resources or how rich we may be. It is a well-known fact that a few years ago Switzerland was detected in shipping, at the expense of the State, the paupers of that Republic and landing them on our shores to be supported by us. In the insane asylums of New York the inmates are increasing at the rate of 700 a year, and half of these are aliens, by actual sta[illegible] At this rate in ten years it will cost the United States at large $50,000,000 annually to support the insane aliens. In spite [illegible] that I have given, they do not include the charitable institutions and homes for children, which cost the State of New York $20,880,[illegible] annually. The alien paupers in the State of New York are increasing at the rate of 1,200 a year.

Now, Mr. Chairman, from a selfish standpoint we might shut [illegible] up in our shells and say, "Well, New York gets all of [illegible] and let her pay for it." But it is not limited to New York. These people are shipped out from that State. They go to other States and cities, and they become charges on the communities and inflict a tax upon the people of the United States at large. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SULLIVAN] inquired a few moments ago if we had not laws by which to prevent the in[illegible] of undesirable aliens. We have, Mr. Chairman. An act which was prepared with the greatest care last year from suggestions made by the Bureau of Immigration, by the Solicitor, by the efforts of the members of the committee, and by those who [illegible] interested in this work was passed; but we all know the inefficiency of laws, even with a desire on the part of the inspectors to do their duty. When these aliens arrive at the port of New York they are marked undesirable. Then there is an appeal, and they go up before the commission appointed by the Commissioner of Immigration. Then the local politicians and friends come forward. They pledge they will give them situations. They make them presents of money. Political influence is brought to bear to have them passed, and out of a large proportion that on the first examination are marked undesirable a very small percentage is actually deported.

In the year ending June 2, 1902, less than four-fifths of 1 per cent were refused admittance. The statistics show that 30 aliens out of every 10,000 who come into this country become, in the course of time, objects of charity, while only 9 out of 10,000 natives become paupers and a charge on the community.

I endeavored to get some statistics in regard to my own State of Pennsylvania on this subject, but I was not able to do so they, not having been collated with a view to furnishing information on this question. But my attention was called a short time ago to the facts disclosed in an effort to clear the streets of the city of Philadelphia of mendicants, when the secretary of the organized charity of that city made a report, founded on the collection of his statistics, that 95 per cent of the beggars on the streets of Philadelphia were of foreign birth. It will thus be seen that when we come to look at this matter from a practical standpoint it is a most serious question.

Mr. Chairman, there were great difficulties presented in meeting the question how to overcome this evil. Our Republic is open to every honest, healthy man, to every man who desires to secure political and religious freedom, and I should be the last man who would want to shut the door against any of that class. But the difficulty has been how to leave the door open to the desirable ones and how to close it against those whom we do not want.

I insert a table showing the sources of our immigration.

The educational test is proposed to relieve this inflow; but, as we all know, that meets great objection from a great number of people, because they say we want manual labor in this country perhaps more greatly than we want any other class of labor. The farmer calls out for help. Last spring in Kansas they were offering $1 a day for hands in the [illegible] laborers. The builders of railroads, the diggers of canals, the builders of houses are always making this demand. Under the system of education in our country we are always lifting up each successive generation. If society is not supplied at the low strata with manual labor, it will, in my judgment, become top-heavy. We want immigrants from northern Europe. We want the Britons, and the Irish, and the Swedes, and the Germans, and the Danes. They are glorious people—sturdy and hardy and sound. We want them. We are prepared to welcome them to our country.

But when we come to this class from southern Europe—and two-thirds of our immigrants come from there—the question is how can we cut down the immigration from this source?

I have introduced the subjoined bill:

A bill (H. R. 12903) to limit the immigration of aliens into the United States.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it shall be unlawful hereafter for more than 50,000 aliens from any one nation to enter the United States during any fiscal year: Provided, That said restriction shall not apply to citizens and domiciled residents of the Dominion of Canada, the Republic of Mexico, and the Republic of Cuba, nor to persons coming temporarily in the pursuit of their business as representatives of foreign commercial or mercantile

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania be kind enough to indicate what in his opinion are the undesirable quantities of immigrants from Austria, Italy, and Russia? It is my belief that these people are willing to work on the homes of the West and the South.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I will refer the gentleman for full information to the report of the Commissioner of Immigration; it would take me some time to answer the gentleman's question fully. My understanding is that [illegible] immigrants stay in the cities. They do not go to the farms of the West and the South which the gentleman speaks of. There is still room in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania for a [illegible] of immigrants to have a [illegible] country [illegible] As a matter of fact, the immigrant does not stay in the cities that he enters upon his landing. They go West and South. They crowd the cities. [illegible] on the contrary, and for these reasons they are not a des[illegible] class of foreigners.

Mr. CHAIRMAN, said is the record which is attracting attention all over the country. [illegible] in any part of the country which is [illegible] a [illegible] well [illegible] an editorial or some [illegible] bearing on this question. The President of the [illegible] in his last annual message called the attention of Congress to this question, and I think his views are particularly sound. I read from his language:

We should have none of the right kind, and we should have none of the wrong kind. The need is to devise some system by which undesirable immigrants shall be kept out entirely, while desirable immigrants are properly distributed throughout the country.

The National Board of Trade at its meeting held in Washington January 19, 1904, passed the following resolutions:

[illegible]

Whereas [illegible] proposing an educational test [illegible] necessary, and might tend to the [illegible] and

Whereas the report of the Walker Commission of 1890-91 and that of the Senate committee on immigration of 1893 were opposed to Consular inspection at the ports of origin, [illegible] to be impracticable; and

Whereas no effort has ever been made, except by private [illegible], to direct immigration [illegible] at ports, thereby relieving the congestion in the larger cities. Therefore, be it

Resolved, That Congress be urged to devise some other means for the [illegible] relieve the [illegible] of.

Now, Mr. Chairman, [illegible] I would [illegible] want to [illegible] have [illegible] it was [illegible] were [illegible] of [illegible] ate or our race. Our [illegible] se qualities that go to form a great people and make a great [illegible]

The people who come in here with ideas that do not assimilate [illegible] re is no coming t[illegible] fusion of [illegible] ways and [illegible] partly of our own race. The danger from these latter, in my [illegible] t, is greater, as I say, than the yellow peril which threat- [illegible] at [illegible] as which, in my judgment, should appeal to them. [Ap- [illegible] rty [illegible] N. The [illegible] ts [Mr. [illegible] irman, I trust I shall [illegible] rowth of this [illegible] s delivered [illegible] of [illegible] on [illegible] l in this city and in [illegible] at was to be the growth of the [illegible] that this city had been laid out upon a m[illegible] rry [illegible] lecture in the Old World, and th[illegible] laid out upon a plan which was great [illegible] the w[illegible] growth [illegible] awaited this nation.

The passing of that centennial celebration in 1900 was the appointment of the [illegible] as "[illegible] to take [illegible] r the re[illegible] of the city of Wa[illegible] of the national [illegible] At the [illegible] of the appointment of the commission the Institute of American Architects, which for [illegible] at this time was in session in the city of Washington, furnished to the service of the Government the most capable men who ever served upon any commission.

They selected Mr. Daniel H. Burnham, of Chicago, Ill., who had charge of the work at the time of the Columbian Exposition, which attracted universal attention from all parts of the world. They also selected Mr. Charles F. McKim, of New York, who stands, perhaps, at the head of the architects in America, whose work we are all proud of; and I recall in connection with Mr. McKim those two great architectural successes which he has completed in New England, one being the capitol of the State of Rhode Island and the other that magnificent library in the city of Boston, of which we are so justly proud. Besides these two was selected that eminent landscape gardener Mr. Frederick Law Olmsted, jr., who resides in my Congressional district and who has achieved a reputation second to none as a landscape gardener in this country.

Let me say right here, in connection with Mr. Olmsted, that it is to him, perhaps more than to any other one, that we are in[illegible] for that magnificent park system which surrounds the city of Boston to-day, and upon which the people of that district have [illegible] nearly [illegible] for its development. Alongside of [illegible] artists in their particular profession was [illegible] Mr. Augustus St. Gaudens, who stands as the best sculp[illegible] not only in the United States, but who compares favorably with any sculptor in the world.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there was a commission of the four best men in their respective fields of endeavor with a view of laying out the city of Washington for its future growth and development. Let it be said to the credit of those gentlemen that they served for an entire year; that they crossed the ocean and visited London, Paris, Venice, Vienna, Budapest, and Berlin, and gave to this Government a year of their best endeavor and toil and never accepted or would accept a single penny as compensation for their services. [Applause.]

I hold before me this report, which was published in 1902, as The Park System of the District of Columbia. When that report went out to the American Republic it was received with the greatest favor. It was received not only favorably by the rich, but also by the poor, and there was no American citizen, I care not where he lived, that was not proud of the very prospect that Washington was to become the finest city in the world.

I am perfectly well aware, Mr. Chairman, that the initiative toward this movement in selecting this park commission and in [illegible] this body, but origi[illegible] I think it was a misfortune that [illegible] original resolution was not a joint resolution, and that this [illegible] did not have an [illegible] nity to participate in its adoption. But I think it is but fair to say that even if we had participated in it we should have reached the same conclusion that was reached by the Senate committee. Now, the claim is made, and that is the reason why I bring this matter up at this present time, Mr. Chairman, the claim is made that we are departing from the plan as laid out by that commission.

It is claimed that we are locating buildings to-day or proposing to locate buildings in total disregard of that magnificent [illegible] which to my mind has been indorsed and fully [illegible] the American people. I read this morning the proceedings which took place in another body with reference to the location of a public building, and every member of that body had his own opinion as to where the building should be located. One said it should be located here and another said it ought to be located th[illegible] and it is claimed that the building for the Department of A[illegible]ure, which is to be located in the Mall, is to be locat[illegible] in absolute disregard of the lines as laid out by the park commission.

I have here before me an editorial which appeared but a few [illegible] ld, published in the city of Boston, [illegible] city to Washington," and I read this not simply [illegible] ng argument against any variation from the plan as [illegible] by the commission, but I read it for the purpose of [illegible] to-day is attracted to [illegible] he national capital of the country. This ed- [illegible]

It is no [illegible] to characterize as a calamity to the national capital [illegible] ted upon the entire nation through the harm worked upon its [illegible] be the grandest avenue in the world, running from the Capitol to the Washington Monument, with drives, promenades, groves, and greensward inclosed in a width of 1,000 feet, the work designed by L'Enfant himself.

[illegible] for the [illegible] of this [illegible] It would be a great [illegible] work if we were to be [illegible] people of [illegible] the [illegible] Mall. [illegible] ways as to permit in removing the [illegible] Mall. [illegible] a [illegible] and to [illegible] from the Mall certain qualities of design dependent upon retain- [illegible]

[illegible] originally planted for both by the founder of Washington and by the present [illegible] were [illegible] transplanted [illegible] It is [illegible] to be [illegible] and [illegible] as a public park, [illegible] without [illegible] a year of their time to a task [illegible] and of a [illegible] in a [illegible] They are [illegible] of the present by a [illegible] and [illegible] commission [illegible]

The decisive [illegible] in this matter lies with the President. Mr. Roosevelt is [illegible] have [illegible] great [illegible] Congress. [illegible] it is to be hoped he [illegible] to the [illegible] and [illegible] of the [illegible] plan to the latter [illegible] in the [illegible] of a new de- [illegible] by avoiding his [illegible] responsibility [illegible] for the purpose of determin- [illegible] and the [illegible] of proposed improvements [illegible] Commission. Place [illegible] the [illegible] portunity [illegible] his name [illegible] than any President since Washington.

I have not taken the time to read all that editorial, but I do propose to insert it in my remarks as a strong argument not only in support of the plan as adopted by the commission, but as a strong expression of what the popular sentiment is upon this subject. Now, I appreciate, Mr. Chairman, that the plan as laid out by this park commission is a most elaborate plan. I appreciate that it will require millions and tens of millions of dollars to carry it into effect. I also appreciate that it is a plan which is not to be carried to its fulfillment this year or next year or in this generation, but I believe that the American people do insist that Washington in the future shall be developed by no haphazard plan.

I believe that the American people do insist that some definite and permanent plan shall be agreed upon before we enter upon the construction of these large departmental and executive buildings which we have in view for construction in the near future. More than that, I believe that the American people insist that in building up and developing the city of Washington that the plan of the founder of the city—the Father of his Country—as laid out shall be adhered to. We have done much here in Washington to make this a great and a beautiful city. In 1848 we commenced the construction of the Washington Monument, which has been a great feat of engineering and which required nearly half a century to carry forward to its fulfillment.

We have entered upon a magnificent park system, and the Government to-day is the owner of nearly 2,000 acres of land on the west capable of splendid development as an outlying park. We have commenced the reclamation of the Potomac Flats, and that is going forward; but what I want to see is a plan substantially the same as the plan of the park commission, which shall construct a splendid Mall, whether it be 800 or 1,000 or 1,[illegible] feet, running directly from the Capitol down to the river, and the river spanned by a splendid memorial to the great martyr to his country, Abraham Lincoln. If that plan can be carried out with the other features embodied in it, we shall satisfy the sense and the [illegible] of the people of this country.

Now, I want to say just a word, Mr. Chairman, along another line. I am aware that Members of this House will say this is a most [illegible] plan. It contemplates [illegible] expenditure of $100,000,000, possibly $200,000,000, for its development, and the [illegible] "What good reason can we give to the country for the expenditure of so large a sum of money for the development of a single city, even though it be the national capital?" Now, let us look at this from the material point of view. Everybody admits that the development of Washington along the lines of this plan as proposed by the commission would be in every sense [illegible] that we should be proud of it; but the reply is, "Are we justified in the expenditure of these large sums of money?"

In other words, Is this House justified in committing Congress to a plan which during a generation, or two generations, may result in the expenditure of $100,000,000? I want to call your attention, Mr. Chairman, to the French people—a thrifty people, a people that have as good a knowledge of human nature as any people upon the face of the globe. The French people have developed their splendid capital along lines largely identical with the lines laid out by the park commission, and what has been the effect?

To-day travelers from all parts of the world who go to Europe

visit the French capital. They spend their money at the French capital, and it is said on good authority that [illegible] every year carry across the Atlantic $150,000,000 and expend it in the cities of Europe. Now, who gets the benefit of that? You [illegible], in the first place, that at least one-third if not two-thirds of that entire amount is expended at the gay French capital. The other goes to Vienna, to Vienna, to those cities where the best art in the highest degree.

You can go back a little farther in history, to the Greek people, where art was born, and what have you to say as to the [illegible] Greece, which has been their Mecca, to view those wonderful works of art. If we were to develop Washington as it ought to be developed, we shall find that it would become a place [illegible] the resort of the American, but of people from all parts of the world.

We are still a young people. We have been passing through what may be called the material age. We are reaching now an age of art. Our artists, our sculptors, our painters are to-day rapidly among the best in the world. We are [illegible] to be [illegible] people, [illegible] to be what are called "[illegible] pictures." We are coming to that point where we can gather together the finest [illegible] there. We can make of Washington, with its talent and genius of the American people, the finest city in the world. We are already making it one of the finest cities in the world.

[illegible] which we can point for the history of the [illegible] people [illegible] and for which posterity will be grateful and [illegible] country and [illegible] representing the great Democracy [illegible] people. I say, my dear [illegible], I [illegible] if we expend the money [illegible] I want to see [illegible] national capital in reason [illegible] I believe to be a great people. [Applause.]

The American people have never been stingy in the expenditure of money when they believed that [illegible] Only the other day a bill passed [illegible] appropriation [illegible] building of the American Navy. I voted for that, as I [illegible] the money did [illegible] that the defense and protection of this country demanded it.

I would like to see that the time should come when the nations of Europe [illegible] and would allow us to have [illegible] and that [illegible] be paying [illegible] of the American people [illegible] the money of Europe and by the [illegible] dress of [illegible] be [illegible], or at least [illegible] to the nation of the better houses, to the higher tastes of the [illegible].

I believe the time will come, and I believe it will come in this country, when we shall see [illegible] and when we shall see a [illegible] of the fields of [illegible]. It will come in our day, but it will come [illegible] that day when the [illegible] expend money for the [illegible] to the American people [illegible] one country and because [illegible] this Congress [illegible] the development of the [illegible]. This is not a partisan question.

I have never yet made a political speech in this House [illegible] I have realized that I could not [illegible] convince my colleagues on the other side of the House [illegible] wrong or believe that I was right, and so I [illegible] the necessity for the consideration of political [illegible] state of affairs [illegible] at this session [illegible] made this move and [illegible] hope [illegible] we all believe, in [illegible] a prosperous [illegible] united and [illegible] this sort of [illegible] is the pride of every American citizen. [illegible]

Mr. PAUL E. Mr. Chairman, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. WILLIAMS.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, upon yesterday the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. [illegible], stated what is regarded as the true "Republican reciprocity" policy. I have found since then that there is another "Republican reciprocity" policy, that had been [illegible] by a [illegible] northwestern Senator in a speech made in the town of Boston. Upon yesterday I said that if the gentleman [illegible] reciprocity to noncompeting articles, such as the [illegible] territory and the complexity of our productions—agriculture and manufacturing—that I hardly knew of any article that would be [illegible].

I said that possibly [illegible] or breadfruit or guava might be [illegible]. I found this morning the [illegible] and fruit of the American [illegible] and [illegible] fruit and guava. And [illegible] us, we are [illegible] from Alaska. So that [illegible] having [illegible] the island, a [illegible] senator made a speech in Boston. It was [illegible]:

Let no fear [illegible]

order in a year?

Why, Colonel S[illegible] to that. You remember [illegible] Orient suffered [illegible].

Then this distinguished northwestern Senator goes on:

[illegible]

Now, this [illegible] reciprocity" is about this: The [illegible] his views upon M[illegible] in Great Britain and he [illegible] of [illegible] to the [illegible] ther. [illegible] to be this: Let Mr. [illegible] right anyhow, Chamberlain [illegible].

Now, in [illegible]. I found this morning the [illegible]

He has [illegible] Lyre." [Laughter.] I am afraid he is one of [illegible] Republicans, and that the signature refers to [illegible] of his past utterances concerning the "blessing [illegible] ff. [Laughter.]

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield thirty minutes to the [illegible] Kentucky [Mr. HOPKINS].

[illegible]. Mr. Chairman, on the 12th day of November, [illegible] on of this Congress, I [illegible] country, by allowing them to stem, twist, and [illegible] ts without being required to pay any tax or [illegible]. This bill, though limited in scope, was then [illegible] of its direct influence on the public revenues, which were falling below our largely increased expenditures, and over the opposition of the tobacco trust, which is to-day reaping such rich harvests from present conditions which they will vigorously oppose any [illegible] in. On the 17th day of the same month my colleague Mr. [illegible] E introduced a similar bill, and two days thereafter my fri[illegible] Mr. GAINES, from Tennessee, introduced a similar bill, and on [illegible] 21st of January, 1904, my w[illegible] ague Mr. STANLEY int[illegible] d a bill going still further on. You see we now have four [illegible] pending before this body all looking to the same [illegible] of our markets [illegible] r new fields of competition in the sale and [illegible] at and important [illegible].

I will say r[illegible] e that none of us are wedded to our particular [illegible] will [illegible] port any bill which will offer [illegible]. At the same time, w[illegible] and have impose[illegible] any tax or license on [illegible] it is [illegible] an unfair discrimination against one class of our farming and laboring people, it being the only direct product of the soil upon which the Government lays the hand of tribute. Although this unjust [illegible] ly an [illegible] who be[illegible] the support they were [illegible] as they had an open and free [illegible] fair and [illegible] on, in which to [illegible] the [illegible] gathered from [illegible] the [illegible] ement of the [illegible].

[illegible], sir, new [illegible] front them, a new enemy has arisen in their pathway, even more greedy and rapacious th[illegible] the revenue agent and the taxgatherer, and this is none of[illegible] which stalks into the market, brazen[illegible] "I will fix the prices of your la[illegible] the products of your soil: you must sell your tobacco to me at the prices I offer, for there is none other in the market to whom you can sell." Thus having dictated the price at which the farmer must give up the fruits of his toil, sweat, and labor, it turns to the public with equal affrontery and says to the consumer, "You must pay the price we ask, for no one else can supply your wants," presenting the spectacle of this heartless creature of the law robbing the farmer, when he [illegible] the prices of his [illegible] the cost of production, and an unprotected public, when it turns to sell it, at extortionate rates of profit.

Mr. Chairman, a very short experience has proven there can be but one solution of this problem, if left to work [illegible] and that is [illegible], and none other than [illegible] in this country, and the [illegible] transfer of the [illegible] manager living of the farmers and [illegible] in its fields, from their hands to the vaults of this monster of human genius, the tobacco trust, with its $189,000,000 of capital [illegible].

It [illegible] to discover the true condition of the tobacco [illegible] of the country just now, for the way [illegible] is [illegible] with [illegible] from these already long [illegible] people, beseeching that something be done to [illegible] their families by honest toil, the fruit of which they may be allowed to gather and enjoy. They ask [illegible] liberty, not that they be given any special privileges over any other class of men, but for simple justice, and that they be treated as the farmer who raises corn, wheat, oats, and rye.

[illegible] what [illegible] and how [illegible] they are [illegible] tive, I want to produce some newspaper [illegible] of the condition of the tobacco industry of the [illegible], and ask that they be made part of my remarks. First, I will read from the Courier-Journal, under date of October 22, 1903:

SHELBYVILLE, KY., October 22.

[Special.]—The Burley tobacco growers of Shelby County held an enthusiastic meeting here to-day and perfected the county organization of the Burley [illegible] A resolution was adopted which is formed to control the Burley [illegible] growers.

Mr. [illegible] Mr. John C. Crawford [illegible] Mr. W. H. Brown [illegible] and A. [illegible] were elected to [illegible] the organization of the association. Almost every one of the great number of growers [illegible] to the success of the organization, and the [illegible] with the brightest prospects in Shelby County, which is the largest [illegible] in the world.

[illegible] was unanimously adopted:

"[illegible] Association in mass meeting assembled [illegible] purpose of [illegible] the users of competition for the sale of manufactured [illegible].

"[illegible] demand a change in the laws or such [illegible] of the [illegible] to stem and twist [illegible] tax, and also that all taxes on such twisted or other [illegible] tobacco be repealed.

"We request our Members of Congress and all other officers of the Government [illegible] this work."

Here we have a few honest, fearless farmers who, like all true Kentuckians, are not willing to surrender without at least giving battle to the enemy, organizing themselves together and risking their fortunes upon the result of the contest, which they are [illegible] to fight out alone and single handed, can have but one [illegible] and that will be the triumph of wrong and robbery, of [illegible] avarice, over manhood, justice, and right, for in the end, in the light of past history, I am forced to predict that the Shelby County Tobacco Growers' Association will have to succumb to the overpowering influence of its dreaded enemy—the tobacco trust.

This conviction is strengthened by reading a letter written me by Mr. Leonard Drain, who was chosen chairman of that association, which I will ask the Clerk to read, and that it be made a part of my remarks.

BOX 161, EMINENCE, KY., November 19, 1903.

Hon. F. A. HOPKINS.

DEAR SIR: I notice with pleasure that you have introduced a bill in Congress looking to the relief of the tobacco growers, which we most heartily [illegible] the reasons for which I [illegible].

[illegible] the cost of the crop in the [illegible] $[illegible] per pound [illegible] and American Tobacco companies [illegible] manufacturing [illegible] the [illegible] tobacco [illegible] and [illegible] the crop and [illegible] on the [illegible].

[illegible] was made to Lorillard & Myers, of St. Louis, M[illegible] & Myers [illegible] it is sold by them [illegible] at a [illegible] per pound. [illegible] the beef that makes [illegible] manufacturers, yet it is [illegible] to [illegible] and the whole may have very recently [illegible].

[illegible] the grower from stemming and twisting [illegible] paying tax on the [illegible] a [illegible] paying tax. Where is [illegible]

[illegible] tax on manufacturing, because the trust could not have [illegible] manufacturers [illegible] for leaf [illegible]. It would [illegible] to make a present to us if manufacturers were required to pay a graded tax according to amount of business, until the grad-nal increase of taxes would make it unprofitable to do business beyond a certain and [illegible]

Something will have to be done or the tobacco grower will starve to death raising tobacco at the present prices, averaging less than $6 per hundred pounds for which hand crop and not be raised so as to make any profit for hand and [illegible] for the entire crop.

[illegible] from Shelby County, Ky. He understands [illegible] and I know was glad to help you in this good work.

I am, respectfully,

LEONARD DRANE.

It is but fair to say that the white burley tobacco, of which Mr. Drane speaks, is a very superior quality of tobacco, which is only grown in the rich blue-grass belt of Kentucky, and in a small way, along the borders of Ohio and Indiana. Because of its quality and the limited amount produced it has not suffered so badly in price as the cheaper grades raised in other sections, although Mr. Drane's letter says that it was at that time selling for 6 cents per pound, although it cost more to raise it, and that there was a profit in the crop at 9 cents a pound. So you can readily see the handsome profit our farmers were making when they sold their entire crop from 10 to 15 cents a pound, which was the case up to the time the tobacco trust came into existence.

Mr. Chairman, my constituents who live in the white burley district are peculiarly blessed when compared with their neighbors in other tobacco-growing sections, in this: The landowners are well to do and independent, as their lands are among the richest and most fertile in the world, producing an abundance of corn, wheat, oats, rye, hemp, hay, and blue-grass pastures famous the world over; but valuable as these crops are known to be, they are not equal to a crop of white burley tobacco in a market of fair and equal competition.

I turn and ask what is the condition of our less-favored neighbors in the southwest part of Kentucky and Tennessee, where they raise black tobacco, more than 80 per cent of which is shipped to foreign countries, and in that same country, about which my friend GAINES said in the course of his remarks the other day that the tobacco trust had laid it off into districts and sent but one agent into each district to buy from the farmers; that is to say, the Continental Tobacco Company was to have the sole right to buy all the tobacco in a certain district, the Imperial Tobacco Company in a certain other district, and the [illegible] which is the European tobacco trust, to take the remainder, thus forming and entering into a contract that neither one will enter the territory of the other to bid for or buy any tobacco. There is an instance where one of these agents called on a farmer who had two barns of tobacco, but on different sides of the public road. After the farmer had sold him the tobacco in one of the barns at the price the agent dictated, he then offered to sell him the other, to which the agent replied: "No; he could not buy it; that it was out of his territory; that the road was the dividing line."

This has but one meaning, Mr. Chairman, and that is, that the Continental Tobacco Company, the Imperial Tobacco Company, and the Italian Regies have divided up the assets of the tobacco growers in that section, designating by territorial lines what each is to have. As more than 80 per cent of all the tobacco raised in that district is exported to Europe in the leaf upon which the Government does not receive one cent of tax or duty, foreigners and strangers are reaping the benefit of the labor of our people according to the terms of their own dictation. Therefore, it is not strange that tobacco is selling for 3 cents a pound, which is not more than half the cost of production, nor is it strange that these people should be holding public meetings and petitioning Congress for relief, as is shown from the letter I quote herein from a Hopkinsville (Ky.) paper, which I ask the Clerk to read, and that the same be included in my remarks, as also a clipping from the Hopkinsville New Era.

GAINES [illegible], Secretary.

Three years ago independent tobacco dealers, warehouses, and factories were scattered all over the country and the farmers were paid profitable prices for their tobacco, but after the trusts came into existence they boldly said to the independent manufacturers: "You must join us or we will put you out of business." At first the independent men refused to be dictated to, but were soon [illegible] their business. To illustrate how the trusts proceeded to make good their threats, I will state the firm of Liggett & Myers, of St. Louis, Mo., referred to in the letter above of Mr. Leonard Drane, they being the largest firm and competitors of the trust, making among other brands a plug known as "Star" [illegible] which [illegible] of the oldest and most popular brands, sold in the market at that time at 39 cents per pound, made out of leaf for which they paid the farmer 7 cents per pound, and carrying a 12-cent war-revenue tax.

The trust put on the market a similar plug called "Battle Ax," and sent their agents out after the assets of Liggett & Myers, selling the brand first at 40 cents per pound, which was met by Liggett & Myers; then they reduced to 30 cents, 24 cents, and even down to 20 cents, which was below the cost of production. Then it was that Liggett & Myers saw the hopelessness of their fight and sold out their plant and business to the trust. Then, one by one, the smaller manufacturers were forced to the wall and many of them driven into bankruptcy, only a few of the smallest ones being left to buy the leaf from the farmer or independent warehouse dealers, and these will be put out of business any day the trusts conclude they are in their way, and the independent dealer and warehouseman, finding themselves without buyers or customers, took what they could get for the stock and closed the business. When all this was accomplished we first realized the conditions which exist to-day, of but one buyer and one seller of one of our country's greatest products.

Thus you see that this heartless, soulless monster and creature of the law [illegible] less than half [illegible] "The plug of 'Star' tobacco sold you by Liggett & Myers at 39 cents per pound you must pay me 43 cents for it, although 6 cents of the tax then on it has been taken off and it is made out of a leaf costing [illegible] Mr. Chairman, [illegible] South and West. I have a plug of it here which weighs heavier than I can, proving the reckless greed of those who make it. On one side of this plug are four marks, dividing it into five pieces, to retail at 10 cents each, and this was the way it was [illegible] before the Spanish-war tax was [illegible] in two.

After this was done five marks were placed on the other side, dividing the plug into six pieces, to sell at 10 cents each, which adds 16⅔ per cent to the cost of the consumer. Just why they chose to leave the old mark on it I can not tell, unless it is to show their utter contempt for the opinions of the people and to prove that they do as they please and that we can not help ourselves. Let us analyze this matter further and see just what their profit is on this piece of tobacco, that the man who chews it [illegible] what it contains, and that not only the farmer is being [illegible] but he himself is paying an exorbitant and unreasonable profit.

[illegible] intended to represent 1 pound of tobacco. In its [illegible] of wheat, sheep stomachs, licorice, bean soup, and [illegible] at the price of about [illegible] to the weight of the leaf [illegible] of a pound of leaf tobacco, costing 3 cents, [illegible] and waste, the other one-third made up of sirup, licorice, molasses, and bean soup, which could not cost more than [illegible] the entire ingredients in the plug cost only 4 cents [illegible] of it, which is 15 cents. When sold as it is at 43 cents, they have a net profit of nearly 200 per cent. This is called a [illegible] make out of this same 3-cent leaf they [illegible] I now turn to give you a few facts to show the [illegible] used to dispose of independent [illegible] I will read a [illegible] paper published at Hawesville, Ky., only a few [illegible]

Then, turning to the testimony before the Ways and Means Committee, [illegible] tobacco, bought and shipped there by independent dealers before the trust was formed, to be sold by European buyers as they had always done before; but when the trust was formed it took away from them their customers and [illegible] convenience suits them to do so. Indeed, it may be said that this tobacco, as well as that of Messrs. Stagnet & Co. and all others that are in our home warehouses, are as completely bottled up by the trust as Cervera's fleet was by Commodore Schley's in Santiago Bay. [Applause.]

The following clipping from the Washington Post shows that the [illegible] Virginia and North Carolina are equally as bad, as [illegible] will show:

TO LIMIT PRODUCTION.

RICHMOND, VA., November 8.

The season on the Richmond tobacco market [illegible] and [illegible] On [illegible] to [illegible] is expressed by farmers at the prices received. Many [illegible] would stop raising tobacco altogether if their land were [illegible] up.

[illegible] in this you can gather the same idea of the feeling and hardships which exist in the State of Virginia; and I now ask you what are you going to do for an industrious, honest people, who are willing and anxious to work, but tell you their lands won't bring anything but tobacco, and that at the present price it is selling for it does not bring the actual cost of raising it, which means that many of them are running in debt and that many of those who have homes will lose them, being forced to encumber them to live, while the tenants will be forced into the already crowded cities, the mines, or the factories, where they can secure labor at wages sufficient to support themselves and families.

In North Carolina the situation is still more serious and promises to provoke disorder, riot, and maybe bloodshed, for when the farmers, who are among our most orderly and law-abiding citizens, feel that their grievance is so great and that the preservation of themselves and families depends upon their deliberately destroying the property of their neighbor, as the following special from Raleigh, N. C., to the Washington Post shows:

RALEIGH, N. C., November [illegible]

The [illegible] the first tobacco [illegible] bed in their [illegible]

Is it [illegible] and [illegible] of hundreds of people [illegible] industry? There [illegible] is that you [illegible] ple. If [illegible] is true, your [illegible] of Internal Revenue [illegible] Ways and Means Committee that the [illegible] and that he did not think that the tax collected on all twisted tobacco would be as much as $2,000,000.

Then, you are not only taking the risk of losing still greater revenues by the curtailment of the crops in Kentucky and Tennessee, by agreement among the farmers to only put out a half a crop; in Virginia [illegible] of their farms and no longer able to raise it, and the [illegible] that the remaining power will limit the production in the State; and in North Carolina, where it is said the farmers have organized [illegible] programme out by invading the fields of those who will not act with them and destroy their beds. If, upon the other hand, you are the friend of the tobacco trust, with its $180,000,000 of capital stock, taken from the sweat and suffering of the laboring people of this country, for which it has not given them adequate returns, let me warn you that these same people will be here to punish your perfidy when the tobacco trust and hundreds of associates in theft and crime are dashed to pieces before the angry wave of public sentiment. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the tobacco grower is a peculiarly unfortunate being in this, that he is sandwiched between the Government tax collector on one side and the trust monopoly on the other, and that the Government has singled him out from among all the other [illegible] and laid tribute upon the fruits of his [illegible] which he has borne with patience and paid with cheerfulness, while at the same time he has been made the victim of the greed of his fellow-men, and no hand has been raised anywhere to shelter him from wrong, although adequate laws exist, which if only enforced for his protection as vigorously as they are against him when he is charged with their violation, his condition would be different and far better than to-day. To illustrate, I have known one instance of an old man being dragged from his home and family hundreds of miles away to answer the charge of violation of revenue laws, when the facts were that he had only sold a few twists of home-made tobacco in exchange for corn upon which to feed his family, a transaction that harmed no one nor the Government; and it is an everyday occurrence all over this country that plain, common people are being arrested, tried, and punished for violating the revenue laws.

On the other hand, our laws in the most positive terms denounce those who enter into unlawful combinations and trusts in restraint of trade, declaring that they shall, upon conviction, be punished by heavy fines or imprisonment, in the discretion of the court. This law was enacted on the 2d day of July, 1890, and while its provisions are violated a thousand times every day, I ask how many of these independent and lawless violators have been called to account, although they make no effort to conceal their contempt for its provisions and go on disregarding them in the very presence of the courts and the officers intrusted with its enforcement, not one of them being subjected to punishment, although the last Congress appropriated the magnificent sum of $500,000 to be used by the Attorney-General in the more rigid enforcement of the law against these offenders?

I ask, and the laborers and farmers all over this country demand to know, why it is that they are called to account and punished for a single and, I may say, oftimes technical violation of the law when it harms no one, while the organizers of these great engines of oppression engaged in wholesale wrong and robbery, responsible, as they are, for the large portion of discontent and suffering of which I have hardly given a glimpse, go unpunished and unrepaired. Although after six months the Attorney-General, who is interested with the enforcement of this law, reports that he had only spent $[illegible] of the sum set apart to be used in their prosecution, and [illegible] given where an effort has been made to [illegible] the provisions of the law.

Does such a record [illegible] of statements of Mr. BOUTELL, of Illinois, who said on the [illegible] day of January last in this House, while urging upon the [illegible] why the Republican party should be kept in power and Theodore Roosevelt [illegible] to the Presidency:

[illegible]

Now, let us see what right he had to make this statement. Of the [illegible] the speech of Mr. LITT[illegible] on the [illegible] day of February, 1903, [illegible] the different [illegible] of the people. And at that very time [illegible] entry [illegible] paper published the next week after he made that speech.

[illegible] ORES COAL COMBINE.

[illegible]

[illegible] papers

And to further remind him that during that same week I had [illegible] coal, and [illegible] would jostle [illegible] until it would [illegible] and girls who were running [illegible] and sacks gathering up [illegible] Among them was an old negro man who [illegible] he had [illegible] I turned [illegible] Where [illegible] the Attorney-General [illegible] go to [illegible] soup a salt [illegible] ation, or [illegible] when right here in [illegible] ly ply their unlawful [illegible] nt. Indeed, my friend [illegible]

To one [illegible] with the further [illegible] of these laws, and that will be that they will treat all [illegible] alike; and we believe that if those who violate [illegible] were arrested and placed in [illegible] criminal is it [illegible] anything he wished to do.

I have already said that we do not seek to shirk any obligations that we owe to our Government, however hard they may be, but we do most earnestly protest against [illegible] the support of which [illegible] our means, stealthily and secretly and among us pillaged, crushed, and ruined by these monsters of greed and avarice. [illegible] them, as you propose to do, and move them, the barrier between us and the free and open market, where we will be allowed to meet free and open competition, and we are abundantly able to take care of ourselves; but we can not live if we are forced any longer to have our crops so heavily taxed by the Government and at the same time be forced to pay a still larger tribute to the internal enemies of this same Government—the tobacco trusts.

The different laws and departmental regulations which have been made for the sale and handling of tobacco since 1862 have been so ably and completely discussed and their great injustice shown by my distinguished friend from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] that I need not refer to them any further.

While the tobacco grower very justly thinks the entire revenue law relating to the sale and manufacture should be repealed, still we do not ask that much. On the contrary, we only ask that the laws be so modified that the farmer who raises tobacco shall have the right to stem, twist, and sell his own crop in any quantity to whomsoever he chooses without being required to pay any tax or license thereon. This we believe will open new fields of the trade to the growers and enable them to get much better prices for their crops, as they would have an advantage of 6 cents per pound over the trust, and [illegible] with a smaller profit, while the [illegible] would also be [illegible] and [illegible] their profits, as they add fully [illegible]

Under the law the farmer can sell [illegible] ent paying any tax, but this is the [illegible] it in [illegible] by his servant or [illegible] words, is unjust, [illegible]

To show [illegible] put it up for sale, and any [illegible] him to the [illegible] ut. Now, all we ask is that we be allowed to take [illegible] which you see is bulky and hard to handle [illegible] and strip the [illegible] of it in this way (picking up a leaf and taking the stem [illegible] that the farmer sacks his corn and wheat, that [illegible] may be more conveniently and cheaply marketed. The [illegible] not raised for the straw, nor the corn for [illegible] It [illegible] ll his wheat in the straw or corn in [illegible]

I hold in my hand a handmade [illegible] of tobacco, which was presented by Mr. Washington, of Ten[illegible] he Ways and [illegible] we wanted [illegible] to do. I [illegible] at is not so good looking, given me by Mr. Flack, of H[illegible]le, Ky., who [illegible] the interest of the tobacco growers. It was not brought like the other piece to exhibit before the committee, but was the kind he used, and, as you see, he has been cutting off the ends. When he gave it to me he said, "Here is a [illegible] made for you [illegible] This [illegible] for fifty-one years, but, like all the other independ[illegible]co men, he could not stand the pressure of the [illegible] and had to give up his business or join hands with them, [illegible] in to do. I [illegible] of the pr[illegible]co. The negro who made this twist and gave it to Mr. Flack violated the law and is liable to a fine and imprisonment [illegible] When Mr. Flack gave it to me he violated [illegible] and I can not give it to one of you gentlemen [illegible] ty.

I ask [illegible] a law is based upon the spirit and justice of our inst[illegible] if you think it is meet [illegible] reds of thousands of people whose surroundings force them to work in the tobacco fields and barns, and who are, many of them, to day the poorest paid, the poorest fed, and the poorest clad of all our [illegible] let me entreat you that you turn not a deaf ear to this their plea for justice. But enact this law and you will resuscitate and put new life and new energy into a surely dying industry; you will [illegible] return of better days is fading; you will replace confidence where distrust in the justice of our institutions is now taking root, and you will make patriots and defenders out of the inmates of these homes instead of the unwilling victims of unjust oppression which they are to-day. [Loud applause.]

During the delivery of the foregoing, the time of Mr. HOPKINS having expired.

Mr. GILBERT said: Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GILBERT. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague from the State of Kentucky be allowed an extension of fifteen minutes in the time allotted to him.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Kentucky that the time for general debate was fixed in the House, and the committee can not change it, and under that order of the House the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PIERCE] has charge of the time on that side.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I understand that my friend from Tennessee [Mr. PIERCE] has promised all the time at his disposal. I still have some time that is not required for use on this side, and I will yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for fifteen minutes more.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I return my most grateful thanks to the gentleman on the other side for this courtesy shown me, and I promise you that I will not impose as much upon your patience as he has placed it in my power to do.

[Mr. HOPKINS then resumed and completed his remarks as above.]

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD].

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman. I shall devote the few minutes allotted to me to a discussion of the tobacco question as it affects the tobacco-growing counties that I have the honor to represent upon this floor. The tobacco growers of those counties are in a depressed condition, and I believe it is largely due to the fact that the tax still remains upon the product of their soil and their labor.

The law now, sir, is that the grower of tobacco can sell the leaf to anyone; but if the person who buys that leaf undertakes to dispose of it, he is deemed a manufacturer of tobacco and must pay a tax of 6 cents a pound; and if the farmer desires to put the tobacco which he has raised into any other shape than that of leaf, if he pulls the stem from it and twists it, he, too, is deemed a manufacturer of tobacco, and this imposition of 6 cents a pound tax is placed on his product. That is true when it is in an absolutely raw state, when he has done nothing except to take the stem from it and twist it into a shape in which it can be kept and handled without loss. This is an unjust imposition.

Various bills have been introduced here looking to the modification to a greater or less extent of this tax. I introduced the bill which I now read:

A bill (H. R. 11889) for the relief of the tobacco growers.

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be lawful for any person to buy and sell tobacco unstemmed and in the leaf without license or the payment of any tax [illegible]

SEC. 2. That it shall be lawful for any person to sell tobacco in any form or condition [illegible] without license [illegible] the payment of any tax of any kind.

SEC. 3. That this [illegible] take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

I want to say that no law that does not go to the extent of permitting any person to pull the stem from tobacco, twist, and sell it in that way without the imposition of this tax will bring any substantial relief to the tobacco growers of that portion of Virginia which raises export tobacco; and very little to those who raise it for home manufacture.

Mr. Chairman, there are twenty-nine States in this Union which raise tobacco. Eight of the eleven Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee come from tobacco-growing States. It is true that some of those States do not raise very large quantities of tobacco; but I take it that the Representatives of those States will see to it that their constituents, even if they have but small numbers who are engaged in this industry, shall have justice and fair treatment at the hands of the Government.

The internal-revenue tax has enabled the American Tobacco Company to a large extent to crush out competition in the purchase of those classes of tobacco which are used for domestic manufacture. It has enabled the foreign governments which buy our export tobacco to absolutely throttle and destroy competition in those classes of tobacco.

There are in this country now 150 or 160 manufacturers of tobacco independent of the American Tobacco Company. When that company was organized there were that many in the State of Virginia alone. There was active competition for the product of the farmer when he took it to market. Now in that State there are but fifteen or sixteen manufacturers independent of this great tobacco trust; and so when the farmer who raises tobacco suited to our domestic manufacture takes his product to market he finds that the competition for it is greatly lessened and the price greatly depressed.

But as bad as is his condition, it is bright when compared to the condition of the farmer who raises tobacco for export. There are a number of foreign countries, such as France, Austria, and Italy, which exercise an absolute monopoly in the purchase, importation, manufacture, and sale of tobacco. France does now and most of them formerly did their buying through the leaf dealers in the different States. These dealers make contracts with the consuls of the various governments for the quantity of tobacco they wish to buy for the governments with which they contracted. Within the past few years a number of these governments have pooled their interests and formed a governmental trust.

I will illustrate by taking the case of Austria and Italy. They buy a large quantity of tobacco that is raised in the district which I represent. There were formerly in the State of Virginia twenty-five or thirty leaf dealers who went upon our markets and bought the class of tobacco that those two Governments desired, either under contract with those Governments or with the expectation of getting contracts from them at the end of the season. With twenty-five or thirty of these buyers there was always lively competition, there was active bidding for the farmer's tobacco, and he got a reasonably fair, living price for it. Within the past few years those two Governments have pooled their interests, and one man has been engaged by the two to buy all the tobacco they need in the State of Virginia; so now, when a farmer takes his tobacco to market, instead of having twenty or twenty-five men competing for it, there is but one man who wants it.

Instead of having competition for his article he must sell it at whatever price this one man chooses to give him for it. These two Governments buy in Virginia about 8,000,000 pounds of tobacco a year. It comes largely from counties which I represent here. Since that combination has been formed that class of tobacco has gone down in price about 4 cents a pound, so it will be seen that this Government monopoly has taken out of the pockets of the farmers of a half dozen or more counties in Virginia $[illegible] a year, a sum larger than the taxes those counties pay to the State, county, and municipal governments. Mr. Chairman, the tobacco growers of Virginia believe if this tax is removed the condition which enables those Governments to thus oppress them will be removed.

The condition of the tobacco grower who raises export tobacco has been deplorable for a number of years. In June, 1897, Congress passed a resolution calling upon the President to negotiate with the countries which engage in the tobacco business, as well as with those which impose burdensome restrictions upon its importation, with a view of ascertaining if some concession could not be obtained from those governments. From that time to this neither gentleman who has occupied the White House has taken a single step to carry that portion of that resolution into effect. I have introduced a similar resolution this session.

The tobacco growers have come to the conclusion that they can expect no relief against the trust as long as the Republican party is in power, and, judging by the conduct of the Republican Executives for the past seven years, they can not even expect aid from Republicans as against foreign governments which are oppressing them; and so, Mr. Chairman, they come and ask modestly for a very moderate relief.

They have asked for no drastic antitrust legislation. They have asked simply for a fair field with no favor. They come here and ask that this Government take its oppressive hands from their throats and allow them to work out their own salvation. They believe that if the Government will do this they can take care of themselves, not only against the American trust, but against foreign governmental combinations as well. They believe, sir, if this tax is removed there will spring up all over the tobacco-growing sections of this country small industries; side lines to other interests which the people who start them may have; industries which will buy the leaf tobacco from the farmer, pull the stem from it and twist it, and in that shape send it out to the South and West and build up a trade. And when the farmer goes to the market to sell his tobacco the people who have established these little industries will be there to compete with the agent of the American Tobacco Company or the agent of this combination of foreign governments in the purchase of that tobacco. It will create competition, and competition is what the American tobacco grower must have or go out of business.

Mr. Chairman, we do not believe that the trust could drive this class of tobacco dealers out of business. We believe that the people who went into this business would do it on a small scale and with a small capital and often will have other business interests, and if the trust undertook to destroy them, as they have the independent manufacturers generally, they could simply suspend business until the trust got tired of using its ordinary methods, and then they could begin business again at the same old stand. It is the consensus of opinion of the most intelligent growers and dealers in tobacco that if this tax is removed to the extent of permitting any person to stem and twist the raw leaf competition will be created and a trade will be built up, and these foreign combinations and the home trust will be forced to give the American tobacco grower a fair price for his product.

Mr. Chairman, there can be no doubt that the American tobacco grower is in a depressed condition. He is gloomy; he is disheartened. No person can travel through the tobacco belt and not be convinced of this fact. The statements made here before the subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee will convince anyone who has heard them or who will take the trouble to read them. If [illegible] it is admitted, is it not the duty of this Congress to give relief to these people, if it is in its power? I have heard the suggestion made that the Government could not stand the loss of the revenue, and yet a few days ago I heard the Commissioner of Internal Revenue state that the passage of a measure of this character would not reduce the revenues of the Government more than $2,000,000. But even if it did reduce the revenues four or five or six or seven millions, when it is proposed to save a hundred thousand or more people in American industry from bankruptcy and ruin, it should be done without hesitation. [Applause.]

This House appropriated without murmur [illegible] to maintain a navy, and the Senate, [illegible] for the Army and will appropriate hundreds of millions of dollars to build an interoceanic canal. On all these appropriations we move with a liberal hand, and can you then [illegible] by reducing your revenues a few millions? Gentlemen on the other side of this House talk glibly about prosperity. Such talk is [illegible] to the tobacco growers, who are in a worse condition than they ever have been, worse than they were in the panic of 1893, worse than they were in the panic of 1884, worse than ever before, and they come here and ask for some measure of relief and they will not understand, with all the money that is being appropriated by this Congress, why that relief can not be given them.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The two million reduction was upon stemming and twisting.

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But on giving the farmers and everybody free trade in leaf tobacco it would not interfere with the revenue at all.

Mr. FLOOD. That is what I said. I said the reduction of revenue if the tax was taken off leaf tobacco would be but a few millions, and I said, further, that no relief would amount to anything to the tobacco growers unless the right to stem and twist was given to everybody who wants to engage in that business.

In 1882 President Arthur recommended the abolition of this tax. In 1884 he recommended it again. The Republican party, by its platform in 1888, stands committed to an absolute abolition of the internal-revenue tax upon tobacco. That pledge is unredeemed to this day.

This, sir, is a war tax. That war has been over nearly thirty-nine years, and still this tax remains upon our statute books to harass and oppress large numbers of our fellow-citizens. It found its origin in the necessities of that Government to raise revenue during that unhappy period of strife between the different sections.

Not only, sir, has that war been over for a long period, but another war has been fought, in which those who wore the gray and those who wore the blue marched side by side under the same flag, the ensign of a common and united country. Yet this tax oppresses a great section of your country. Not only is it a war tax, but it is class legislation, pure and simple. Why, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BERRY] has just asked, should the product of the soil be taxed while wheat and corn and oats and barley and other products are not taxed?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I will yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. WILLIAMSON].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will my friend from Minnesota, who is so charitable, which has been lately, not yield to my friend from Virginia, Mr. FLOOD, three minutes more in order that he may finish his remarks?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. By consent of the gentleman from Oregon I will be glad to do so.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I will gladly give way.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I yield three minutes more to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Minnesota. I will only take a minute. I ask what better illustration could be adduced of class legislation than this unjust and inequitable imposition upon one staple product of the soil? It is without justification or excuse in morals or equity. It is an instance of where might makes right. It is a high-handed Rob Roy exercise of despotic power. The time has come for the Republican party to redeem a pledge upon which it carried the country in 1888. The Democrats stand ready to support this measure. I call on the Republican party in this House to vote for a measure which the trusts of this country do not ask for, but which hundreds of thousands of earnest and honest citizens do ask for and do [illegible]. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. WILLIAMSON] is recognized for twenty minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, it is with no small degree of hesitation that I undertake to address the House at this time. Experience [illegible] the fact that I am not really a member of this body, but [illegible] I was [illegible] to speak at least [illegible] the interests and general interest contained in the discussion of party policies that has occupied the attention of this body for some time.

The question to which I desire to [illegible] is that of a proper [illegible] Exposition to be held in Portland, Oregon, in the year 1905 should receive national recognition. It will be observed that the date mentioned is the centenary of the first regularly equipped and duly authorized movement by this Government looking toward the acquirement of a foothold on the shores of the Pacific Ocean, for without which we now have in the way of wealth and power by our Pacific possessions had its beginning in the Lewis and Clark expedition.

Recognizing in this simple [illegible] a plainly marked milestone in a great world [illegible] Lewis and Clark expedition [illegible].

Owing to the national [illegible] of which is to be commemorated, and to certain objects of [illegible] interest and importance to the [illegible] claims that [illegible] proper that such [illegible] should have national recognition. Accordingly, a measure is now pending before this body looking to that end, and I now desire, as best I may in the few moments at my command, to set forth the facts [illegible].

Later, as did those upon whom rested the responsibility of shaping and conducting the affairs of this country one hundred, seventy-five, or even sixty years ago, as to the importance of the Northwest [illegible] prospective [illegible], leaves but one [illegible] hence [illegible].

A region [illegible] as yet only the [illegible] that yields annually [illegible] of the [illegible] bushels of wheat, and hundreds [illegible] manufactured products in proportion [illegible] ernment in custom receipts and [illegible] of one and one-tenth million [illegible] half century, and upon which the Government [illegible] than 85 per cent of [illegible] be considered in any [illegible] than a region of [illegible].

Nor is the Northwest [illegible] try, to be rated solely from a commercial standpoint. Its [illegible] worth is not by any means its [illegible] claim to greatness. The fact of its thousands of schools [illegible] churches, surrounded by its [illegible] well-[illegible] and prosperous American [illegible] unknown regions, with plenty of room for thrice as many more, speaks for itself [illegible].

These facts, taken together with the prominence given to our Pacific frontage by recent events, seem to [illegible] son and his associates as well as to [illegible] Meriwether Lewis and William Clark when [illegible] gether, planned and executed the movement that [illegible] our boundaries to the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. Henry E. Reed, of Portland, Oreg., in a very able article recently [illegible] up the importance of the expedition of Lewis and Clark and its consequent settlement by American citizens, said:

> [illegible] board of the Ohio Valley, it has 100,000 [illegible]

Speaking further of Alaska as a resultant of the acquisition of the Oregon country, this student writes:

> Alaska was [illegible] I never add one dollar to our wealth or [illegible] Alaska has [illegible] price Russia got for it.

Mr. H. W. Scott, editor of the Portland Oregonian, than whom there is no more able writer on current thought in America, in a recent contribution on the momentous results growing out of the Lewis and Clark expedition, penned the following terse and expressive lines:

> [illegible] of the great drama of history. To [illegible] as they have added [illegible] and general interest contained in the discussion of party policies that has occupied the attention of this body for some time. [illegible] Jamestown, was [illegible]

In his message to the Fifty-eighth Congress, President Roosevelt, after making reference to the Louisiana purchase, said:

> [illegible] event should receive recognition and support from the National Government.

This much, on the importance of the occasion, may be borrowed from the sayings of others without engaging at this time either in tedious compilations of statistics or the prosy details of history.

It is not my purpose in the brief time allotted me to go into detailed account of either the Lewis and Clark expedition and the consequent acquirement of the north Pacific country or the causes that led up to it. I leave that to the statistician and the historian. History is one thing, and the propriety of Congress making an appropriation of a considerable sum of money for an exposition is quite another. To the latter proposition I beg your attention for a few moments, for this is directly the whole question now pending.

Our first claim for national recognition is the association had in the event with the birth and growth of our [illegible].

Our second claim is the fact that the great Pacific coast region has never yet been recognized in a national appropriation of like nature.

Our third claim is the immediate necessity of practical education in the needs and wants of that half of the human race who live in the islands and on the borders of the Pacific Ocean.

Of other reasons there are many, but these three will answer my purpose at this time. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to forego putting forward as immediate the first two allegations. An exposition will neither add to nor detract from the real benefit to the nation and to humanity wrought by the heroes of one hundred years ago. Their deeds are indelibly written upon the pages of our history, and no demonstration of ours will add to or take from their fame. It needs neither exposition nor fair nor demonstration of any kind to immortalize the name of Thomas Jefferson. His fame rests upon what he did, not upon what we may do.

The same may be said, in a somewhat lesser way, of a number of his compeers, among whom the names of Capts. Meriwether Lewis and William Clark were not the least to shed luster upon their time and sphere of action. For present purposes it is sufficient to note that it was not within their sphere to spend their [illegible] Rocky Mountains [illegible] Columbia by [illegible]. It was not their fortune to make the "round trip" in a limited number of hours in almost perfect safety. But theirs was a work of weary months and years, among strange and warlike tribes of men, not knowing but that each day might bring the final summons. At times half starving, half naked, but at all times displaying that devotion to duty, that determination to accomplish the task assigned to them in the face of what seemed certain death, considered essential in the minds of all mankind in the make-up of real heroes.

It was within their sphere to blaze the way for civilization to follow from the Mississippi River to the Pacific Ocean, and they did it, and every [illegible] train and every loaded freight train that pulls out from St. Louis, Omaha, or St. Paul for Portland, Seattle, or San Francisco, and every American flag that floats over the Pacific Northwest in our time bears witness to the fact that they performed their part well. These are their monuments, and they need no exposition or other demonstration from us to perpetuate their names.

And yet, such is our custom, and I need not explain why, that we, at stated periods and by certain means, do appropriate from our National Treasury to specifically commemorate the deeds of our illustrious citizens, both living and dead. And I consider the the fact that the names and deeds of Thomas Jefferson and Captains Lewis and Clark are inseparably connected with the acquisition of the Pacific Northwest, and scarcely less directly connected with the acquirement of California, as one good reason why the exposition to be held during the coming year at Portland, Oreg., should be given national recognition.

My second reason, that the Pacific coast has never been recognized in this class of appropriations, needs merely the bare mention. This might be classed as a geographical or proportional, rather than an essential, reason; and yet it is a reason neither to be overlooked nor despised.

In making mention of this fact it must not be understood that we make it in a spirit of complaint. We of the Northwest are not a sectional people and have no complaint to make on this or any other score against our fellow-countrymen, let them hail from the North, the East, the South, or any other portion of our common country. Snivveling complaint is not indigenous to our soil. We have neither the time nor the inclination to indulge in that particular form of human weakness. The opening of our mines, the clearing of our farms, the felling of our forests, the construction of our transportation lines—in short, the "winning of the West," has not been accomplished, thus far, by cavil and complaint. We of the Northwest have sprung from an ancestry possessed of unusual hardihood. It was their chosen sphere to travel the plains across. With slow, toiling ox teams and nerves of iron they overcame those immense distances and unseen dangers. And when once in the land of their choice, with one hand they still retained their grasp on the trusty rifle, with which to defend their lives from tribes of savage Indians, while with the other they laid the foundation for the manifold advantages that we now enjoy.

With here and there an exception, those pioneers have gone to their reward. We are proud of that ancestry, and we will commemorate the work of their hands in any event, God willing. Already the State of Oregon, assisted by a number of States of the West and Northwest, has contributed over one and one-half million dollars for this purpose, and we will continue to increase that amount sufficiently to demonstrate to the world our just pride in the discovery and exploitation of our portion of this Union without appearing before this Congress either in the rôle of beggars or in the spirit of cavil or complaint.

And yet facts are stubborn things, and it is a fact that our Members of Congress, both of the House and of the Senate, with their influence and their votes, have favored every exposition held in this nation in the past, and not one word of criticism has ever been hurled at them by their constituents for such action. It is a further fact, as I have stated, that the Pacific coast has never been the recipient of a dollar thus far for exposition purposes. And I must contend that such a condition is another reason why it is just and proper that the exposition to be held in Portland, Oreg., next year is of right entitled to national recognition.

My third reason, the commercial education needed by our people, particularly our manufacturing people, in the needs of those who inhabit the islands of the Pacific Ocean and the nations of the Far East, I consider a most eminently important one.

It is the purpose of the management to make this the chief feature of the Portland exposition. The word "oriental" is incorporated into the very name of the exposition, and especial effort is being made to secure exhibits of modes of living, of customs, and all else required for a thorough understanding of the needs of the different people who inhabit southern and eastern Asia and the bordering islands.

In my opinion this is the most important question of all to consider in deciding whether or not such an appropriation of the public money is justifiable. I realize that this is a purely commercial view point, but that is none the less against it, for we are largely a commercial people, and as such are prone to look closely into the question of profit and loss when making an investment.

Leaving entirely out of consideration the question of commemorating the deeds of the illustrious; saying nothing about the equal or unequal distribution of funds for exposition purposes in the past; passing in silence the question of whether or not the Pacific coast is entitled to recognition in the composition, and considering this question altogether from a commercial standpoint and putting it on the ground of whether or not an oriental exposition on our own soil, having for its chief object an enlightenment of our people in the commercial needs of the oriental peoples, hence the acquirement of a knowledge of the means of catering to those needs, makes of it, in my opinion, an investment of very great profit and a case with the preponderance of evidence in the affirmative.

If for no other reason, this enterprise should be recognized by the Government on the ground of the practical education to be derived thereby in oriental trade matters. The exigencies of the times demand that we acquire such information. We are compelled to look to the inhabitants of the Pacific shores for a market for a very great portion of our surplus products in the immediate future. Compulsion and desire working along the same lines and in the same direction lead us naturally enough to understand that the time is now here when our manufacturers are compelled to look to the needs of their future customers.

[illegible] the natural lines of human necessity, and out of what line of [illegible] education can come more immediate profit than a [illegible] in supplying the needs in performing the work of [illegible] where we know consumers are [illegible] and are [illegible] upon for a market for the products of our factories and farms.

While I am not, as a rule, partial to statistics, I feel constrained to [illegible] attention to a few figures bearing upon this feature of the [illegible].

[illegible] necessary to consume the time of the House with the [illegible] I will state the fact that on this whole, our exports of raw [illegible] manufactured goods, and wheat flour have not [illegible] during the past three years in the European and South American markets. On the other hand, [illegible] from European countries in manufactured cotton goods have [illegible] well sustained.

[illegible] because in the final analysis upon the [illegible] of those who produce cotton, wheat and corn, and the [illegible] based our national prosperity or adversity.

[illegible] as to their ways, the [illegible] the government, but, when all is summed up, our national prosperity or adversity is bound up in the prosperity or adversity of those who till the soil. [illegible] Although our manufactured goods have been [illegible] during the past three years that, notwithstanding the [illegible] of what may be called a very high tariff [illegible] the exports of [illegible] has increased from $40,246,935 in the year 1901 to $[illegible] in the year 1903.

How has it been during the same period from across the Pacific Ocean? In the year 1901 we exported [illegible] worth of raw cotton to the principal oriental countries. In the year 1903 to these same countries we sold $[illegible] in the short period [illegible] years [illegible] of [illegible].

In the matter of the export of cotton [illegible] greater results have happened. In the year 1901 we sold to the principal oriental countries $[illegible] worth of cotton goods. In the year 1903 we sold them $[illegible] worth, an increase [illegible] of three years of nearly [illegible] per cent. And [illegible] that the greater part of these sales were made to the [illegible] pire—a people five times more numerous than the whole population of the United States—who are [illegible] consuming exactly the same class of goods, or raw materials, as our people in their manufacture [illegible].

In the matter of wheat flour, in the year 1901, we sold to the principal oriental countries [illegible] worth. [illegible] people are especially entitled to the conclusion that bread is used to eat, for last year they increased their consumption nearly [illegible] and bought [illegible] worth of our wheat flour. The [illegible] of Puget Sound and Columbia River [illegible] increase of flour to the Orient last year, and were only [illegible] that amount by the bad condition of their mills.

It appears from [illegible] and food in less than ten years, at the present rate of increase, but a [illegible] the entire North Pacific [illegible] but the entire product will be needed to supply the oriental market, and with every [illegible] years the entire surplus wheat product of the Northwest will be needed for the same purpose.

I [illegible] Minnesota (Mr. LENROOT), who, a few days ago, [illegible] House so alarmed [illegible] Canada, particularly in the matter of wheat, [illegible] fear that our rapidly growing [illegible] from this Congress to do with Canada [illegible] loss of the Great Canadian [illegible] gentleman from Minnesota [illegible] years [illegible] wheat field [illegible] upon the prosperity of the Northwest [illegible] appear as bad [illegible].

That we are now the largest producers of food [illegible] strength, that our power of production [illegible] supply, [illegible] our almost unlimited natural resources [illegible] bound to increase is as clear. What is to become of [illegible] crowded [illegible] of products is not of [illegible] We look to the United Kingdom of Great Britain and [illegible] greatest customer for our agricultural products [illegible] national prosperity with [illegible]. We look to [illegible] Germany and the Netherlands and we find [illegible] forebodings of fear lest the abundance of our [illegible] should overcome their productive power and [illegible] land upon its for food and raiment. To the north of us our third [illegible] greatest customer is clamoring for a just opportunity to sell to us her products in exchange for the enormous amount of our [illegible] we sell to her. We look to the south, and we find [illegible] of our [illegible].

[illegible] our stability of [illegible], our boundless native resources, our [illegible] in the [illegible]. [illegible] of [illegible] and [illegible] our ever [illegible]. Not on the [illegible] of the [illegible] to our own. Under [illegible] so frame their laws as [illegible] their own [illegible] will [illegible] to do it, and we [illegible].

[illegible] is, he who would overlook that half of the [illegible] lands and on the borders of the [illegible] is not a [illegible].

These people a[illegible] the use of our flour and cotton [illegible] the Orient, with a [illegible]. This [illegible] and [illegible] facturers is a [illegible] rocity, because it leaves the [illegible].

[illegible] ship which many of the [illegible] carry [illegible] to prove [illegible] on the [illegible] Ocean.

[illegible] this third reason—a reason [illegible] the United States alike. I [illegible] modities a[illegible].

If it is of [illegible] concern, the exposition to be held at Portland, Oreg., [illegible] year, to borrow the language of Pr[illegible] receive recognition and support from the Na[illegible] and commercial, we believe our cause [illegible].

Mr. M[illegible]. I yield to the gentleman from [illegible].

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire, very briefly, to submit at [illegible] [illegible] or refused to [illegible] after the close of that great struggle, we should, as nearly as possible, treat all alike, and upon proof of service only, which can always be shown by the records, place upon the rolls the name of every survivor who makes application, without requiring either proof of poverty or [illegible] to earn a livelihood. For myself, if I could have the sole say in the matter, I would make no limit as to age, but would treat all alike; neither would I make any distinction as to length of service, but would adopt the scriptural parable of the laborers in the vineyard. I have obtained from the Pension Office the following estimate of what it would cost to pension all at the rate of $12 per month, in addition to what it now costs, and ask to here insert the figures as a part of my remarks, as follows:

Number of invalid pensioners on the rolls receiving less than $12 per month and [illegible] to pay them a uniform rate of $12 per month.

The [illegible] by the Grand Army of the Republic, and in favor of which petitions have been received from almost every town and village in the United States, make that the age at which such pensions should commence be fixed at 62 years. That, of course, would somewhat reduce the estimate of cost as above given. I will here insert the estimate as to the number of survivors of the Union Army, as given out by the Pension Office, and their ages at this time, as follows:

I am told that should the age limit be fixed at 65 years instead of 62 years the total additional cost to the Government would not exceed from eighteen to twenty millions of dollars for any year, and probably not to exceed fifteen millions. It seems to me that would be as little as we could do at this time in justice to these survivors of the nation's defenders. I desire here to incorporate as a part of my remarks, with my full approval of every word thereof, an editorial which I find in the National Tribune of January 14, 1904, as follows:

WHY LONGER DELAY?

A thousand times more impressive than any speeches made in Congress, any arguments, any editorials, is the simple fact that over 50,000 veterans [illegible]

[illegible] the sinking of every Saturday's sun is tested by the ones of fully [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] that rose stood in the front of battle when the nation's life was assailed.

Every day in the week hundreds of church bells somewhere in the land toll out the sad announcement of the passing of one of the nation's heroes. The sigh of the heart [illegible] rises hourly somewhere. The tears of the [illegible].

This, above all other reasons, is why Congress should waste no time in passing a service pension bill to give to these aging men, and to those on whom Death has set his fatal seal, some measure of the nation's gratitude and justice.

Every week sees a full regiment of men that were once the pride and hope of their country mustered out by the final sergeant, Death.

Every month the country loses a [illegible] men who in their [illegible] were [illegible] a stronger army than that with which Lee [illegible] as the sanguinary [illegible] of Chickamauga, a larger army than that with which Grant [illegible] Vicksburg, or [illegible] Sherman [illegible] Atlanta. Every [illegible] that [illegible] at Shiloh or [illegible] at Stones River yearly passes into [illegible] green [illegible] whose contains never our ward swing.

[illegible] veterans [illegible] every year is the very best possible [illegible] of the patriotic [illegible] of those who survive. The living are [illegible] but little better off than those who die. From the [illegible] ranks [illegible] to every year drawn the immense levy of from 50,000 to 60,000 more to die the next year.

Therefore, to reach these men, to do them the justice for which they have long wanted. Congressional action can not be too speedy. Its tardiness has left [illegible] the past year, going to their graves bereft of that which was righteously theirs. In their wretched places of rest, under the sighing pines, under the tearful willows, they lie far beyond the nation's justice or the nation's gratitude. With the grass and above them, they seek nothing yonder of the "progress of legislation," or the fervid appeals of their friends to the dullard of the twenty years ago.

In the sickness of heart they have met the death of despair, and Congress can do as little for them as for the dry bones rotting in the Valley of Golgotha.

Now it is for the Congress to determine how many more myriads of such [illegible] to their relief in the fulfillment of promises made in the extremity of the nation's danger. Congress can not give pensions to the [illegible] died last year to the survivors of the [illegible] year, it can not give them the food, medicine, shelter, and support which would have [illegible] to the grave, but it can do much for the hundreds of pensioners who are [illegible] their comrades the selfsame way down the valley which leads to the beyond.

It can not replenish the arm of the [illegible] already gone, but it can give an acknowledgment and appreciation of that act by [illegible] for those who remain.

There are [illegible] thousands of veterans and their widows who see before them only the dark prospect which has dimmed the sunset of their pride. Consider every one of them [illegible] and support with [illegible] their little pensions will provide. [illegible] their support by the Government was being [illegible] and [illegible] than anything else [illegible] can. There are still living pensioners [illegible] by [illegible] and made in the strongest [illegible] the powers of the earth, believing that in the days of their weakness, out of its abundant riches and strength, it would care a little for them.

Will the Congress vote [illegible] It should hasten to perform a [illegible] of justice [illegible] now the opportunity has [illegible] with which to pass. Let us have, then, a service pension bill passed at the earliest possible moment.

For myself I want to vote to pension them all. If that can not be done, then, next, I want to vote for the Grand Army bill. If it is thought that the expense of such a law would be too great, then I will vote for the best compromise that can be agreed upon, but I do insist that some action should be taken. The nation is great and rich and powerful; it can afford a great navy for defense and protection. I voted for that bill, and am glad I did so, but I want to see this great nation care liberally for those who went out in the strength and vigor of their young manhood and risked all for the preservation of this Union. What this country is to-day we owe to them. While a survivor remains on earth let us not shirk the payment of the obligation.

If we must economize, let it be in some other direction, but not here. All that it costs we shall receive adequate consideration for in establishing forever in the minds of all citizens of the Republic the proposition that this Government will always stand by and protect and care for those who volunteer for its defense in time of need. What a volunteer army we could raise in this country at a moment's notice! And because we could raise such an army we probably shall not need it. You provide a great navy to insure peace. On the same principle so treat your soldiers that you can have the greatest army on earth whenever it may be needed.

These old soldiers of the civil war will soon all be gone. The pension roll will not continue to grow larger, but very soon it will decrease more rapidly than it grew. Let us not delay, but do now that which we should do for the nation's defenders. [Loud applause.]

Mr. PIERCE. I desire to ask my colleague on the committee if he will kindly yield me fifteen minutes. There are two gentlemen on this side who would like a few moments' time, and I would appreciate it if the gentleman will kindly yield it to me.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has thirty minutes remaining.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I yield fifteen minutes to my colleague on the committee [Mr. PIERCE].

Mr. PIERCE. I thank the gentleman. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McDERMOTT].

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Chairman, I expect to yield back about one-half of my time in order that it may be given to the gentleman from Indiana, who desires to address the House on the subject of contemporaneous interest. I have listened with a great deal of attention to the addresses of to-day, particularly the one last delivered in favor of a Government appropriation in order that we may hold an exposition on the six thousandth anniversary of the departure of Adam and Eve from the Garden of Eden or something later, and I can not expect that anything not including an appropriation can gain the attention of this deserted Hall.

In the hurry call which summoned us together last November, we were told that the necessity for the extra meeting of Congress was found in the bosom of charity, and the bosom of charity was extended toward Cuba. We were told that a revision of the tariff duties between this country and Cuba was absolutely necessary in order that the suffering Republic might continue to expand and grow under the flag of liberty. I took occasion to differ from my colleagues at the time that the Cuban reciprocity bill was under consideration. My insistment at that time was that the bill was not called for by any emergency in Cuba; that it was a bill that would directly benefit what is known as the "sugar trust," and the moment or two that I have I shall use to offer evidence of the fact that I was right.

Two days ago, the question being before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries whether or not the trade between this country and the Philippine Islands should be confined to American bottoms, testimony was given by William G. Smith, secretary of the Hawaiian Sugar Planters' Association. He said:

The effect of taking 20 per cent off of the Cuban tariff brought the raw sugar down that full amount.

Mr. FORDNEY, of the committee, asked him:

That is [illegible] on board ship at Hawaii?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir; $16.75a ton, showing that the price for sugar fell more than that.

Mr. FORDNEY. On the gross ton of 2,240 pounds it would be $7.55?

Mr. SMITH. We [illegible]

Mr. FORDNEY. Then if that is true and the consumers in the United States are not getting their sugar any cheaper, where does the difference go? Your price has gone down and the price to the consumer has not gone down.

Mr. SMITH. The inference is that it goes to the refining company.

Mr. Chairman, in practical economics no reduction on raw material used by any trust in the United States will, within the domain in which that trust is controlling, inure to the benefit of the consumer. You can take all the tariff off sugar imported from Cuba, the raw material, and it will not reduce the price of the Havemeyer product to the consumer of this country one shade.

I contended that when the bill was before the House, and I neglected to vote for the bill because I believed that was going to be the result. In my judgment the time has come in this country for the Federal control of aggregated capital. No movement in political economy can have any good effect so long as from the sides of the States in this Union are sent piratical ships known as "corporations" to feast and fatten upon neighboring States. In my judgment this practice of creating State corporations for the transaction of interstate business must stop. I believe in a centralized power for the creation of corporations. I want a hand strong enough to reach a monopoly in Maine or a monopoly in California. I want the power to take life from the corporation, and, so wanting, in the Fifty-sixth, the Fifty-seventh, and in this Congress, I introduced an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ARTICLE XVI.

SECTION 1. That no State shall create or authorize the creation or exist- [illegible] private business.

Mr. McDERMOTT. In a few days I shall speak in [illegible] to the adoption of this amendment to the Constitution. I believe, as I do, that the Constitution as now framed does not allow scope enough for Federal legislation to restrain the wrongdoing of corporations organized by individual States, corporators that are not subject to visitation by any power sufficient to prevent wrongdoing. I shall then review the attempts that have been made in this Hall to suppress monopoly, and I take the opportunity of the time now awarded me merely that the members may read the amendment to the Constitution may be printed in the RECORD and the attention of Members of the House thus called to it. [Applause.]

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MIERS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for fifteen minutes.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the friends of ship subsidy have been bringing in their bills for many Congresses, [illegible] or defeat altering the measures in some way to make them, if possible, more acceptable to the representatives of the people; and now, apparently weary of trying to force their project through Congress in any shape wherein it can be recognized for what it really is, they have brought it in with a mask on—the mask of a "commission to consider and recommend legislation for the development of the American merchant marine." Mr. Chairman, this title is altogether too long; besides, it is incorrect. It would be much easier and much better to call it the "ship-subsidy commission," for that is precisely what it is.

The majority of the Merchant Marine Committee have made a report in favor of the bill, in which they pretend to argue in behalf of a commission, but, as the minority report points out, they are arguing solely for a subsidy, and the commission, if appointed, would go into its deliberations with the mind of its majority made up beforehand in favor of a subsidy. We all know that. The House knows it, and the whole country knows it. The disguise is too transparent. The hands are the hands of Esau, but the voice is the voice of Jacob.

I do not propose to waste time or strength in arguing against the proposed commission as a commission. I protest against this bill and against the formation of this commission because I disapprove of the principle of ship subsidization. If the commission is constituted it is absolutely sure to report back a recommendation for ship subsidization, and those who oppose that principle might as well fight and kill it here and now by knocking out this [illegible] our duty than to be deluded into enacting ship-subsidy legislation. It is better in the present case to do our duty promptly. Why should we authorize this commission? The majority report practically confesses that it is after subsidy and subsidy alone. That being the case, we know all we need to know about subsidy already and are fully qualified to vote on the subject at once. Let us do so and put the subsidy scheme to sleep for the Fifty-eighth Congress by defeating this commission bill. Otherwise we shall have to go all over the subsidy [illegible] in the short session of next winter. The subsidy scheme has been killed frequently heretofore, but it will not stay killed. The "subsidy hunters" are not afflicted with [illegible]. Time and again they have been turned away from the doors of the Treasury, but still they rally for another raid, and again they must be beaten off.

The proposed ship subsidization is class legislation in its worst form. Subsidizing [illegible] would enable the leading persons and firms in that interest to put a large amount of public money in their pockets, which money would be contributed by the community at large. And all for what? Ostensibly to "develop the merchant marine," "carry the mails," "encourage American [illegible]," and "strengthen the Navy," but in reality to [illegible] a few steamship companies to make more money and to increase the wealth of a few men already wealthy by donations from the public Treasury.

But it is said that we must develop the merchant marine and that this is the only way to do it. I am in favor of the development of the merchant marine, but not by unconstitutional, unjust, and unfair methods, and I have no manner of doubt that there are more ways than one for securing such development justly, fairly, constitutionally.

But the subsidy proposition, to quote the words of the present honored Speaker of the House in a report made by him against a similar scheme years ago, is, "in effect, to give a bonus to assist certain persons to make a sale of steamships at a price greater than their value," and its passage "would encourage individuals to knock at the doors of Congress for profit at the general expense." There it is in a nutshell. A subsidy is a grant of public money—a "bonus" from the Treasury—given to certain persons to enhance the market value of their goods or productions and to enable them to supplement their own rightful earnings by donations at the "general expense" of the public. There may be more positively vicious and harmful, but there are not, and can not be, more selfish forms of legislation than this.

Mr. Chairman, I do not see how any Representative can vote in favor of such a subsidy proposition, unless there may be, perhaps, a few Representatives whose constituencies are mainly made up of rich tariff magnates, managers of shipbuilding trusts, and the like. But the great majority of citizens in almost every district are laboring people—Lincoln's "plain people." It has become a trite proverb to call them "the salt of the earth" and "the bone and sinew of the community." This is trite, but true. That is precisely what they are. They have as much as they can do to get along in the world—to "make both ends meet." They are the great producers of this country—the ones who produce all the manifold things which have served to make this country great, famous, rich, and prosperous. They are also the taxpayers of this country—the ones upon whom the heavy tariff burdens fall, and who fill up the Treasury with the millions which we vote away so lightly and lavishly, and sometimes so unjustly.

My constituents are true American citizens, imbued with the same spirit which actuated the free men of the Revolutionary period. They are not rich as a class—far from it. Most of them depend for their daily living upon the labor of their hands and the sweat of their brows. Thousands of them belong to that sturdy order of mechanics or artisans in whose hall in Philadelphia the Congress of 1776 did its great work of laying deep and firm the foundations of American independence. Many of them are coal miners and quarrymen, serving the public well in a vocation among the very hardest and most dangerous known to mankind. Many are farmers, pursuing their arduous and confining, but noble, calling with the fidelity and patience for which farmers have ever been noted.

Many others besides are railway engineers and firemen, blacksmiths, foundry men, and members of a score of other industrial occupations, and all doing a man's honest daily work, and doing it well and faithfully. They are plain but solid citizens. They understand the principles and methods of government. They "know their rights, and, knowing, dare maintain." They are well grounded in the history and theory of this Republic, and a majority of them are Democrats, very naturally and properly. They understand all about this subsidy idea. Why should I vote for this or any other measure which would enrich the few at the expense of the many and pick the pockets of my hard-working constituents to bolster up the shipbuilding trust?

Taxes, properly so called, are imposts levied and collected solely for the support of the Government in the interests of all the citizens alike. But it is a wrong use of words, in fact, to call a subsidy of this sort something derived from "taxation." It is supplied not by taxation, but by spoliation. It is not an "appropriation," it is a robbery in the form of law. [Applause.]

Shipbuilders appear to be getting along very well without any subsidy. Where is the right or justice in granting subsidies to shipbuilders and make the people pay? If the shipbuilders can not make their business pay by the application of common business rules and laws, why should the taxpayers of this country be asked to put their hands in their pockets so as to guarantee the profits of the enterprise?

Meanwhile the talk about "the shipbuilding interest being the only interest in the United States that is not protected" is all rubbish. Our laws permit the importation of all materials for use in shipbuilding in this country free of duty; in addition to which there is the consideration that the price of iron, steel, lumber, and most other shipbuilding materials is now practically as low here as abroad. Besides, all foreign vessels are rigorously excluded from our coasting trade, all our naval vessels are by law compelled to be built in United States yards, and our mail subsidies are twice or three times as large as those paid by any other nation to its vessels for carrying its ocean mails. If all these considerations do not constitute "protection," what do they do?

The development of our merchant marine can be stimulated by equitable methods, no doubt; if not, that offers no justification for resorting to inequitable methods. Better have no merchant marine in the foreign carrying trade at all than to have one that has been built up and sustained by the enforced contributions of the taxpayers of this country. The only proper thing to do with a rattlesnake is to kill it at sight. The only proper way to treat a subsidy proposition in Congress is to jump on it with both feet as soon as it puts in an appearance, and that, too, whether it appears in its own proper person or in the thin disguise of a "merchant marine commission." [Loud applause.]

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] want five minutes?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I should like a minute or two to read a few lines of the evidence educed before the Ways and Means subcommittee on the tobacco growers' question.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I recognize the fact that the gentleman is either the father of this movement or has given as much study to it as anybody, and I would like to ask him this question: We have two sources of revenue—internal revenue and tariff. Now, there are pending in the Ways and Means Committee bills providing for endangering or losing at least fifty or sixty millions of dollars of internal revenue. In this proposition has the gentleman given any idea or consideration to any method of providing an equivalent revenue for what this bill will take off? If he has will he not tell us about it?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, the gentleman's figures as to what it will take off are away over the mark.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I refer to all of the propositions on different subjects.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Oh, the gentleman means to repeal all internal-revenue taxes.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Oh, no; but in this particular case has any consideration been given to making up the revenue that this bill would take away?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, Mr. Chairman, I have not given any study to putting a tax on something else so as to make up the so-called "reduction" that may be caused by passing any one of these bills that the friends of the tobacco growers have introduced, including the one which I have introduced, for these reasons:

1. No revenue is derived from leaf tobacco, Mr. Yerkes testified.

2. The revenue derived from hand twist is about $750,000 to $750,000. Mr. Yerkes says, an insignificant sum, you see.

Before we knew these facts—before Mr. Yerkes testified before the committee last week—at our first hearing before the committee, February 4, I stated that we could not tax export tobacco, except possibly a stamp police tax to prevent the exportation out of the United States, that we had such a tax from 1868 to 1883, and the Supreme Court of the United States held it valid as a police charge, or stamped tax, and cited the cases.

After the hearing I talked with the tobacco growers who were here and they said they would rather tax the export manufactured tobacco as we had under the law of 1868 to 1883 rather than have no legislation on the subject, that the growers could not be part in any worse fix than they are under existing laws.

But this was in the supposition that to give the growers the relief they wanted and intended to continue to raise tobacco could not be granted without repealing the tax from the natural leaf and hand twist to the export manufactured.

But we now have the facts showing that revenue will be granted to the tobacco growers in leaf tobacco to everybody, and but a small amount will be diverted from the Treasury to repeal the tax on twist. The farmers say they want not any relief if they insist on the stamping and twist proposition, so in my country they have all agreed to let us work from the tobacco in manufactured form.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. CLARK. As I understand the gentleman's contention. The question is this: Whether under the guise of this police stamp tax, you can really levy a revenue export tax in violation of the Constitution?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The Supreme Court, through Mr. Justice Bradley, speaking for the whole court, in both of the cases to which I refer held that the police-stamp tax law was valid as a "charge," not as a tax, for poncing the export or to be exported—have to enter the United States and prevent frauds by the exporter. For example: Where a man said he was going to export tobacco, and therefore it was not taxable, that we simply took his word for it, and that a tax levied on it—in that case, 30 cents—

Mr. CLARK. Thirty cents a pound?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Thirty-two cents for a long time, and in some part of the time, on the tobacco, not per pound, I think, but on the leaves or hogshead, not according to value. The facts are all set in the cases to which I have referred, one of which is to be found in 92 United States Reports, page 447, Burgess v. Page, tobacco; in 117 United States Reports, Turpin against Burgess, pipe tobacco. These suits were entered for an enormous amount of tax paid under protest. The court held that the 32-cent "tax" and the 30-cent "tax" were both valid as police charges to pay the cost of seeing that the exporter, whether a domestic or foreign tobacco, and stamp placed on the export identified the tobacco, and thus secured its shipment abroad, and if not, its ultimate taxation, if not, in fact, exported. Thus fraud on the Government was prevented and the proceeds were used for revenue. I contend—

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman that I am with the tobacco growers, but my question was as to Congress and as to this question as to whether or not you had any substitute for this revenue that you are going to lose. The question I ask is this: Can you, under the guise of this police-stamp tax, levy such a tax as to bring revenue into the Treasury on exports in violation of the constitutional provision which says that you shall not have an export tax at all?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That direct question was raised in both of these cases that I have referred to, and the court squarely met the question and said this particular charge or "tax" so called was a valid police stamp tax, whether it was 30 cents or whether it was 10 cents; the amount of the tax made no difference. It was valid because it was a police tax, as I have explained. When Congress repealed it the title of the act repealing it read something like this: "An act to repeal the export tax on tobacco" (using the word "tax"); and counsel argued that Congress had declared this a "tax"—an "export tax." But the court said, "We are not bound by what Congress says." Simply because Congress said it was a "tax" does not make it a "tax." It was no more a tax, Mr. Justice Bradley said, than taxing the ship that carries it away from the United States to a foreign land. But I did not expect to discuss these questions, Mr. Chairman. The revenue over and above the enforcement of this law was of course used as "revenue."

Mr. BOWIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to make a suggestion—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will not my great benefactor, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. McCLEARY], yield me two or three minutes or five minutes more? I have not really stated what I started to say; I have been so diverted. I desired to talk on another branch of this subject just a minute or two.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I would just as far as I yield to the gentleman. I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I thank my friend.

Mr. BOWIE. Mr. Chairman, I rose to make this suggestion, that so far as the tobacco growers from the portion of the country I represent could we not consider—[illegible] without it?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Oh, yes, my friend is exactly right, [illegible] the suggestion shows the [illegible] of this tax to exports is [illegible] Mr. Yerkes [illegible] simply a request to his collectors all over the United States to find out how much tax would be diverted from the Treasury of the United States in the event we take the 6-cent tax off all hand-twist tobacco—stemmed and leaf tobacco—and after he had gotten in all [illegible] at his hands, he said it would [illegible] to seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars a year.

Here is his language, on page 51 of the hearings last week:

It is very difficult, Mr. Chairman, for me to say exactly what amount of tax [illegible] twisted manufactured tobacco.

Then again, on page 53, I ask: [illegible] more of that section [illegible] Then I understand you, Mr. Commissioner, [illegible] that the proper entry [illegible] to the [illegible]

The section I referred to is the first section of my bill, which gives free trade to everyone in the natural leaf, just like corn and wheat.

We had a tax of 30 cents on hand-twist tobacco from March 3, 1865, to July 13, 1866, which I alluded to in my former speech, and we received about $1,000 revenue in six months. We had a tax on the "fine-cut" tobacco, "[illegible] kinds, taxed as one or tobacco, as I [illegible] so small as to be practically not worth collecting. For twenty months the amount, at 30 cents a pound, was only $20,000. Think of that! That was in 1866 to 1868. The rate was 24 cents under this law.

Here we are relieving the hand-twist tobacco of the United States, asking that 6 cents per pound be taken off that class of tobacco, and also that it be taken off stem tobacco.

Mr. Yerkes says that giving us free trade in leaf tobaccos, which, I believe, all these bills call for—I am sure mine does—will not reduce the revenues of the Government at all. And yet the marvelous fact is that to-day upon the statute books of our country there is a tax of 6 cents a pound on leaf tobacco when sold by anybody but the grower himself to a consumer. Think of a tax of 6 cents a pound on natural-leaf tobacco—a tax [illegible] the United States, and in such a [illegible] in the United States is now engaged in the business of selling the natural leaf to "the consumers" of the United States. Yet that tax and restriction are there, and it is such a restraint, such a restriction upon the action of the non-producer who undertakes to sell leaf tobacco to consumers or other people, that no one is engaged in that business—not one. Why is it there but to hobble the grower and control his tobacco, as it does?

The consumer buys no natural leaf unless he buys it from the producer, and they live so far apart that the consumer is forced to buy his tobacco, which you have seen exhibited here to-day by my friend from Kentucky—the "manufactured" product—from the tobacco trust. We are not asking to invade the revenues of the Government on that proposition. We are asking simply that you take away a restraint now placed upon the article by an iniquitous provision of the law, for which both parties, Democrats and Republicans, must be held responsible.

By a later act, the act of April 12, 1902, Congress said that when tobacco was subjected to any change except curing it became manufactured tobacco, so that the farmer if he makes the least change in the natural leaf of his own growth (except for his personal consumption) he becomes a manufacturer, and must pay a manufacturer's tax of 6 cents a pound, and must box up all the tobacco he manufactures, which is an outrageous inhibition in itself.

Now, Mr. Yerkes, the Commissioner, did not approve the removal of the tax on hand-twist tobacco, but he approved free trade in leaf tobacco. He disapproves of the proposition with reference to hand-twist tobacco, not because it will reduce the revenue of the Government to the extent of $750,000, but because this class of tobacco, if freed from taxation, will take the place of the manufactured tobacco.

Now, I can not believe that. Manufactured tobacco is consumed by those whom you may call the aristocrats of the country. The laboring class—the laborers in the mine and in the cornfield and cottonfield and out in the camps—use the old country tobacco, the real, genuine tobacco which you have seen here to-day.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, reserving the balance of my time, I ask that the bill be now read for amendment and debate under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. McCLEARY] having reserved the remainder of his time, the Chair [illegible] general debate is now closed, and directs the reading of the bill.

The Clerk, proceeding to read the bill, read as follows:

For office of sealer of weights and measures: For sealer of weights and measures, $2,500; assistant sealer of weights and measures, $1,200; clerk, $1,000; laborer, $480; in all, $6,080.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of making some inquiry of the chairman of this committee [Mr. McCLEARY] relative to some of these appropriations. I find that this year we are [illegible] a million and a half of dollars more than we did last year, and that last year we appropriated about $1,[illegible] than we did the year before. These [illegible] appropriations for the District are increasing year by year, and this year especially, to an alarming amount.

I notice here in this department of the sealer of weights and measures that you have a salary for the chief of this office of $2,500, and you have an assistant sealer of weights and measures at $1,200, and you have a second assistant sealer of weights and measures at $900, then a clerk at $1,000, and then a laborer at $480; in all, $6,080.

This is a good number of salaried positions in this office and [illegible] in contrast with what is done in my own city of Worcester, Mass., where we have 125,000 people, and all that is paid in the department of the sealer of weights is $800, and for only one person. I do not know for certain, but I am inclined to think that you have appropriated here for the office of sealer of weights and measures twice what is appropriated in the great city of Boston. I should like to know whether this appropriation runs in the same channel with what it has been heretofore, because we all know that one to be competent to perform the duties of sealer of weights and measures is not required to have a very skilled knowledge of mechanics or to be an expert. You can take a man out of any machine shop who will be a fit person for sealer of weights and measures. It is not necessary that he should have any special education to prepare himself for that work. I ask why it is necessary then that we should appropriate here $6,080 for these sealers of weights and measures, a clerk, and a laborer? I [illegible] it is [illegible] disproportionate to the amount of service that can be rendered in that department.

I do not know that this is the rule; I do not know but you have had these same salaries and the same number of employees heretofore, and I ask for information on the subject. I understand that here in other departments you appropriate with a very lavish hand. Here is the office of the corporation counsel, appropriated for on the sixth page of the bill. We have passed over that. It runs through several offices. My attention was called particularly to this office of the sealer of weights and measures, because of what I knew existed in my own city, and I am inclined to think that very nearly as much service is rendered in Worcester, although it is a smaller city than this. At least more than half the service is rendered there that is rendered here, and we pay, if I mistake not, about $800 there, while here you pay $6,080. I rose more particularly for the matter of information.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, by way of answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts, I would say that until a few years ago the office of sealer of weights and measures was a fee office, paid according to the service, the incumbents making out of it what they could. Some five or six years ago, after due deliberation by the Committee on the District of Columbia—the legislative committee—it was concluded that this should be a salaried office.

I will say to the gentleman that the fees of the office more than pay the salaries that are herein provided for, and in the appropriation for these salaries we have followed the recommendations of the Commissioners, who have this matter in charge and who know of the needs to be met.

I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether he has heard any complaint from any of the business men of the District that their weights or measures are examined too frequently?

Mr. THAYER. I have not.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Has anyone complained that the weights and measures used in this District are too nearly correct?

Mr. THAYER. I have not heard anybody complaining, because they all seem to have a piece of the pork, and all months are filled. All through this bill, from beginning to end, it looks as if nobody objected or complained. I am simply comparing what you are paying here with what they are paying in other cities, and I think it is an important sum and that some one ought to investigate the matter. Because the taxpayers here do not have to pay the entire expense, but only pay half of it, is no reason why we should pay each department twice as much as is required for a proper conduct of the business. I do not understand from the gentleman now whether he has ascertained that it is necessary to have as many officials at as high prices as are here provided for. He simply says that a few years ago the fee system was in operation. That has been done away with in this city. I am very glad of it.

It has been done away with generally throughout the country; but that does not prove that there is not too much appropriated for this department. It seems that no one has investigated it. I suppose it has been recommended by some one. The sealer of weights and measures may be an ordinary person, taken out of any manufacturing establishment—an ordinary mechanic. I suppose if some one had recommended that he be allowed $5,000 a year no one would have questioned it. The question in my mind is, Has this committee investigated this matter, so that they know that it is requisite to have so many assistant sealers of weights and measures as are provided for, and whether the price paid is a fair price? That was what I rose to ask. I do not know but it is proper, I do not know but they work day and night; I do not know as they are paid enough, and it seems nobody else knows. We are simply passing this provision and others in this bill without knowing anything about them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Special assessment office: For special assessment clerk, $1,700; seven clerks, at $1,200 each; two clerks, at $900 each; in all, $11,000.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill about this item. It occurs to me that it is a very large item for clerk hire for the special assessment work. I notice there is an appropriation of $100,000 for the assessment and permit work. I take it that this is work that is done under what is known as special assessments, so in appropriating $100,000 you are paying all the clerks. Now, if I rightly understand the bill, the business of these clerks is to keep track of these special assessments—that is, making up the tax bills. Am I right? Is the business of these special-assessment clerks to make up the bookkeeping and bookkeeping part of what is known as the "special-assessment work" for which you appropriate $100,000.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. COWHERD. Then I ask the gentleman if he does not think it is a pretty large item of bookkeeping expense for what is known as the "special-assessment work" of the District, where there is very little work of that character done?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. There has been the same appropriation for a series of years, and it is the sum recommended by the Commissioners for this work. The question has not been raised before.

Mr. COWHERD. Well, I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that this shows ten clerks as I understand it, in this item, to do the bookkeeping of the special-assessment work of the District of Columbia. Now, the House knows that there is very little special-assessment work done in the District of Columbia. In many cities paving is done by special assessments, and grading is done by special assessments, and there are special assessments for sidewalks and for sewers. But in the District of Columbia there is practically none of that work. We have a sidewalk tax as a special-assessment tax, and probably some sewer and water-main tax.

That is practically all there is, and yet here is a force of nine clerks provided for taking care of the bookkeeping end of that small business. I submit to the House and to the gentleman in charge of the bill that this is not economical legislation, and that we are entitled to more information than the gentleman has given us to warrant an appropriation of that kind.

The Clerk read as follows:

Street-sweeping office: For superintendent, $2,500; assistant superintendent and clerk, $1,600; clerk, $1,000; four inspectors, at $1,200 each; ten inspectors, at $1,100 each; three assistant inspectors, at $900 each; foreman of public dumps, $900; messenger and driver, $600; in all, $25,100.

Mr. THAYER. Here we are again, Mr. Chairman, this time providing for a superintendent of the street-sweeping force. I suppose it is for the superintendence of the street sweeping, if it is street sweeping, of these "white-winged angels," who scatter the filth over the surface instead of letting it stay in one place. Twenty-five thousand one hundred dollars for superintending these white-winged passengers, as I understand it, in sweeping the streets. Now, what I wish to find out is whether there is any need of paying $25,000 and making an appropriation of such a size as that for superintending sweeping the streets. I think it is an outrage upon the taxpayers of the country and upon the taxpayers of Washington to appropriate any such amount for that purpose. I do not know whether the same amount has been appropriated heretofore or whether the number of persons provided for is the same. I am entirely ignorant on the subject, and I should like to get some information from the committee who sit here and appropriate $25,000 for superintending the street-sweeping force.

That may be a matter of very little importance to them, but when a road-tender, every carter in my district, that can not live on the pay he is receiving, asks that you allow an increase, they will tell you to death before it will be granted. I think we had better look at the bagatelle as well as the spigot and see where the Treasury is suffering. I would like to have some information on the subject. If it is proper and right I have no objection to it, but we should not let this measure go through without some reliable information in this matter. I should like to know whether provisions are made for the same number as there were last year, and whether they are to receive the same salary that was appropriated last year, and whether it is or is not necessary we should have the amount appropriated. In short, let us know something of what we are legislating about.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, it costs something short of $[illegible] to keep the streets of Washington clean. And I think that those who are familiar with cities all over the country will say that they are kept comparatively clean. To keep them clean requires the services of several hundred men, including the "white wings" referred to by the gentleman from Massachusetts. The men thus employed need supervision. That supervision is provided in the paragraph now under consideration.

My friend will note that at the head of the supervisory force is a superintendent. He has one assistant and one clerk. Then there are seventeen inspectors who immediately supervise the work.

The streets are divided into districts, to the end that the men engaged in the work shall have immediate supervision during its progress. The seventeen inspectors are assigned to that duty and there are none too many.

The salaries are not high. The salary of the superintendent, $2,000, is regarded as by no means high. Indeed, the superintendent himself thinks it should be increased.

Mr. THAYER. I notice that the gentleman said there had been a recommendation made that the salary be increased. Is there any salary here where there has been a recommendation for a decrease, or any recommendation of that kind with reference to the whole appropriation?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Nobody is especially urging decreases, but——

Mr. THAYER. Who is urging the increases except the men who are receiving the salaries?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. This is precisely what you have the committee for—to take into consideration the merits of the requests for increases.

The Clerk continued the reading of the bill, as follows:

That pressers, inspectors and other employees temporarily employed in connection with painting, repairing and work at the stables and repairs of horses, harness, and wagons, when specifically and in writing authorized by the Commissioners of the District, and all persons employed in connection with the proper execution of such work, shall be paid from appropriations for the same authorized for such work, and the Commissioners of the District, in their annual report to Congress, shall report the number of pressers, inspectors and other employees performing clerical or other work, and their work and the amount paid to each, and out of what appropriation, together with the same expected for horses, harness, and wagons and all horses, buggies, or carriages owned or maintained by the District of Columbia shall so far as may be practicable, be provided for in stables owned or operated by said District.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill how many District officers are provided with horses and carriages at the expense of the District government?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is a member of the legislative committee of the District of Columbia. A report was recently made on that subject and referred to his committee. Being well informed as to the work of his committee, my friend probably knows the answer to his own question.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, to my knowledge no report has been made on this subject to the District Committee of the House since I have been a member of it. Therefore I have no information whatever on the subject. And I ask the gentleman if he has the information to give it to the House. If he has not, I submit the House is entitled to some information. We have had a great deal of talk around here about various Government officials having horses and carriages, and I think we are entitled to know how many the District officials have.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Speaking from recollection and not being sure of being absolutely correct, I should say that no one, except possibly the three Commissioners, has a carriage which is used for personal purposes.

Mr. COWHERD. And they are the only officers for whom free carriages are furnished?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. As far as I can now recollect. There are other men, of course, in the District service who necessarily have conveyances to be used in the discharge of their official duties.

Mr. COWHERD. Of course I understand that. I understand that inspectors perhaps sometimes have to have carriages, and various officers of the fire department have to have them. But I refer to official carriages, such as I have heard discussed on the other bill.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. The three Commissioners, Mr. Chairman, are the only ones of which I know, and even in the case of the Commissioners the carriages are used chiefly for official purposes, I understand.

The Clerk continued the reading of the bill, as follows:

Superintendent of insurance: For superintendent of insurance, $2,500; examiner, $[illegible]; for statistician, $1,400; temporary clerk hire, $600; in all, $[illegible].

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking a question. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill what is the organization of the insurance that requires, I think, $7,000? What have they to do?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. This department, Mr. Chairman, is to this District precisely what the department of insurance is to a State. I am sure that the gentleman understands what such a department is for.

Mr. PERKINS. Yes: but I do not know why they require a department costing $7,000 to look over insurance policies. That is all they have to do.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. The District of Columbia is an entity apart from any State or Territorial organization, and this District has precisely the same needs for an insurance department that any State has.

Mr. PERKINS. Are the insurance companies incorporated in this district?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. How many?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. And there are many foreign companies doing business in this city. The insurance commissioner of the State of Maryland has no authority in the premises nor the insurance commissioner of the State of Virginia, and there is no other way to protect the citizens of this District except by having just such an organization as is required in the several States, and which is provided in this paragraph.

The Clerk continued the reading of the bill, as follows:

For purchase of books, $5,000;

For binding, $[illegible];

For fitting up building, and other contingent expenses, $9,000;

In all, $14,000.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I would move, in line 15, to strike out the word "five" and insert the word "ten;" and I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill something about the provision in reference to the library. Now, the gentleman is also on the committee having charge of the Congressional Library, is he not?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I am, sir.

Mr. PERKINS. I know, of course, Mr. Chairman, that the expense of running a library is large in proportion to the amount that is expended on books, but it does seem to me that in this report made by the committee the amount expended for sack is out of proportion to the amount expended for bread. Here is an expenditure of $85,000, of which only one-seventh, 14 per cent of the entire amount expended on the library, goes for the purchase of books. Now, I think, Mr. Chairman, that in the Congressional Library, where there was some criticism recently as to the proportion of operating expenses in proportion to the amount expended for books, the amount spent for the purchase of books was very large, some 14 per cent. And it does seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that to expend $95,000 for a library where there was only $5,000 worth of books for the benefit of readers of the District is unusual.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Do I understand the gentleman to state that there are only $5,000 worth of books?

Mr. PERKINS. The appropriation this year——

Mr. HEMENWAY. But the gentleman remembers there are many thousand dollars' worth of books already there.

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, yes; books that have been bought; but for this year there is an appropriation of $35,000 for the library, and only 14 per cent of that goes for books. That certainly is unusual, I think. The gentleman in charge of the bill is familiar with these questions of libraries and can tell me if that is not a much smaller percentage than is expended for books in the Congressional Library. I may be wrong, but I do not think I am.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. In answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS], which is a perfectly proper and pertinent one, I direct his attention to the fact that in the appropriation bill for 1903 there was an appropriation of $40,000 for the purchase of books. Of that money quite a considerable sum remains unexpended. That is the reason why the appropriation was made relatively small this year.

Mr. PERKINS. Then I understand there is a balance of how much unexpended?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I have not in mind the exact amount. But the committee thought that the unexpended balance and this $5,000 would buy all that could be catalogued and got into working order for the library this coming year.

Mr. PERKINS. What does the gentleman think should be the proper proportion of money expended for books in proportion to the running expenses of the library?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. That question can not be answered definitely. It depends on circumstances. The gentleman understands, of course, that this library has a great many donations of books. The library has now some 70,000 volumes. It is expected that when it is at its normal working power, it will have about 100,000 volumes. We are adding to that number as rapidly as the committee thinks the books can be catalogued and put into use.

Mr. PERKINS. Well, does not the gentleman think that the expenditure of $20,000 for salaries is a pretty liberal one for a library of this size?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. If it were the initial appropriation, if this appropriation of $5,000 were the initial appropriation for the purchase of books and that for handling the books were $20,000, it would, of course, be out of all proportion.

Mr. PERKINS. I want to ask the gentleman whether he does not think that for a library of 70,000 volumes $20,000 is a pretty large pay roll? That is not a great library like the Congressional Library, which requires a large number of highly skilled people to properly catalogue and arrange the books.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. The gentleman will recall two facts to begin with, and I need only remind him of them.

In the first place, the building in which this library is located was donated to the District of Columbia by Mr. Carnegie. His usual rule in making such donations is to require that the community to be benefited by the donation shall bind itself to appropriate annually for maintenance a sum equal to 10 per cent of the money which he gives for the building. The cost of this building has been $875,000. Ten per cent of that is $87,500. We do not appropriate in toto that amount. We are within that 10 per cent. In this case Mr. Carnegie did not make the usual requirement. In the second place, the building is quite large, and is intended for a larger library than is there now. It has not simply one but several rooms. These rooms must be practically all in use, each being partly supplied with its equipment. Hence the amount of money required to handle the books is larger than if this were a completed library in a smaller building.

Mr. PERKINS. Then the gentleman does not himself think that this allowance for clerk hire is too large?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Why, they ask for fifty-odd people, and we have given them only thirty-seven.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask what the gentleman thinks himself.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. And they made a good argument, as the gentleman can see by reading the hearings.

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, they will ask for anything; I know that.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. No. I want to say, in justice to the gentlemen composing the board having charge of this library, that they are among the best citizens of this District.

Mr. PERKINS. I do not question their citizenship.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. They are doing the work as a labor of love, and they gave the committee the benefit of their best judgment. Speaking for the library board, its president, Mr. Theodore W. Noyes, of the Evening Star, said to the subcommittee on this point:

We suggest that the question of the creation of an adequate, original, normal library force has not yet been determined, and that until the inadequacies of [illegible] experience were available it could not be wisely and finally settled. In regard to the working-force estimates in general, I will say there is not an item that is urged without careful consideration and without the conviction that it is necessary for the library's maintenance.

It is far from our purpose to swell the total of the library appropriation. We do not think that it needs to be or ought to be largely increased. We propose a cut of $5,000 in the contingent fund appropriation of last year, and if a further reduction of the aggregate of library estimates is necessary, we suggest that you look for cutting purposes, first to our estimates for books; and we ask that you give careful consideration on its merits to each item that is presented as required to provide additional needed force and the very few and slight increases proposed in salaries.

And to show that the salaries recommended by the library board were very moderate, Mr. Noyes gave the following figures, showing salaries paid in the public libraries of cities of approximately the same size as Washington:

	Newark.	Providence.	Minneapolis.	San Francisco.
Librarian	$4,200	$4,000	$3,300	$3,000
Assistant librarian	1,600	1,500	1,200	1,320
Reference librarian	1,000	[illegible]	840	840
Assistant reference librarian	420	468	.....	.....

In making up the salary list in this bill the committee tried to be prudent without being parsimonious.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York insist on his amendment?

Mr. PERKINS. No, sir; I withdraw it, in view of the explanation.

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of the money appropriated by this act shall be used for the payment of premiums or other cost of fire insurance.

Mr. BARTLETT. I move to amend the paragraph just read by adding at the end of line 3, page 13, the following:

Nor shall any part of the sums appropriated by this act be used for the payment for the use of hired telephones, or pay for any telephone exceeding a rate of more than $5 per month for each telephone, and no contract shall be made in excess of said sum of $5 per month for each telephone.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. BARTLETT. Perhaps it would be just as well to have the point of order stated and decided now. I do not think my amendment is subject to a point of order. Does the gentleman make a point of order?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I simply reserve it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, addressing myself first to the point of order, I will say that if the paragraph just read is proper on this bill—and I have no question that it is—then this is in order as an amendment to that particular section. What is the section which I propose to amend? It reads:

No part of the money appropriated by this act shall be used for the payment of premiums or other cost of fire insurance.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would prefer that the gentleman from Minnesota should state his point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; I should like to know what it is. I was just trying to anticipate what it might be.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not ask the gentleman to discuss the point of order now, but simply to state what it is.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. It struck me when the amendment was stated that it was legislation; that is the thought I had in mind.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota makes the point that the amendment is out of order because it proposes legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not think the amendment is subject to the point of order. It is simply a limitation upon the expenditure of the money proposed to be appropriated by this bill. The particular paragraph now under consideration declares that—

No part of the money appropriated by this act shall be used for the payment of premiums or other cost of fire insurance.

Now, the amendment which I offer undertakes to relieve the District government, if not the people of the District, from one of the most oppressive monopolies, one of the most extortionate corporations in reference to its charges that I know of in any part of the United States.

I apprehend that there is not a city in the United States where the charge for telephone service is as high as that imposed in this city. Congress has the power, and it should, whenever it has the opportunity, exercise the power, to reach this corporation or these corporations which impose upon the people by the extortionate charges they make for the extremely inefficient service which they render to the public.

Mr. BOWIE. What do they charge?

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not know, except from some personal experience. I believe it is about $10 a month and 5 cents for each message exceeding three sent from a particular place. At our hotels we are charged 5 cents for each message.

Mr. LACEY. Would it not be well for the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] to modify his amendment so as to make the limitation conform exactly to the statute, so that while the legislation applying to private individuals is being contested in the courts this amount shall not draw out of the Treasury any [illegible] in excess of that fixed in the statute regulating the rates of [illegible].

Mr. BARTLETT. I did not know that statute before me.

Mr. LACEY. I supposed the gentleman had those figures before him.

Mr. BARTLETT. No, sir. Yesterday and to-day I have [illegible] in this place where [illegible] are [illegible] of course, but [illegible] to [illegible] from Minnesota [Mr. McCLEARY] [illegible] in this bill [illegible] an amendment [illegible] the people, and [illegible] if we can [illegible] all of the people of the District, from the extortion of this most extortionate [illegible].

Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe that is all I desire to say with reference to the merits of the amendment. As to the point of order, it seems to me that [illegible] ought to run among [illegible] from an appropriation bill that every one here ought to be [illegible] the opportunity to pass an amendment like this. We have been struggling with it for some time, and while this is a mere [illegible] of remedying this abuse, it is certainly a step in the right direction towards it. I do not think this is subject to the point of order. Mr. Chairman, and I have had some experience, although I think there are only a number of [illegible] tion of the Committee on Ways and Means. The one I refer to is found on page 641 of the Digest and Manual:

"[illegible] and armament of naval vessels a proviso [illegible] to be a meritorious [illegible]."

I might read numbers of decisions made by chairmen of the Committee of the Whole [illegible].

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I am sure my friend will permit a suggestion.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. On page 29, line 13, of the bill is a place where the gentleman's amendment would certainly be in order.

Mr. BARTLETT. Where is that?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Page 29, line 13. Now, my suggestion to the gentleman is this——

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman permit me to say that I went to him this morning and asked him to point out a place where the amendment would be in order.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. In the hurry of the moment I could not find it; but I have found it now.

Mr. BARTLETT. I knew if the gentleman could not find it that I could not.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I suggest to my friend from Georgia whether it would not be wise—I will ask him, in the first place, whether he knows what rates are actually being charged.

Mr. BARTLETT. No; I do not know, except as to the rates charged to individuals.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Might it not be true that the rates now being charged are really less than those suggested by the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not know.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. In view of the statement just made by my friend, I am sure he will consent to withdraw his amendment for the present, until he has time to ascertain exactly what the rates are, and then, if he finds that there should be an amendment, he can offer it on page 29, line 13.

Mr. BARTLETT. I am perfectly willing to take that course. I stated to my friend that I wanted to offer an amendment.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. The gentleman is entirely correct, but I could not at the moment find the place for him.

Mr. BARTLETT. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the amendment at this place, that is, I am willing to withdraw it, if it is the will of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BARTLETT. I will offer it at the place suggested by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be withdrawn. The Chair understands the gentleman wishes to be recognized to offer his amendment when page 29 is reached.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

"[illegible] of stables of the engineer department, including [illegible] made from any other fund."

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I move that [illegible].

Mr. THAYER. [illegible] and I have [illegible] to make when the paragraph is completed.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. This paragraph can be considered as pending. Let us rise with the understanding that this paragraph is to be considered as pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. [illegible] reported that the committee had had under consideration the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 6089. An act granting an increase of pension to Emma L. Nagle;

H. R. 8227. An act granting a pension to [illegible] P. [illegible];

H. R. 10145. An act to provide for appeals, writs of error, and other appellate proceedings from the circuit and district courts of Dakota, and for other purposes;

H. R. 865. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles C. [illegible];

H. R. 6252. An act granting a pension to Mary Huff;

H. R. 2019. An act granting a pension to Mallie Gwynn;

H. R. 11021. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph Weems;

H. R. 8850. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas Joyce;

H. R. 9308. An act permitting the building of a dam across the [illegible] River [illegible] in the State of Minnesota;

H. R. 10. An act establishing a United States court at Marietta, Ind. T.; and

H. R. 4045. An act [illegible].

Mr. WACHTER, also from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 7620. An act defining the limit of navigation of the Osage River in the State of Missouri;

H. R. 8435. An act to amend the act of Congress of March 11, 1902, relating to homesteads; and

H. R. 8345. An act for the relief of the State of Iowa.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 4508. An act to provide for the [illegible] of the circuit and district courts of the [illegible] District of Florida in the city of Fernandina, in said district—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 752. An act [illegible] of a public building in the city of Lewisburg, W. Va.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

S. 3218. An act for the relief of Civil Engineer P. C. Asserson, retired—to the Committee on Claims.

S. 4079. An act for the relief of James Denton—to the Committee on Claims.

S. 4165. An act to provide that a term of the circuit and district court of the United States for the district of Vermont may be held at Newport—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

FORT HALL INDIAN RESERVATION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following concurrent resolution:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
March 1, 1904.

4. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I do not care to occupy the time of the Senate in the discussion of this bill unless Senators desire some explanation of it. Perhaps they do. I will ask first, however, that the report of the committee, which is very short, occupying but a few pages, be read. It will explain the provisions of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. STEWART February 12, 1904, as follows:

[illegible] 8 [illegible] and having carefully considered the same, beg to report a substitute for said bill and recommend its passage.

[illegible] the health department [illegible] District of Columbia [illegible] of the working force [illegible] The subject of guarding the public [illegible] attention [illegible] dairy business, with a sufficient knowledge of dairying to be competent to [illegible] between persons and dairymen in regard to the proper [illegible] elected to take charge of the department [illegible] unwholesome milk and cream. [illegible] dairy states, such as Nebraska, Iowa, Wisconsin, Illinois, Minnesota, and others [illegible]

The health of the community and particularly of the [illegible] depended upon pure milk [illegible] have less facilities of procuring [illegible] than they have for procuring [illegible] food.

The substitute bill proposed by your committee [illegible] ment by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia of a superintendent of dairies who shall be familiar with the dairy business and have a knowledge of supervision.

The substitute bill also provides for the appointment of an assistant chemist, who shall assist the superintendent of dairies and perform such other services in the office of the health officer of the District. [illegible] farms and other places where milk is produced for sale in the District of Columbia. These inspectors must be familiar with the dairy business and be veterinary surgeons. They are to be appointed by the Commissioners to serve in the District to examine the milk brought into the District, to examine cows in dairies and the cows and apparatus used in the distribution and handling of milk.

The substitute bill also provides that all the inspectors shall have access to all places requiring their inspection, and to make such examinations of the premises wherever it may be found and their employees, including the owner, their presence and testimony, and to administer oaths in any case requiring an inspection to be freely tendered, and shall not be [illegible] milk into the District of Columbia [illegible]

The salary of the superintendent is proposed at $2,000 per annum, of the assistant chemist at $2,000, of the veterinary surgeons [illegible] each, of the inspectors at $1,000 each, of the clerk at $1,000, and of the laborer at $840, making the aggregate $8,640.

Under the present system the duties of the various persons connected with the supervision and inspection of milk and cream and to the dairies are of a mixed character and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia were unable to state to your committee as will appear in letters printed in the appendix, what part of the expense of supervision of these persons of mixed character should be charged as a part of the expense of administering the laws relating to the sale of milk and cream in the District of Columbia. The mixed character of the service required of those engaged in administering the milk laws is one of the objections to the system. The present system should be supervised by officers whose sole duty shall be to enforce the laws and regulations with regard to milk. The Commissioners recognize this necessity, and in a way propose to provide for it in their bill transmitted to your committee. The difficulty about the Commissioners' bill, however, is that it does not provide a qualified and responsible superintendent or chief to conduct the business.

Besides, it includes a bacteriologist at $2,000 and an assistant bacteriologist at $1,200. If such officers are useful for any purpose, they certainly will not [illegible] The [illegible] proposed by the Commissioners' bill are as follows:

[illegible]	$2,000
[illegible] $40 each	7,800
[illegible] inspectors, at $1,000 each	7,000
[illegible]	1,000
[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible] chemist	1,000
Present chemist, with increased salary	2,400
Total	[illegible]

[illegible] proposed by the Commissioners is also objectionable in not adequately [illegible] for manifest defects in the existing law, among which are [illegible]

[illegible] into said District, or to [illegible] of this [illegible] a, on the recommendation [illegible] rules and regulations [illegible]

Sec. 4. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I do not care to occupy the time of the Senate in the discussion of this bill unless Senators desire some explanation of it. Perhaps they do. I will ask first, however, that the report of the committee, which is very short, occupying but a few pages, be read. It will explain the provisions of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. STEWART February 12, 1904, as follows:

[illegible] 8 [illegible] and having carefully considered the same, beg to report a substitute for said bill and recommend its passage.

Total	[illegible]

[illegible] proposed by the Commissioners is also objectionable in not adequately [illegible] for manifest defects in the existing law, among which are [illegible]

[illegible] of such uninspected places would [illegible]

[illegible] often sent into [illegible] inspection of milk and [illegible] of the District of Columbia from disease and death resulting from [illegible] milk.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia have called before them and examined the dairymen of this District who are in legitimate business and have heard them at length. Those dairymen are not opposed to the inspection desired. They, however, object to being inspected when there is no inspection of the great mass of milk dealers. They who have establishments and are doing a regular business [illegible] it is pretty rough on them to be annoyed in that way, particularly as there is no head to the department now to whom they can apply for relief against the unreasonable conduct of the inspectors.

I send to the desk a letter from the Milk Dealers' Association which I ask to have read. I believe they are [illegible] views. They were about three or four weeks consider[illegible] matter in various meetings, and they have sent this letter [illegible] as an expression of their unanimous desire for the passage of the pending bill. I ask the Secretary to read the letter.

The Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 26, 1904.

[illegible] Dairymen's Association [illegible] now sold in said District [illegible]

[illegible] of such uninspected places would [illegible]

[illegible] dairymen, and from one [illegible] of the District of Columbia is the matter intrusted to the board of [illegible]

[illegible] anything that you can do toward having the said bill enacted will be [illegible] appreciated by our association.

Very respectfully, yours, J. W. GREGG, President.

Mr. STEWART. If any Senator wants a further explanation of the bill, I am prepared to give it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have some information regarding it.

Mr. STEWART. I shall be glad to give it to the Senator.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is the substitute which has been reported for the bill recommended by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia?

Mr. STEWART. It is not.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is it recommended by the District health officer?

Mr. STEWART. It is not.

Mr. COCKRELL. But it is recommended by the milkmen who furnish the milk in this District? Do I understand that?

Mr. STEWART. They recommend it: yes.

Mr. COCKRELL. And we are asked upon their recommendation to pass the bill?

Mr. STEWART. Not at all. They approve it: they have been called upon for their views, and they have the right to be heard.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly they have the right to be heard, but they are interested in the sale of milk.

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. COCKRELL. It does not seem to me right that their indorsement alone should be considered sufficient for the passage of this bill.

Mr. STEWART. If the Senator will allow me, I will inform him that it is not their indorsement alone. It has the unanimous report of the District of Columbia committee after a careful and patient investigation. I have given the subject much consideration. My attention was particularly called to it when I myself was in the milk business. I have no personal interest in it at the present time. There are evils which this bill remedies. In the first place, there are in the District from two to five hundred places where milk is sold and no inspection is made by the health [illegible] which is in charge of the execution of the milk laws. The [illegible] is the ruling of the police court that the milk laws [illegible] apply to dairies, and that the grocery, saloon, or other place dealing in milk is not subject to inspection unless the dealing in milk is the principal business.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President——

Mr. STEWART. Hold on until I complete this statement.

Mr. COCKRELL. What the Senator has referred to is a defect in the law caused by a decision of the court.

Mr. STEWART. Yes: there may be a defect in the law, but more probably a defect in the decision of the court; but this glaring defect, whether in the decision of the court or the law or the [illegible] of the law, should be remedied, and no effort has been made to remedy it. The health officer has prepared many bills, but none covering this evil.

Then, again, there are in the suburbs of the city, as variously estimated, from 200 to 500 cows, whose milk is gathered up and brought into the city without inspection. I have visited some of [illegible] places, and if my friend from Missouri will go with me I will show him where and how sick cows are kept, from which the milk is collected and sold without inspection. They are generally diseased cows, bought for a very low price by reason of that fact, poorly kept—in fact, half starved—and the milk sold to an unsuspecting community. That is one of the abuses the substitute bill aims to correct. It provides that all milk shall come from an inspected dairy or dairy farm having a license to sell milk. We do not exclude anybody. The provisions of the bill are ample for the protection of all who have clean milk to sell. They can all get a license without the payment of a dollar.

Mr. ALLISON. He has to provide the bottles, I suppose, of course.

Mr. STEWART. He has to buy his own bottles; but they are not inspected. It would do no good if they were.

Mr. COCKRELL. Of whom does he get the license?

Mr. STEWART. The licenses are issued by the authorities of the District. We do not interfere with that.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the Senator will excuse me, how will we regulate the licensing of men with dairies in Virginia, Maryland, and other outside places?

Mr. STEWART. I will come to that.

The bill provides for six inspectors, who shall be veterinary surgeons and familiar with the milk business. They are to be allowed a salary of $1,300 a year. These inspectors, if they are professional men, can do some other business at the same time. Some of those now in the field are efficient officers.

It is the business of these inspectors to visit all places where milk is produced. In case a man has cows in the District, if he applies for a license, these men will be sent to examine the premises to see whether or not he is entitled to a license. If the dairymen in Virginia and Maryland will not allow their places to be inspected, they will not be allowed to bring their milk into the District. The bill provides for keeping such milk out. It provides that it shall be inspected; and if the inspection is resisted, either outside or inside of the District, the milk can not be sold here.

Mr. CLAY. I should like to ask the Senator, is it not true that under this bill, if we shall pass it, no dairyman anywhere in the United States can ship milk into the District of Columbia unless his dairy has been inspected by these inspectors?

Mr. STEWART. Not unless he gets a permit.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is the dairy inspected, or is the milk that is brought into the District of Columbia to be inspected?

Mr. STEWART. The dairy from which the milk comes is to be inspected, and also the milk itself when it comes in.

Mr. CLAY. The inspectors must be veterinary surgeons, and they are themselves to go to the places where the milk is produced and inspect the farms and the milk.

Mr. STEWART. The cows and the dairy farms where milk is produced are to be inspected whether they are situated in Maryland, Virginia, or anywhere else, and if they will not bear inspection the owners are not allowed to bring the milk into the District. It is true there is some milk shipped a long distance; that is, in rare cases. I inquired of the milk men who import milk from a distance if there would be any difficulty in obtaining a license for milk shipped from distant States, and they said there is no difficulty in getting permits for them, because the milk that comes from distant States generally comes from dairies that are inspected where the milk is produced, and as it costs nothing to get a license there would be no difficulty in administering the law as to them.

Mr. CLAY. I desire to call the attention of the Senator to this feature of the bill:

And there shall also be appointed by the said Commissioners, on the recommendation of the health officer, [illegible] veterinary surgeons, who shall be [illegible] by a [illegible] who shall be [illegible] duties of such veterinary surgeons are [illegible] to inspect any places and dairy farms where milk is produced for sale in the District of Columbia.

Why do you want to inspect the farms and places where the milk is produced? Why not inspect the milk as it is? What is the object of inspecting the farms?

Mr. STEWART. If the Senator will visit the places where milk is produced he will agree with me that they need inspection. Many things may render milk unwholesome—disease in the District, filthy stables, bad water, bad feeding or care. All these things it would be the duty of the inspectors to examine, and if the milk comes from a farm or place where it is likely to be contaminated, it will not be allowed to be shipped into the District.

There is another practice which to me is most objectionable, and that is the filling of bottles in milk wagons. Three-fourths of the bottles were formerly filled in that way and a great number of them still are. A large proportion of the bottles are filled with milk in the wagons. This bill provides that the bottles shall be filled in the dairies or at licensed dairy farms and that the bottles shall be cleansed before they are again used.

There are many persons who do not have a place where they can clean the bottles. They do not have the facilities for doing so. The milkmen start out in their wagons with the milk and some bottles. These wagons have been kept in the stable. The milkman gets up in the morning at 3 o'clock. He does not take the time to wash his own hands, much less for washing bottles. He uses up the bottles he has in the wagon, and then he gathers up unwashed bottles wherever he can and refills them.

One of the greatest losses in the business is the stealing of bottles. This bill does not allow a person to use the bottles of another dairyman without the latter's consent, so that if the bottles are stolen they can not be used. There is a punishment provided for using stolen bottles, and one who is caught delivering milk in bottles not belonging to him can not say that he has made a mistake in gathering them up.

The filling of bottles from the sick room and putting milk in bottles that have not been washed constitute a most serious objection. There is no force to look after such matters at present even in the office of the health officer. That official, with the force at his disposal, can not attend to all these matters, and, furthermore, there is nobody in charge of his office who knows anything about the milk business. The health officer has assigned only two inspectors under the present law to operate regularly in the District. These inspectors do not get up at 3 o'clock in the morning, as is necessary, to see what is going on, and there are not enough of them.

This bill provides for six inspectors of dairy farms. They will be sufficient to investigate all places where milk is produced. There are to be eight inspectors constantly on duty in the District, which is none too many.

The milkmen are not opposed to inspection, but they want to have the inspection general. They want all places where milk is sold inspected, and they want all places where milk is produced inspected, and they want a responsible head of the dairy bureau who understands something about the business to whom they can apply, if the inspectors are unreasonable or attempt to levy blackmail upon them. They are then willing to cooperate as, shown by the letter which has already been read. The two mid-day inspectors under the present administration are sometimes very arbitrary and inconsistent in their reports on business men who desire to conform to the law, and the milk dealers are entitled to have a man who knows something about the dairy business in charge of the administration of the law, so that they can have a hearing and have their grievances adjusted, which is not the case under the present régime. In short, the present inspection amounts to little or nothing. Not half of the places where milk [illegible]

Mr. STEWART. [illegible]

Mr. COCKRELL. [illegible] all over the country and [illegible]

Mr. STEWART. Suppose a cow is dying of tuberculosis?

Mr. COCKRELL. You said that nothing but pure milk come from [illegible]

Mr. STEWART. The cow must be healthy and you must keep the [illegible] and the milk kept from contamination.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now [illegible] milk and [illegible] and yet the milk [illegible] of bacteria [illegible]

Mr. STEWART. I think it very doubtful whether a chemist can tell whether [illegible] for examining the cow and when she is, but it does not [illegible] the necessity for a bacteriologist to examine in his [illegible] milk after the [illegible] use it are dead. All [illegible] bug so far as any practical results in [illegible] community are concerned. It is a common saying among scientists that bacteriology is a humbug in this respect. It takes three or four days to examine a sample of milk [illegible] It is of no use for practical purposes. The milk would be drunk and

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. [illegible] the Senator from Nevada [illegible]

Mr. STEWART. [illegible]

Mr. GALLINGER. [illegible] of defending the measure in which he has [illegible]

Mr. [illegible] I am always very [illegible] any record in [illegible]

The controversy as between this bill and the bill which the medical society would favor, and which is favored by the Commissioners of the District, is confined to one or two provisions.

The health officer of the District, who is a very competent man, in my opinion is overloaded with work at the present time. It is notorious that the existing law, which is a reasonably stringent law, and which was placed in the hands of the health officer for enforcement, has been very seriously neglected, and I am very clearly of the opinion that, aside from the pride of the profession which these gentlemen think is involved in this matter, we will be safer if we adopt the plan that has been adopted in most of the States of the Union, and have a man at the head of this bureau, or whatever it may be called, who has practical knowledge of the dairy business and who has knowledge likewise of the diseases of cattle and other matters that are very important in connection with the milk product.

That, Mr. President, is the chief point in controversy. I apprehend that if the Senator from Nevada was willing to substitute [illegible] the District of Columbia for his inspector [illegible] a very good [illegible]

Mr. President, I notice that the medical society suggests that this is an expensive piece of machinery, and yet we have two bills before us sent here by the Commissioners, doubtless prepared by the health officer, and in those bills they ask for [illegible] who would take $1,000 more out of the Treasury than this bill does. So the matter of expense is not worth considering.

I observe that when the health officer was before the committee he was interrogated by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], and he gave these answers on what I conceive to be a very important part of this bill. The health officer said, in response to a question:

> We do away with the word "dairy."
> [illegible]
> Doctor WOODWARD. Yes sir; we make the prohibition on the sale of milk or cream without a license and not on the maintenance of the dairy.
> Senator STEWART. How many of the dairies in the city are underground?
> [illegible] in that way [illegible] we may term rights [illegible] bound to respect. At the present time such places are [illegible]
> Mr. [illegible] What is your definition of a "dairy?" What constitutes [illegible]
> [illegible] principal business is the sale of milk.
> Senator WOODWARD. The sale of milk.
> Mr. [illegible] sale of milk is not the principal business, the proprietor [illegible]
> Doctor WOODWARD. [illegible]
> Senator MCCOMAS. It seems to me that is a very thin distinction.
> Senator STEWART. The judge of the police court was all wrong about it.

The health officer has sent here a bill, with the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the approval, I judge, of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia, which does not propose to regulate this exception [illegible] between two and five hundred places in the District of Columbia, according to the testimony of the health officer, where milk is sold—in saloons, grocery stores, sometimes above ground and sometimes under ground—but the health officer says in his testimony here that they have acquired certain rights with which he does not feel like interfering. The Senator from Nevada very wisely has denned "a dairy" in his bill, and has made provision that will rid us of these places where milk is sold in connection with decaying turnips and cabbages and potatoes, places with which the health officer says in his testimony he does not feel disposed to interfere because those gentlemen have acquired certain rights.

Mr. President, it does seem to me if we will follow—and I will say at this point that I did not intend to participate in this discussion at all—the practices that prevail in the great dairy States of the Union, that prevail in my own State and in other States in New England, which are giving very careful attention to the dairy business and have a practical man who understands his business and who has knowledge of practical chemistry, we will be very apt to get purer milk than we will get if we put it in the hands of the health officer, who is to-day overloaded with work, and in the hands of a bacteriologist who will give us a great many [illegible] in my opinion, will have very little to do with the purity of the milk.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] raises the question whether or not a bacteriologist is not the proper person to determine whether or not milk is pure. Mr. President, ninety-nine one-hundredths of the diseases that exist in this country are health-producing bacteria. The disease-producing bacteria are due to decomposition, or due to filth, or due to some other condition of that kind. If we have pure milk, if we safeguard our law so that it is impossible to offer for sale to the people of this District milk that is affected improperly, there is no danger of bacteria until the milk becomes so old that it becomes disorganized. So in my opinion a chemist is better in dealing with the subject of milk than a bacteriologist.

I know I present a view opposed to that of many distinguished physicians in this District. Those gentlemen have been to me. They are my friends and I am their friends, but I, nevertheless, am presenting a view that has very eminent scientific authority back of it. No less a man than the celebrated Dr. Lawson Tate, who recently died, who was the most famous ovariotomist of his time, who had the greatest success that ever attended a surgeon any where in the world in great abdominal operations, insisted that all that was required was cleanliness, and that when absolute cleanliness was secured there was no danger from the so-called bacteria, which have been talked about so much that the average citizen is afraid to eat, drink, or breathe, lest he be contaminated with bacteria.

Mr. President, I am fully persuaded that the bill to which the Senator from Nevada has given so much attention, a practical dairyman as he is, is safeguarded in every possible way, and that, aside from this little contention as between the medical profession and the Senator, it is the best bill which has been presented to Congress, and, in my judgment, if it is enacted into law it will secure to the people of the District pure milk, which is after all what we desire to secure and all that it is necessary for us to secure.

Mr. McCOMAS. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question before he takes his seat.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. McCOMAS. I expect to vote for this bill, and I like its practical features; but what is there here that tends to detect the bacilli of typhoid fever or tuberculosis? How do you meet that difficulty, which is so often encountered?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am not myself a bacteriologist, but I will say to the Senator that if we get milk from a healthy cow and that if it is free from the contamination of filth or otherwise, in my opinion there is no danger of bacilli or the bacteria appearing in the milk. That is my opinion. It may be that it might occur in isolated cases. It is very possible that such would be the fact, but I do not apprehend that if we have a bacteriologist he is going to analyze every quart of milk that is sent into the District. I do not see how he could do it, and under any supervision that we may have it is barely possible that we would get contamination of that kind. The best we can do, it seems to me, is to have in the dairies healthy cows, pure milk, and then take our chances. I do not believe we can by any process that science has yet discovered guarantee the people of this city or any other city against contamination from incidental causes which may occur in any food product.

Mr. McCOMAS. Is not this also true, I should like to ask the Senator? If there happens to be evidence from these inspectors—and I like this bill—that in a certain section the surface water or the well water indicates the presence of typhoid germs, under the existing law knowledge of that matter might be brought to the attention of the health officer and his force, and they might still look for bacteria upon notification from the inspectors?

Mr. GALLINGER. Unquestionably. This force, which is a very competent force, would doubtless have the power to call in a bacteriologist in an emergency of that kind.

Mr. McCOMAS. Or ask the health officer.

Mr. GALLINGER. Or ask the health officer. The health officer himself, I believe, does not claim to be a bacteriologist.

Mr. McCOMAS. But he has one.

Mr. GALLINGER. This matter of bacteriology does not appeal to me as much as it does, possibly, to some other persons who have not given it so much attention as I have tried to do myself.

There may be defects in this bill. One Senator has raised the question about milk being sent from outside of the District and how we are going to provide for it. Under the present law there is a process for doing it. If we have any proof that impure milk comes from Maryland or Virginia—and milk comes into the District from New York State—that it has come from a dairy or a farm where contamination occurs, one of these inspectors is sent into Maryland, or Virginia, or New York and he makes an official inspection of the dairy farm, and if he is refused the privilege of [illegible] that all we have to do is to revoke the permit and let those people sell the milk outside of us.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator from New Hampshire permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. I wish to call his attention to page 7 of this bill, section 2:

> That every place in the District of Columbia where milk or cream is sold is a dairy.

Under that provision if milk or cream is sold in any place whatever, it would be a dairy?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. CLAY. Now, let us take the latter provision of that section:

> Each dairy shall have house room sufficient for cooling, preserving, and bottling milk, and [illegible] bottles, cans, and all utensils of every kind used in the business.

Now, I ask the Senator this question: You take a little place where milk and cream are sold in small quantities. It must have the [illegible] in this section.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. CLAY. I ask the Senator if it is not true that the second section of this bill, on page 7, would be [illegible]—

that every place in the District of Columbia where milk or cream is sold is a dairy—

That is, where it is the principal business?

Mr. GALLINGER. No. Then you would open up a door [illegible] been and every village house in the city for the sale of milk. You [illegible] very thing we are aiming at.

Mr. CLAY. That would practically prevent parties from dealing in milk [illegible]

Mr. GALLINGER. It would indeed, unless—

Mr. CLAY. You intend, in other words, if milk is sold in any quantity [illegible] was a dairy, is a dairy, and [illegible] in the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. They must have facilities for giving us [illegible]

Mr. CLAY. That would evidently close out all the small concerns.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should say that would be the natural and [illegible] which I think it is very desirable to accomplish.

Mr. CLAY. I want to ask the Senator this question. Section 2 [illegible] umbia or to [illegible]

Mr. GALLINGER. I [illegible] would apply everywhere where [illegible]

Mr. CLAY. That is what I [illegible]

Mr. GALLINGER. I [illegible] so.

Mr. CLAY. Where a dairy is in operation at this time, and it does not comply with the provisions of this act, it would have to be [illegible]

Mr. GALLINGER. Absolutely so; which I think is a very [illegible]

Mr. MALLORY. Read that [illegible]

Mr. STEWART. It is not a [illegible]

Mr. GALLINGER. I will turn the matter over to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. CLAY. With the Senator's permission, [illegible] from Florida has asked me to read it. I will read that [illegible] It says:

[illegible] cleansing of bottles, cans, and all

Mr. MALLORY. What objection does the Senator from Georgia have to it?

Mr. CLAY. I simply say that in dealing with how dairies should be [illegible] we have a perfect right to deal with the District of Columbia, but how one should be built in Georgia or Virginia is not a question we ought to deal with in this bill providing for purely [illegible]

Mr. SPOONER. May I ask the Senator from Georgia a question?

Mr. CLAY. With pleasure.

Mr. SPOONER. Congress, of course, has entire control over the admission of milk and cream from outside into the District. May not Congress—

Mr. CLAY. Congress can deal with interstate commerce.

Mr. SPOONER. Put it on more than that. Congress has absolute jurisdiction over the District.

Mr. CLAY. I said that.

Mr. SPOONER. Congress can prohibit the bringing into this District [illegible] produced under the [illegible]

Mr. CLAY. I think [illegible]

Mr. SPOONER. [illegible]

Mr. CLAY. I [illegible] But this [illegible] dairies in the District [illegible] be [illegible] to be permitted to ship milk into the District of Columbia.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. Under the provisions of this bill, if that [illegible] then it would be necessary [illegible] that every man who now has a dairy [illegible] and [illegible] have to move and build another in order to comply with the provisions of this act.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator from Nevada allow me to answer the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. MALLORY. The Senator from Georgia has misconstrued that section.

Mr. CLAY. I had a doubt as to whether or not it was a proper construction, and I was taking the construction placed upon it by the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, the [illegible]

Mr. MALLORY. [illegible] provides how [illegible] shall be built. [illegible] from [illegible] it is merely a li[illegible] things which may be in a dairy.

Mr. CLAY. They [illegible] on 2.

Mr. MALLORY. [illegible]

Mr. CLAY. And undoubtedly section 2 is intended to close up all the small concerns that engage in the dairy business, if you [illegible]

Mr. MALLORY. [illegible]

Mr. CLAY. [illegible] in decorum yield to the [illegible]

Mr. CLAY. Certainly.

Mr. McCOMAS. I have been listening to the Senator from Georgia. I think he does not [illegible] or [illegible] town, [illegible] it simply says where [illegible] within so many feet of a so[illegible] place, and that they shall make [illegible] for p[illegible] who have to [illegible]

Mr. STEWART. [illegible] received a good deal of consideration. All the dairymen were present, and [illegible] It was f[illegible] man has [illegible] kind. He has put in a heavy [illegible] on the outside. He said, "Do not let [illegible] way to get around it." B[illegible] wall. [illegible] no re[illegible] you do not want to have the op[illegible] the milk will be contaminated. T[illegible] it would be all right. [illegible] it.

Th[illegible] say that [illegible] give them [illegible] ficer [illegible] bill, which [illegible] by the health officer, [illegible] as a tax upon the property.

[illegible] of [illegible] to the [illegible] where [illegible] and [illegible] the [illegible] matter. If need be, he can have issues of fa[illegible] tried by a [illegible] In this way the constitutional difficulty is avoided and a cheap and [illegible]

It is now said that the health officer ought to attend to the whole business with the assistance of the doctors. I think the [illegible] a pretty good place to determine whether there is a nuisance, and where the parties can be heard and a judgment rendered which will be [illegible]

That bill is not before the Senate now. The time to discuss it is when it is [illegible]. The doctors know as much about that bill as [illegible] keeping the dirt out of milk. It is worthy of [illegible] is prolific in the dr[illegible] which have been passed and none of which have [illegible]

We have [illegible] in the case under consideration. We have [illegible] dairies as they have in all the leading [illegible] also have a health officer, but he [illegible] laws.

Mr. GALLINGER. I [illegible] of the [illegible] by the Senator from Nevada, August [illegible] 1894, in [illegible] in the District of Columbia [illegible] a [illegible] r. [illegible] terms in Maryland, Virginia, and the District of Columbia, and the various [illegible] of the matter in their hands. [illegible] that [illegible] to have a corps of engineers.

Mr. STEWART. They are superseded so far as their duties relate to milk inspection.

Mr. DANIEL. Does it abolish those offices?

Mr. STEWART. Yes: it [illegible] in the office of health officer.

Mr. DANIEL. There are eleven different [illegible] whose duties [illegible] have in charge the matter of milk. [illegible] them in office?

Mr. STEWART. Oh, no; they have mixed duties.

Mr. DANIEL. They have enough duty here to perform about milk.

Mr. STEWART. But they do not perform it.

Mr. DANIEL. Are we going to keep them in office and give them something else to do? Or is that system abolished and this [illegible]

Mr. STEWART. It is abolished so far as their offices relate to milk.

Mr. DANIEL. What else are they to do that they are now [illegible] and what is the use of keeping them in office if we [illegible] doubtedly be reappointed should [illegible]

Mr. DANIEL. [illegible] not abolish them? There is no use in the Government [illegible] rate corps of officers un[illegible] bill creates [illegible] n old [illegible] look up [illegible]

Mr. STEWART. [illegible] no provision is made to cover that point. Let me [illegible] provision of the bill.

Mr. DANIEL. I am referring to pages 4 and 5 of the report.

Mr. STEWART. The bill reads:

[illegible] tion

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator refer me to that language? I have not seen it.

Mr. STEWART. It is on page 6, commencing after the semicolon in line 7.

Mr. DANIEL. May I ask the Senator from Nevada a question? [illegible]

How many of those inspectors are there?

Mr. STEWART. There are eight.

I think we had better take a vote, Mr. President.

Mr. SPOONER. I move to insert, after the word "purpose," in the sixteenth line, page 6, the word "they." It is a mere verbal [illegible]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, on page 6, line 16, after the word "purpose," insert the word "they;" so as to read:

and for that purpose they shall at all times have access to farms and other places where milk or cream is produced.

Mr. STEWART. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to question the Senator from Nevada [illegible] in regard to this matter. If I am not mistaken, a [illegible] may take [illegible] analyze it, and pronounce it pure, and that milk may be full of bacteria—disease-producing germs—and it will not be detected by the chemical analysis. Now, that is a defect in this bill. I think that this matter should be [illegible] by a bacteriologist, and in addition to that be given [illegible] machinery. I am perfectly willing to grant the [illegible] that is here provided, or more, if it is necessary to secure pure milk. But it ought to be under the health officer, in my judgment.

Mr. STEWART. Let me answer the Senator's suggestion. He suggests that there may be [illegible] by the chemist. I admit that that may be the case. There has been a question as to whether consumption or tuberculosis was communicated from milk. There has been discussion [illegible] in America [illegible] tuberculosis in animals could be transmitted to men and vice versa. [illegible] they are examining that question. There is [illegible] question.

We do not want [illegible] milk and there is another way to prevent it. A [illegible] can not do that; that is not in his line. That must be [illegible] the place where milk [illegible] is bottled and sent out. We [illegible] to have a report that certain milk was found to contain injurious bacteria a week or ten ten days after it had been all consumed?

It can be done by inspectors who are to go into the country and [illegible] and [illegible] the [illegible] they will not let the milk be brought here. That is the way to prevent it. You may have all the bacteriologists in the world here and they would not be any use to prevent it, if you allowed filth in the country, if you allowed cows to be sick. But that is provided for in the bill. That is where the health officer can not reach it. The health officer himself acknowledged in his testimony before the committee that the [illegible] laws is all that a man can properly do, and with his multifarious duties he certainly can not give much personal attention to them.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, let me illustrate it to the Senator.

Mr. STEWART. Well.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is all right for these veterinarians to go and examine and see. Nobody wants any milk from a diseased cow. But the germs can be impregnated in milk after it comes from the cow.

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. COCKRELL. You may examine the cows and they may be in perfect health and the milk may be pure, and it may be kept at the dairy before it is brought here [illegible] it becomes contaminated with disease-producing germs, and your chemical analysis [illegible]

[illegible] Oh, yes; it discloses it.

Mr. [illegible] You must [illegible]

Mr. [illegible] If it is sour or anything of that kind, it will be [illegible]

[illegible] L. You [illegible]

PIPE LINES THROUGH INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. STEWART submitted the following report:

[illegible] House on the amendments of the House to the bill [illegible] the Secretary of the Interior [illegible] Indian lands, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 2 and 3, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered one, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 8, after the word "located," insert "and of all other allottees through whose lands said lateral pipe lines may pass;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered four and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the following: "Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior, at the expiration of said twenty years, may extend the right to maintain any pipe line constructed under this act for another period not to exceed twenty years from the expiration of the first right, upon such terms and conditions as he may deem proper;" and the House agree to the same.

SHIPPING BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND THE PHILIPPINES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2276) to regulate shipping in trade between ports of the United States and ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, between ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, and for other purposes.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill, which I think is necessary in order to avoid a difficulty which has been pointed out to me by the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]. I think section 6 should be amended by striking out, in line 3, the words "so much of;" and striking out, in line 6, the words "as reads" and inserting "is hereby amended so that it shall read;" by striking out, in line 7, the word "four" and inserting the word "five;" and then to strike out, in line 13, the words "is hereby repealed." This section shall take effect on July 1, 1904."

The effect of this amendment is to make the law positive instead of negative—that is, it affirmatively allows foreign ships. Unless that is done, I think a doubt may arise as to the construction of the law between the 1st of July, 1904, and the 1st of July, 1905.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, section 6, line 3, before the word "section," strike out the words "so much of;" and in line 6, after the word "purposes," strike out the words "as reads" and insert in lieu "is hereby amended so that it shall read," and in line 7 strike out the word "four" and insert "five."

Mr. LODGE. Then begin at the word "is," line 13, section 6, and strike out the rest of the section.

The SECRETARY. After the word "Archipelago," line 13, strike out the words "is hereby repealed. This section shall take effect on July 1, 1904."

Mr. LODGE. So that the section as amended will read:

That section 6 of the act approved March 3, 1901, entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," is hereby amended so that it shall read: "Provided, however, That until July 1, 1905, the provisions of law or

It makes it affirmative instead of negative; that is all.

Mr. SPOONER. That is the provision about the coasting trade?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL. I wish to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if it is a fact that the coastwise laws of the United States are now so framed that they would operate on traffic between San Francisco, Hawaii, or Manila unless suspended by their operation?

Mr. LODGE. They would. Under the Porto Rican decisions of the Supreme Court they will go into effect on the 1st of July, 1904, as now framed.

Mr. DANIEL. Then the result of this bill, if it becomes a law, would be to postpone until 1905 the time when it would operate.

Mr. LODGE. It will defer the time of their application on the transoceanic traffic until the 1st of July, 1905, and on interisland traffic indefinitely.

Mr. DANIEL. I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] yesterday, which strikes out the word "four" in several places. The amendment was agreed to in only one place.

Mr. LODGE. I renew that amendment. I move that amendment on page 1, line 3, section 1; page 2, line 8, section 2, and on same page, line 24, section 4. The other one has become unnecessary because it was stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 3, strike out the word "four" and insert "five;" on page 2, line 8, strike out "four" and insert "five;" on page 2, line 25, at the end of the line, strike out "four" and insert "five."

Mr. CARMACK. Is that the amendment of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. LODGE. It is the amendment of the Senator from Iowa. In his absence I moved it, as we accepted it yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CARMACK. I want to move an amendment to the amendment. I move the amendment to the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Secretary read the amendments, as follows:

Substitute "1906" for "1905" wherever the latter figures appear in said amendment.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator desires to discuss his amendments I will not move to lay them on the table.

Mr. CARMACK. I wish to make a few remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee will proceed.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, there seems to be a good deal of doubt whether under the act temporarily to provide revenues for the Philippine Islands and for other purposes, being the Philippine tariff act, this provision extending our coastwise law to the Philippines would take effect on July 1, 1904. The language of section 3 of that act is as follows:

That on and after the passage of this act the same tonnage taxes shall be levied, collected, and paid upon vessels entering the ports of the Philippine Islands from the Philippine Archipelago which are imposed upon vessels of the United States entering the ports of the United States from the Philippine Archipelago. All laws and parts of laws of the United States relating to the tonnage of vessels in force on the date of the passage of this act, shall, so far as the same are applicable, be in force between the Philippine Islands and the United States, or between ports in the Philippine Archipelago.

That is a negative provision, declaring that it shall not take effect until that time. Whether it would inevitably take effect at that time I am not sure. The report of the Commissioner of Navigation for [illegible] seems to suggest a doubt on that question. I will call the attention of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] to page 42 of that report, and he can examine it, as he raised the question awhile ago.

Mr. President, yesterday a statement was made to the effect that the Secretary of War is entirely satisfied with the bill as modified by the amendment just offered by the Senator from Massachusetts. I have a suspicion that the Secretary's state of mind would have been more accurately described if it had been said that he had reluctantly yielded to the persuasion of Senators upon the other side of the Chamber with the hope that the passage of this bill at the present session of Congress would be followed at the next session of Congress by such a reduction of duties on Philippine products as he believes necessary for the welfare and prosperity of the Philippine Islands.

I know, and we all know, that the Secretary of War has been very much opposed to the extension of the coastwise laws to the Philippine Islands until after a very large and material reduction has been made in the duties on products coming from the Philippine Islands to the United States.

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] said yesterday that there ought to be no trouble whatever in passing a satisfactory Philippine tariff law at the next session of Congress. I do not know why the Senator from Rhode Island thinks that that will be such an easy matter. If it was in the mind of the Administration to promote the passage of such a bill, I should be glad to know why it was not urged in a message of the President to Congress, and I should like to know why a bill has not been introduced in the House and pressed to consideration for the accomplishment of that object in this long session of Congress, practically unlimited in its duration, where we have so little to do that it is proposed to adjourn at the unprecedentedly early date of the middle of April. I should like to know for what reason the consideration of such a measure is to be postponed to the short session of Congress, when we will be overwhelmed with the business that might be transacted at this session of Congress, and when we know that there will be very great difficulty in procuring the passage of any bill that is stubbornly resisted.

The President overflowed with words of sympathy for the people of Cuba, whom we have made free and independent and prosperous, but he had not one word of comfort for the people of the Philippine Islands, whose lands we have made desolate with fire and sword, and famine. There has been a great deal more generosity exhibited or professed for the free Republic of Cuba than has been shown for the Philippines under the flag and protection of the United States.

I want to say, Mr. President, that if the Secretary of War is under the impression that after the passage of this bill he can secure a material reduction, or any reduction whatever of the Philippine tariff at the next session of Congress, he is deceiving himself, or he has been deceived.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CARMACK. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. PATTERSON. In the statements that were made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] yesterday and the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], as to a conversation with the Secretary of War, I gathered—if I am not trespassing upon the Senator's time with a statement——

Mr. CARMACK. Not at all. I am glad to yield to the Senator whatever time he wishes to occupy.

Mr. PATTERSON. I gathered that his approval of this measure was based altogether upon the additional assurance that at the next session of Congress a law will be enacted reducing the duties on Philippine products transported from the Philippine Islands to the United States; in other words, that were it not for his expectation, or the practical assurance of gentlemen to him to that effect, he would be opposed to this measure. I think, after hearing the statement made by the Senators referred to, I am fully justified in reaching and stating that conclusion.

Therefore it is the equivalent of a notification to the country by the Senator from Massachusetts that at the next session of Congress, which will be during the year for which this bill has been extended, a bill will be introduced and pressed to passage reducing the tariff duties on Philippine products imported into the United States. The only two items of Philippine products in which the United States are particularly interested are sugar and tobacco.

Mr. DRYDEN. And also hemp.

Mr. PATTERSON. Well, but hemp comes in free now. I refer to the two items that are affected by tariff duties in which the country is interested, and those are sugar and tobacco.

The sugar industry of the West and the South [illegible] a pretty [illegible] session of Congress when the treaty with Cuba [illegible] tariff duties upon Cuban sugar was ratified. Now, [illegible] served upon this side of the Chamber, and also upon the [illegible] of the West, as well as the cane-sugar [illegible] of the South, that at the next session, after the Philippines [illegible], the raid on sugar and tobacco is to be [illegible] of the tariff duties upon sugar and tobacco from the Philippine Islands.

Mr. President, there is no person who has given the question of Philippine [illegible] careful consideration, but is convinced that the sugar industry of the United States. The sugar industry of Louisiana is now in such a decrepit condition [illegible] and the late attack made upon it [illegible] it also must go to the wall when [illegible] with free Philippine sugar or a reduction of the [illegible].

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not understand the Senator from Colorado [illegible] that that matter is to be taken up and [illegible] at the next session?

Mr. PATTERSON. The equivalent of that.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It does not bind all of us, I think, even if it [illegible] given.

Mr. PATTERSON. No; but it has been pretty clearly demonstrated that when the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] presents a measure from the Philippines Committee, especially if it is to be regarded as in any sense an Administration measure, [illegible] of the Chamber [illegible] in Massachusetts and [illegible] through the measure, no matter what industry it may affect.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Not necessarily.

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not know how far it may not be necessary [illegible] I have proposed [illegible] Mr. President, to judge the future, at least for a limited period, by what has transpired in the past.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If I am not mistaken, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], from the Philippines Committee——

Mr. CARMACK. He is not on the Philippines Committee.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. At any rate, he offered, some time ago, an amendment making sugar free, I think, in the Philippine Islands, which did not receive the support of all Senators on [illegible].

Mr. CARMACK. Not to make sugar free.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Well, providing for a reduction of the duty thereon 25 per cent.

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not pretend to say that whatever a Senator upon the other side may offer or ask for all the Senators upon that side are ready to grant, but I do say that whatever has come from the Philippines Committee, that ever appears in this body as apparently an Administration measure, has received the undivided support of the Republican Senators and has become a law when concurred in by the body at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. President, those of us who are interested in the sugar industry are as firmly convinced as we are of our very existence that a further reduction of the Philippine tariff duties means the destruction of that industry, for Philippine sugar may be placed on shipboard at Manila at less than 1 cent per pound, as I understand it, and it may be transported from the Philippine Islands to the United States at from 30 to 35 cents per hundred pounds. So the sugar raisers of the United States will be confronted, if sugar comes here free from the Philippine Islands, with sugar which costs but $1.35 per hundred, and you may add to that whatever little modicum of tariff will be left and it will be impossible for the United States sugar raisers to continue in business.

Mr. DIETRICH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I have yielded to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON], but will not yield for him to carry on a regular debate with Senators upon the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. PATTERSON. I hope the Senator from Tennessee will kindly yield. It will probably take but a moment.

Mr. CARMACK. Very well.

Mr. DIETRICH. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado a question.

Mr. PATTERSON. Very well.

Mr. DIETRICH. Does the Senator believe that the passage of this bill will increase the rate upon goods transported from the Philippine Islands to the United States?

Mr. PATTERSON. I think so.

Mr. DIETRICH. Well, will that not be an additional protection against the competition of Philippine sugar?

Mr. PATTERSON. Pro tanto, it will be. As a matter of course, that is the purpose of the bill—to increase the rates upon everything which comes from the Philippine Islands, to make the consumers of the United States pay that additional price for whatever comes here.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. PATTERSON. I do.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I wish to say to the Senator from Colorado now that I do not wish, and do not intend to agree, to so far reduce the duty on Philippine sugar that it will interfere either with the beet-sugar industry or the cane-sugar industry in the United States. I do believe that if sugar were free from the Philippines to the United States, and if it were manufactured with American capital and according to American methods, it would very seriously interfere with the sugar industry in the United States—both the beet and cane sugar industries. I do not want to feel that I am committed to any project which, in my judgment, will interfere with American industries.

Mr. PATTERSON. I am very glad, Mr. President, that we have that frank statement from the Senator from Connecticut. I want to say to him that, carrying out his statement to a logical conclusion, it means that he will stand with the people of the West in opposing any further reduction of the tariff upon Philippine sugar.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I will if I am convinced that it will injure American interests. I do not, however, undertake to [illegible] now.

Mr. PATTERSON. The statement of the Senator from Connecticut [illegible] with a reservation that may in the [illegible] with the hopefulness [illegible] of the Committee on the Philippines, and [illegible] a fear that will result in the calamity which I have [illegible].

I may [illegible], Mr. President—for I have already trespassed upon the time of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] too long—that if Senators upon the other side do not open up negotiations [illegible] at the next session reducing duties upon the Philippine product, it will only succeed after those of us who are [illegible] in great [illegible] have exhausted every [illegible] means and parliamentary method that we possess to prevent loss of this lady to defeat the effort.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, what has been said by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] and by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] is in line with what I was just saying and the warning which I gave to the Secretary of War, that if he is basing any hope of securing any material reduction of the tariff on Philippine products upon any assurances that have been given him that the passage of this bill in its present form will further that object, he is building upon a very sandy foundation.

Mr. President, we know at the last session of Congress when a measure was pending here to reduce the Philippine tariff to 50 per cent of the Dingley rates, how heavily and how stubbornly it was resisted up to the very last hour, almost to the adjournment of Congress, and defeated without being brought to a vote.

We know how the beet-sugar interest gathered here and resisted the passage of that bill; how Mr. Oxnard at last served notice upon Congress that he would consent to a reduction to the extent of 50 per cent of the present rate, but that he would not consent to any further reduction. He consented to that because, as the Philippine Commission themselves had shown to us, a reduction of 50 per cent would be practically no reduction whatever and would offer no encouragement to the industries of the Philippine Islands. I say that at the next session—at the short session, when we shall be crowded with business—they will be here again, resisting to the very uttermost any further reduction in the tariff on Philippine products, and especially on sugar.

We know the long fight we had for reciprocity with Cuba, which was finally secured, carrying a reduction of 20 per cent on Cuban sugar, only after we had made a compromise with the sugar interests by which we practically defeated all the reciprocity treaties pending in this body and agreed that we would make no other reciprocity treaties with any other sugar-growing countries in the world.

I have no desire, Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, to protect sugar, no matter whether it comes from the beet or from the cane. I am willing that the producers of sugar shall be required to earn their living just like the producers of cotton, of wheat, and of corn, without any largesses from the public Treasury; but so long as the system of protection prevails, so long as we recognize the right of this Government to impose a tariff on the products of the Philippine Islands, producers of sugar have as much right to demand their full share of protection and to resist any importation of competing products as have any other interests in the country, and we know that they will do it. The Senator from Connecticut will be standing with the Senator from Colorado resisting any reduction of the Philippine tariff that will do the people of the Philippine Islands any good whatever or give any encouragement whatever to their industries, because unless you can reduce the tariff sufficiently to bring about competition between their products and our own it will be of no benefit whatever, and you might just as well not reduce it at all.

They have, from the standpoint of protection, good grounds for resisting the introduction of Philippine sugar. The present governor of the Philippines, testifying before the committee, said something to the effect that the Philippines could produce sugar enough to supply the world, and when American capital goes there, as suggested by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], and when you have removed all limitations upon the amount of land that can be held by these great corporations, as you will do, and when you have free admission to Chinese labor, as you will do, then the competition of Philippine sugar with the sugar of the United States will become a very serious question. So far as I am concerned it does not alarm me. I do not object to bringing it into competition with sugar from anywhere in the world, so far as I am concerned; but they will object to it. They will be here at the next session of Congress resisting it to the bitter end, and they will defeat the bill. No matter what bill you may bring in here to reduce the tariff on sugar and tobacco at the next session of Congress it will be defeated, and the Secretary of War ought to have known that before he consented to waive his objections to the pending bill.

Now, I want to call attention to what Governor Taft has said officially upon this question. In his report as civil governor of the Philippines he said:

[illegible]

The report of Mr. Shuster, the collector, to which Governor Taft refers, says:

[illegible]

In the report of the Philippine Commission I find the following statement:

The operation of the coastwise trade laws of the United States in respect to trade between the islands of the Philippine Archipelago and the mainland, between these islands and the mainland of the United States have been suspended by acts of Congress until July 1, 1905. If Congress were to take no action and allow the coastwise navigation laws to become applicable to the interisland trade of these islands and to the trade between the islands and the United States, as they now are, most disastrous results would follow. It is earnestly recommended that the regular application of the navigation laws, so far as it relates to the trade between the islands of the Philippine Archipelago and the United States, be postponed for the consideration of the Philippine Commission, and that the suspension of the coastwise navigation laws be continued until the time intervening between the adjournment of the Congress of the United States next convening and July 1, 1906.

Then again, referring to the very bill that is before the Senate, the report says:

[illegible] freight rates [illegible] with [illegible]

Mr. President, they may indeed well ask what benefit they are to get from association with the United States so long as our legislation proceeds upon such principles as these, when they see us legislating in every case with an eye on the advantage of a handful upon some class of American citizens, without any regard whatever for its effect upon the people of the Philippine Islands.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. DIETRICH] suggested a moment ago that the extension of these laws and the increase of freight charges would be equivalent to an increase of protection. Of course it would. Of course it would be equivalent to an increase in the present tariff rates on Philippine products. Yet you are to have that. You are to increase the burden already imposed by your tariff law upon the products of the Philippine Islands without any assurance whatever, and, I beg leave to say, with very little hope, that you will hereafter make any substantial or material reduction in the tariff.

The Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] said the other day that the Philippines were a part of the United States; that they are under the protection of the United States. Mr. President, far from that being true, under the operation of our tariff law, tariff law, we are [illegible] against the Philippine Islands, instead of protecting them. They are not a part of the United States. They are regarded as a part of the United States when it comes to the extension of our coastwise laws to benefit a few favorites of this Government in the United States at the expense of the people of the Philippine Islands, and they are not considered as a part of the United States when it comes to the enactment of tariff laws and the protection of certain interests in the United States, again at the expense of the people of the Philippine Islands. Their interests are not and have never been considered in any legislation that we have had before Congress.

How soon we have forgotten the principles upon which we were going to act when we took possession of the Philippine Islands! Then it was proclaimed that we were to have the open door. I read from annex to protocol No. 15, treaty of peace between the United States and Spain, in which it was said:

[illegible]

That statement was substantially interpreted by Mr. Day, president of the Peace Commission, and Secretary of State, in response to a question that came from one of the Spanish commissioners. As to the effect of that statement, Mr. Day said:

[illegible] is not intended to be exclusive, etc.

Here was the statement given out from the Administration that the policy of the United States in the Philippine Islands would be that of an open door to the commerce of the world; yet we have imposed an export duty upon hemp that goes from the Philippines to any other country in the world except the United States. We are giving a few shipbuilders in the United States an absolute monopoly of the carrying trade between this country and the Philippine Islands. Where is the open door to the world's commerce?

Commerce, Mr. President, includes buying and selling; it includes the carriage of goods; it includes exports as well as imports; and protests are on file now in the State Department from every nation in Europe because of this violation of the solemn promise we made of the open door to the commerce of the world in the Philippine Islands. The islands are simply held for exploitation, Mr. President, and to be exploited for the benefit not of the whole people of the United States, but for the greedy and rapacious interests that come here and make their demands upon this Congress.

Governor Taft made a speech at Manila just before he left. I am sorry I have lost the extract, but he said in that speech that if the spirit which prevails among the American merchants and residents of the Philippine Islands should continue he would be greatly discouraged as to the success of our adventure in that country.

Mr. President, that spirit will continue. The people who go from here to the Philippine Islands will not be knights errant seeking to relieve the oppressed; they will not be people who go there in the interest of humanity or with unselfish humanitarian purposes; but for the most part they will be needy and desperate adventurers who go there to make a profit out of the calamities of the people and to fill their pockets and come home as soon as they can. That is the condition which exists there now, as Governor Taft tells us. It is a condition which he deplores. I believe, and I am glad to say this in behalf of Governor Taft, that he is filled with earnest and honest zeal for the welfare of the people of the Philippine Islands, a zeal which in these days of commercialism is almost quixotic in its obsolete chivalry. He despairs, almost, of the success of our venture in the Philippine Islands. He sees—he is bound to see—what will be the inevitable outcome of this narrow and selfish and greedy policy which we have pursued in all our legislation with respect to that country.

What will be the fruits of it? Growing and deepening discontent, constant irritation, a growing hatred of the American people and of American sovereignty, ending sooner or later in open and bloody rebellion. The history of our rule in the Philippine Islands, if we continue the policy that now prevails, will be a story of bloody insurrection, alternating with periods of tranquillity produced by ruin and exhaustion, the kind of tranquillity we now have there.

Mr. President, when we first seized upon the Philippine Islands the country seemed to be mad with the idea that we were going to develop an immense trade with that country. It was to be an Eldorado. It was to increase the wealth and commerce of the United States tenfold, and there were people who actually seemed to attach more importance to the Philippine Islands as a basis for the wealth and prosperity of the United States than they did to our own territory.

Yet to-day, and in fact ever since, we have been legislating in mortal terror of the Philippine trade. We have erected a tariff wall against the Philippines on the very ground that if we did not put up a high tariff it would develop the commerce and the industries of the Philippine Islands. The very object for which you seized the islands was to develop their industries and develop an immense commerce with that country, and then you proceeded to raise a tariff wall on the very ground that if you did not do it you would accomplish the very object you professed to desire.

What is the trade with the Philippine Islands? We sell them about $4,000,000 worth of goods a year, upon which we possibly make a profit of less than half a million dollars, which you could have had if you never had landed a soldier or a gun in the archipelago, and for which you have paid not less than $600,000,000 and are continuing to spend money by the millions.

I wish to have put into the RECORD, as an appendix to my remarks, a statement of a distinguished citizen of Massachusetts, a particular friend, I believe, of the junior Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. Atkinson. (See Appendix.) It shows the cost in the mere matter of money in the increase of our expenditures and the squandering of the people's taxes, and for all of that we are getting a trade which amounts to the exportation of about $4,000,000 worth of goods a year, which you propose to destroy or to decrease by this bill. This measure will lay heavy burdens upon the commerce between this country and the Philippine Islands, because when the people there find that they have to pay exorbitant rates for transportation in American vessels from the United States they will buy whatever they can from other countries and have their goods imported in foreign vessels.

I wish to quote from a speech made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] in the Fifty-sixth Congress as to the effect in the matter of expenditures of our policy in the Philippine Islands. The Senator said:

I shrink from the notion that the interests of this country will be subserved by sending permanently a portion of our most precious thousands of men, inspired by peaceful ideas, not of our blood, not of our warm blood, foreign to all our associations, living in a tropical climate, where the white man can not work, under labor conditions of necessity which we would not permit to exist in the United States.

* * * * * * *

It is insisted that we must have territorial expansion in order to extend our trade. I do not think so. I have been strongly inclined to think that in the long run, with all the embarrassments and complications and dangers, will bring upon our people, I will regard rather than develop the foreign trade of the United States. We have been growing rapidly in our trade without territorial expansion. Temporary possession, sometimes, of tropical peoples, rather than permanent dominion, to force our trade upon them seems to me to be the poorest commercial policy. How far will that be carried? We want the trade of the world, and we intend to have our share of it. Are we to secure it by carrying this doctrine of expansion to the uttermost parts of the earth?

Permanent dominion over the Philippines by the United States means to me an endless and vast burden upon the industries of our people.

Then again the Senator said:

In the event of war the most distant outpost where our flag could be found would be the point of first attack, and we would be forced to maintain a navy adequate to protect the interests of people in the Philippines, 7,000 miles away, in our Atlantic and Pacific oceans. If our Navy were not adequate to that, our ships being sent far away, our home coast would be unprotected. This would involve an awful increase of taxation.

Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin was a prophet. It has involved an awful expenditure of money without any profit whatever, and it has involved, as he told us, an immense increase in the American Navy; and if we are to keep the Philippine Islands, it will be necessary for us to have a navy as great as the greatest navy in the world. We shall be compelled to expend millions of dollars to fortify the coast of all that archipelago, for if we should be engaged in a foreign war and some nation could [illegible] one single island of the archipelago and the war should end with that island in the possession of the other country, it would be a defeat for the United States. No matter how worthless it may be, so long as that archipelago remains under the flag of the United States we must be ready and able at all times and upon a moment's notice to protect every foot from the attack of a foreign enemy; and, as the Senator from Wisconsin said, that will involve an awful increase in taxation.

We are making vast expenditures now for our Navy. A speech was made elsewhere a few days ago in which attention was called to that fact. It was said:

In the years 1886 and 1887 there was expended for the Navy, respectively, [illegible] for the year the work was [illegible] a total of $[illegible] almost exactly as great an amount as that expended in 1886, and more than six times as great as the amount expended in 1867.

Why do we need such an immense navy? This country has always been able to maintain its dignity and to assert its power throughout all its history without attempting to vie with all the nations of the earth in immense military expenditures.

Another gentleman, answering this same statement, said it was true that we did not then expend such large sums of money as we are now expending, but that we did not then have the Philippine Islands to defend. That is the burden you have laid upon yourselves—an immense increase of taxation, an immense navy, all the burdens of militarism. Yet here you have to deal with a stationary revenue, with a revenue insufficient to meet the expenditures of the Government. You have to strint your appropriations for rivers and harbors and for all the necessary expenses of the Government, while you are squandering money to build the greatest navy in the world to defend the most worthless possessions that ever rotted beneath a tropical sun.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator from Tennessee allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. In view of all these terrible things that are going to happen, in the opinion of the Senator from Tennessee, in the event that we hold on to the Philippines, I take it for granted that the Senator, if he had his way, would surrender the Philippines either back to Spain or to some other country.

Mr. CARMACK. I have tried very hard in various speeches to make my views on the Philippine question plain. If the Senator from Oregon does not understand my position now, I have spoken in vain so far as he is concerned. I have said over and over again, and I have never changed my views on the question, that I would be glad to-day to do for the Philippine Islands practically what we have done for Cuba—to make the Philippine Islands free and independent.

Mr. President, I am glad to know that I am not altogether alone on that question, and that I have some good Republican company; that is, considered good by Republicans. The late Secretary of War, Mr. Root, made a speech not long ago in which he suggested that it would be the ultimate policy of the Republican party to deal with the Philippine Islands as we have dealt with Cuba. I am glad to learn that there are Republicans who have grown weary of this burden, and who now, that they find it unprofitable, are willing to be righteous. For, Mr. President, I can say for the Republican party that they can be very righteous whenever they [illegible]

[illegible] may result from Mr. Root's statement. Some Filipinos [illegible] may hear it, and he may be [illegible] he does he will be just as [illegible]. If Mr. Root himself were to go over [illegible] the law, it [illegible] the same thing.

Mr. President, I do not care to continue any further upon this question. I simply wish to emphasize what I have [illegible] that it is a policy to be considered most [illegible] and the longer we put it off [illegible] it will [illegible] or later it will have to be paid for, not only in dollars but in blood.

I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD as an appendix to my remarks the statement to which I referred.

The cost of war and warfare to June [illegible] from the expenditures [illegible] months, from June 30 to December [illegible] completed by [illegible] fiscal year, June 30, 1904, [illegible] years—not less [illegible] by estimates submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury to [illegible]

Average for twenty years of peace [illegible]

In this period and [illegible] cost of what was called [illegible] Roosevelt it was proved that the average expenditures per capita [illegible] $[illegible].

It was proved that the cost of war and warfare up to that date had been at [illegible] statement, extending the figures by estimate to December 31, 1905, in which it was proved that the cost of war [illegible] by the Departments for the fiscal [illegible] seven years of active and passive war and [illegible] to the [illegible] Harrison and Cleveland the cost of pensions an[illegible] 30, 1893, pensions and interest were less, per [illegible] the normal cost of government [illegible] $2 per head now being as[illegible] at the end of that fiscal year it will have been nearly $[illegible]

[illegible] service may be reorganized, with suitable compensa[illegible]

Civil service	$1.48
War [illegible] of what is known as the [illegible]	.85
Navy [illegible]	.90
Interest [illegible]	[illegible]
Pensions [illegible] every heavy increase during the term of President Harrison	1.52
Average	5.00

The expenditures in five years of war and warfare under Presidents McKinley and Roosevelt were as follows (annual average):

Civil service	$1.58
War [illegible]	1.99
Navy [illegible]	[illegible]
Interest	.47
Pensions	1.88
Average	6.61

During the last fiscal year, ending June 30, the expenditures have been as follows (during a year of so-called "peace"):

Civil service	$1.77
War [illegible]	1.17
Navy [illegible]	1.08
Interest	[illegible]
Pensions	[illegible]
Average	6.35

An excess over the normal of twenty years of peace, order, and industry of $1.85 per head.

But this does not show the whole case. During the [illegible] years [illegible] the cost of [illegible] was $[illegible] per head [illegible] not been for [illegible] exceeded $1.85 in the [illegible] times now moving or [illegible]

These differences per head may seem to be of trifling importance, but

At the lowest and most conservative estimates it is therefore proved that we have already spent on the Spanish war, as computed [illegible] $300,000,000

On criminal aggression and passive warfare in the Philippine Islands [illegible] 600,000,000

Total [illegible] 900,000,000

And that before June 30, 1904, there will stand at a loss there $1,000,000,000.

It is now proved that if [illegible] the cost of aggressive [illegible] can be [illegible] which is now [illegible] per head it will be over $2.50 in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, with a constant tendency to increase as time goes on.

In order to fix the facts [illegible] charges, we may compare the different expenditures under the Administration of President Harrison and those of the last fiscal year under President Roosevelt.

	Harrison.	Roosevelt.
Civil service and Indians ... per head	$1.66	$1.72

Navy ... do	.42	1.02
Interest ... do	.48	[illegible]
Pensions ... do	2.04	1.73
Average	5.36	6.29

We find that [illegible] President Cleveland's first term with the expenditures of the present fiscal year ending June 30, 1904.

	Cleveland	Roosevelt.
Civil service and Indians ... per head	$1.43	$1.73
War ... do	.66	1.40

The average expenditures of 1903 and 1904 have been $6.29. The estimates for [illegible] tures and estimates been free of the cost of continued [illegible] Philippine Islands, of the proposed defensive works in the [illegible] and the waste upon [illegible] a necessary part of the price of imperialism wherever [illegible] exceed $4.30 in the present fiscal year, and might even be [illegible]

a Increase about 7 per cent on each State to bring the figures to the present population.

The increase in population from 1900 to 1904 would be 7 per cent average, or from 1 per cent in States from which emigrants pass to 50 per cent in Oklahoma, to which they come.

Now, if the tax gatherer went to the door of every housekeeper to the dwelling [illegible] every person demanding $2 per head as a tax for the support of each average [illegible] how long would this [illegible] war and warfare last?

If the tax of $2 per head, or over $10 a year, were assessed directly upon the States according to law, to be collected annually by a direct tax on property or by a poll tax, how soon would it be [illegible]? If a [illegible] tax collector were to be stationed at every 30 voters who refused to stop it be relegated to a position where he could abuse a public trust no more?

These questions seem to be answered at the polls. I submit them [illegible] and reckless waste on over-sea expansion and imperialism.

Respectfully submitted.

EDWARD ATKINSON.

BOSTON, MASS., January 23, 1905.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have no desire to enter into a discussion of the economic relations of the Philippines, which I think would be more properly discussed on a tariff measure; still less in regard to the American Navy, which I think we shall have an opportunity to discuss on the appropriation bill. I simply desire to get this bill through as soon as possible.

In answer to what the Senator from Colorado said, I think it is proper for me to state briefly that neither the Senator from Iowa nor I, in anything we said yesterday, went further than to state what the wishes and desires of the Secretary of War were as we understood them. And of course neither of us would undertake to give assurances to anybody as to the action of Congress. But it is also well known that both the Senator from Iowa and I strongly supported the bill of last year for a reduction of duties. I favor such legislation, and whenever the House sends it to us a bill of that character I shall certainly do all I can to promote it.

Now, Mr. President, I move to lay on the table the amendments offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK].

Mr. CARMACK. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I should like to have the amendments stated.

Mr. COCKRELL. State the amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). The amendments to the amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendments by striking out "five" and inserting "six" in line 3, page 1; by striking out "five" and inserting "six" in line 8, page 2; and by [illegible] out "five" and inserting "six" in line 25, page 2; so as to read "[illegible] hundred and six" in each instance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to lay on the table the amendments offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] to the amendments on which the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN], which I transfer to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY], but by an understanding I transfer it to the Senator from Mississippi will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll was concluded.

Mr. SCOTT. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CLAPP. I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. I transfer it to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CARMACK, after having voted in the negative. I desire to inquire if the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed he has not.

Mr. CARMACK. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], and I do not think it will affect any such conflict. However, if there should be, it would affect the other act and not this one? Because this [illegible]

Mr. LODGE. No: I do not think it would affect it at all. As I understand it, [illegible]

Mr. MALLORY. Unless the President finds the charges to be [illegible]

Mr. LODGE. Unless the President should find it necessary to [illegible]

Mr. MALLORY. Then he can employ foreign vessels.

Mr. LODGE. But [illegible]

Mr. MALLORY. You m[illegible]

Mr. MALLORY. Af[illegible]

[illegible] from ports of the [illegible] rily be American vessels. Under the a[illegible] two acts are [illegible]

Mr. LODGE. I understand the Senator to mean that a conflict will arise after 1905 on the exception which can be [illegible] Pr[illegible]

Mr. MALLORY. Yes: that is the point I make; and I think w[illegible]

Mr. LODGE. The Senator thinks that the exception made in the use of the Pr[illegible]

Mr. MALLORY. N[illegible] act is positive and [illegible] in the act we passed yesterday we provided that under certain circumstances they may be transported by foreign ships. If that is n[illegible] and if it does not give rise to a [illegible] as to w[illegible] I am very sure it [illegible]

I [illegible] I want to [illegible]

Mr. LODGE. I think there is a [illegible] that arises there. I

So Mr. CARMACK's amendments to the amendments were laid on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. TELLER. Let the amendments be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 3, strike out "four" and insert "five;" page 2, line 8, strike out "four" and insert "five;" page 2, at the end of line 25, strike out "four" and insert "five;" so that in each instance it will read "[illegible] hundred and five."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts, who, I believe, has charge of the bill, to the effect of this proposed legislation on the legislation we passed yesterday.

[illegible] emergency—that is where the [illegible] with the fact that the charges for the transportation are excessive or unreasonable. [illegible] power is vested in the President [illegible] and to employ foreign vessels, if he [illegible] them, to t[illegible]

It will very probably happen that in t[illegible] plies for our [illegible] and the [illegible] cept in American bottoms.

[illegible]

It strikes me that the two pieces of legislation are in conflict with each other, and that if this measure passes and becomes a law it will nullify the proviso in the bill passed yesterday. I do not know whether the Senator's attention has been called to it, but it [illegible] in some [illegible]

Mr. LODGE. My attention was called to it yesterday by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], but I do not think [illegible] such conflict. However, if there should be, it would affect t[illegible]

Mr. MALLORY. Would it affect the other act and not this one? Because this [illegible]

Mr. LODGE. No: I do [illegible] all. As I understand it, [illegible] or the [illegible]

Mr. MALLORY. Unless the President finds the charges to be [illegible]

Mr. LODGE. Unless the President should find it necessary to [illegible]

Mr. MALLORY. Then he can employ foreign vessels.

Mr. LODGE. But [illegible]

Mr. MALLORY. You m[illegible]

Mr. MALLORY. Af[illegible]

[illegible] from ports of the [illegible] rily be American vessels. Under the a[illegible] two acts are [illegible]

Mr. LODGE. I understand the Senator to mean that a conflict will arise after 1905 on the exception which can be [illegible] Pr[illegible]

Mr. MALLORY. Yes: that is the point I make; and I think w[illegible]

Mr. LODGE. The Senator thinks that the exception made in the use of the Pr[illegible]

Mr. MALLORY. N[illegible] act is positive and [illegible] in the act we passed yesterday we provided that under certain circumstances they may be transported by foreign ships. If that is n[illegible] and if it does not give rise to a [illegible] as to w[illegible] I am very sure it [illegible]

I [illegible] I want to [illegible]

Mr. LODGE. I think there is a [illegible] that arises there. I supposed when the Senator began he meant that they would be in conflict before 1905, and I was unable to see how that could happen.

Mr. MALLORY. No; I am speaking of the permanent effect of the two acts.

Mr. LODGE. I see the Senator's point, and I think it could be met by an amendment.

In order to meet the point raised by the Senator from Florida, I move to amend, by inserting in section 1, line 4, after the word "merchandise," the words "except as provided in an act entitled 'An act to prohibit the transportation of vessels of the United States for public purposes.'"

Mr. TELLER. I should like to suggest to the Senator that that bill may never become an act.

Mr. LODGE. I see that difficulty perfectly well, but I see no other way of meeting it.

Mr. TELLER. I think if the Senator would reflect for a moment he would see that he might except supplies for the Army and Navy.

Mr. LODGE. Putting it in that general way, I think the Senator is right and that that would be better.

Mr. MALLORY. That is what I suggested yesterday, and I was trying to get the Senator to see it in that light. I thought he would come around to it, and I am glad he has done so.

Mr. LODGE. I modify the amendment, then, as suggested by the Senator from Colorado, so as to read:

No merchandise, except supplies for the Army or Navy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 4, after the word "merchandise," insert "except supplies for the Army or Navy."

Mr. MALLORY. Would not the effect of that be to nullify what we did yesterday? Yesterday we provided that they should not be transported in anything but American vessels, except under certain circumstances. This is an exception generally.

Mr. LODGE. No; it does not say that they shall be transported in foreign ships. It does not say that supplies for the Army and Navy shall be [illegible]

Mr. MALLORY. Has the Senator the bill before him?

Mr. LODGE. I have.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator please read that portion?

Mr. LODGE. It reads as follows:

[illegible] after July 1, 1905—

no merchandise, except supplies for the Army or Navy, shall be transported, etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Has the Senator already offered an amendment to section 6 this morning?

Mr. LODGE. I have.

Mr. ALLISON. That has been agreed to?

Mr. LODGE. It has been agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, when the bill which passed yesterday was before the Senate several days ago, I made a statement [illegible] there had been a public hearing before the Secretary of War, and I requested the chairman of the committee who had [illegible] from Maine [Mr. HALE], to [illegible] that I had been informed by a person [illegible] that a stenographer had taken it down in [illegible] several gentlemen who were there desirous of [illegible] bill which was then pending [illegible] or who had the bill in charge would not do [illegible] and [illegible] what I thought to be the right of a Senator. I [illegible] a letter to the Secretary of War asking him for a [illegible] the statements so taken before him. I [illegible] which I will read.

WAR DEPARTMENT,

[illegible]

Very sincerely, yours,

WM. H. TAFT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. HENRY M. TELLER,
United States Senate.

Mr. President, I want to say that that is quite a remarkable letter. So far as this bill is concerned, it is not a matter of very great consequence, but I wish to enter my protest against that rule being applicable. In all the time I have been in the Senate I have never known an executive officer to decline to give information of this character to a Senator on his invitation by letter or in person. I know of no rule that will authorize the Secretary of War to make such a statement when I write him a letter asking him for that which he has, which is a public matter, not to be covered by secrecy, as it might be contended certain classes of matter before him may be, but a matter entirely public, commented on by the newspapers, persons not connected with the Government at all being present. There is no rule, and never has been, which authorizes any executive officer of this Government to say that he will only give this evidence upon the application of a chairman of a committee or of a Senator in charge of a bill, and I do not believe that there ever will be a rule of that kind recognized by the members of this body.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. TELLER. I yield.

Mr. HALE. I have just come into the Chamber. Is the Senator referring to any letter from the Secretary of War with reference to hearings before him in relation to the bill that has just passed the Senate?

Mr. TELLER. I am; in relation to the bill that is before the Senate.

Mr. HALE. I had a letter from him this morning——

Mr. TELLER. It is a copy of this letter, I understand.

Mr. HALE. In which he said that he had written to the Senator from Colorado, but I did not understand from the letter which I received that the Secretary of War is in any way seeking to withhold information. I think he said in it that he judged either from the Senator's letter or from reading the reports in the RECORD that it was uncertain whether the information was to be called for by the chairman of the committee or the Senator in charge of the bill.

Mr. TELLER. Let me read, if the Senator will permit me, what he does say.

Mr. HALE. I shall be very glad to have the Senator read it, because my attention has just been called to it.

Mr. TELLER. After in very polite terms declining to give me the information or send me the papers, he says:

The [illegible] have not—

This is his denial—

[illegible] have not been carefully corrected, but should the [illegible] the chairman of a committee or a Senator having the bill in charge [illegible] him so to do. The Senator was not here when I commenced speaking. I was saying that no such rule has ever existed in my experience in public affairs.

Mr. HALE. No; nor do I think the Secretary of War, who has just come into his place at the head of that Department and who has not had experience in either branch of Congress, means to set up a rule. I think he is entirely sincere about it. I do not think there is anything sinister about his attitude in this matter or that he is attempting in any way to withhold information.

The facts are about as I supposed when it came the other day, that there never had been any regular hearing taken with the intention of reporting it or of having it written out for anybody, but it was only for his own information.

Mr. LODGE. It was informal.

Mr. HALE. It was entirely informal; and as will sometimes happen to any of us in going to a Department——

Mr. TELLER. Oh, no, Mr. President, that is not the fact. I said what I know, that this was a deliberate hearing in which a stenographer was employed and gentlemen interested in this shipping business appeared before the Secretary, made their statements, which were taken down, the Secretary asking some questions and expressing some opinions.

Mr. HALE. I so understand; but I understand that the hearing or the interview, whatever it was, was at the instance of parties who went to the Secretary and wanted to confer with him adout it; that it was not a thing that he had called——

Mr. TELLER. Oh, no.

Mr. HALE. Or that he had appointed a hearing, but that they did, as they do sometimes, take it down, and that is about the end of it, more for his information——

Mr. TELLER. Oh, no, Mr. President.

Mr. HALE. It was not in any way an official or formal matter. I do not think, really, there is anything sought to be kept back. It did not occur to me from my letter, which was a copy of the Senator's letter or the Senator's a copy of mine, that the Secretary in any way intended any such thing. He might have brought out the point he would send it to a committee or to a chairman a little stronger than if he had experience here in the Senate or in the House, but that he intended in any way to keep back information, suppress it, or be guilty in any way of disrespect, either to this body or to the Senator or to any member of the body, I can not in the least believe. I do not think the Secretary is at fault.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I have not concluded what I wanted to say. It will be time enough, I think, for the Senator from Maine to get in his defense of the Secretary when I make an attack on him.

Mr. HALE. I came into the Chamber while the Senator was on the floor, and I did not know even what the Senator was alluding to.

Mr. TELLER. I have not made any attack on him. This hearing was like the hearing before a committee of this body, at the request of people who are opposed to the shipping bill. What was the purpose of taking it down if it was not to affect the mind of the Secretary, who was known to be a pronounced enemy of this bill beyond question?

Mr. HALE. Is the Senator sure that this so-called "hearing" was of persons opposed to the shipping bill, or was it of those in favor of the bill?

Mr. TELLER. I did not mean to say opposed. I meant to say those favoring the bill.

Mr. HALE. I thought the Senator did.

Mr. LODGE. The hearing was of shipping people who favor the bill.

Mr. TELLER. Those who are in favor of the bill. That is what I meant to say, but I said "opposed."

Mr. HALE. It was not a hearing of people opposed to the bill.

Mr. TELLER. There may have been gentlemen opposed to the ideas in question. I do not know about that. I did not ask.

Mr. HALE. I think not.

Mr. TELLER. But, Mr. President, it was well known that the Secretary of War was opposed to this principle to be applied to our shipping. He had expressed himself decidedly as governor of the Philippine Islands. He could not have done so more strongly. Language could hardly be found, I think, that could be more expressive. He comes into the position of Secretary of War untried, I will admit, so far as legislative experience is concerned, and an attempt was made here to make it appear that he had changed his views. I did not believe he had. I do not believe he has now. I believed he had made expressions in that hearing that would indicate he had not changed his views, and that is the reason why I wanted the report of that hearing.

That is not the question now, Mr. President. The question now is whether I transcended my duties or exceeded my rights as a Senator when I called upon him for a report of that hearing, and if I had the right to call, whether he ought not to have sent it.

Now, Mr. President, I have an acquaintance with the Secretary of War of some years' standing. I do not desire to say anything to reflect at all disagreeably on him, for I regard him as a gentleman, a man of high character, as was his father before him, whom I had the pleasure of knowing quite well. But he has probably fallen under the influence of some of his clerks or some others who surround him, who told him that he was not obliged to do this thing. And of course he was not obliged to do it. There is no way by which I can enforce my right if he declines it. I suppose the Senate might do it, but I could not as a Senator simply.

But, Mr. President, this is in keeping somewhat, I will say, with the tendency of this age and day. There has been for the last several years an effort, it seems to me, on the part of the executive branch of the Government—and it is not confined to the present Administration, either—to minimize the rights, duties, and powers of this body. I do not know how far it will go. It has practically destroyed, now, our prerogatives, as we considered them heretofore, in certain directions, because it seems to be sufficient to say in answer to any objection that may be made against certain acts, "Why, the President has considered this matter, and therefore you are excluded from any consideration in that particular." The President has performed the duty the Constitution puts upon us.

Mr. President, I have called the attention of the Senate to this matter because I think it is the right of the Senate and the right of a Senator to have information of this kind, and that it can not be withheld by any executive officer except upon the statement that it belongs to the secret archives of the Government and can not be given to us or to the public compatibly with the public interest and the welfare of the country. Nobody will ever apply that rule to a public hearing in one of the Executive Departments of this Government.

I think I have said all I care to say on the subject. I do not want anyone to go away from here now and say that I am attacking the Secretary, or that I have given any occasion for anyone to think he ought to get up and defend the Secretary. Certainly he does not need any defense until I attack him.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

Mr. PATTERSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk as a substitute for the pending bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert:

That upon all articles brought or imported into the United States from foreign countries on vessels of the United States upon which import duties are required to be paid a rebate of [illegible] shall be granted and [illegible] Of [illegible] where the specific and ad valorem duties [illegible] such articles amounts to less than 25 per cent of the value of the articles [illegible] per cent where such duties amount to more than 25 per cent of the value of the articles. But this section shall not apply to articles that are admitted into the United States free of duty.

SEC. 2. That upon all vessels not of the United States which carry goods, wares, merchandise, or passengers from any port in the United States to any foreign port there shall be imposed and collected [illegible] for any foreign port a tax of $2 per ton on such vessels [illegible] measurement.

SEC. 3. That it shall be lawful, for the period of three years from the passage of this act, for any bona fide citizen or citizens of the United States or of any foreign country [illegible] engaged in or intending to engage in the business of [illegible] the United States to purchase such vessels and [illegible] to be used and furnished with the [illegible] United States [illegible] vessels [illegible] not less than 1,000 tons [illegible] Provided, That vessels [illegible] shall be considered as a [illegible] of the United States [illegible] upon such vessels [illegible] for the period of three years [illegible] a tax of $2 per ton on [illegible] vessels [illegible] paid a tax of $2 per ton [illegible] Provided, That the [illegible] carry this law into effect [illegible] rules and regulations not inconsistent herewith to be promulgated by him.

SEC. 5. That the President is [illegible] treaties with [illegible] of this act then all such treaties shall be considered as so modified for the [illegible].

SEC. 6. That all acts and parts of acts which shall go into effect immediately, shall not take effect until one year from its passage.

SEC. 7. That all acts and parts of acts so far as they are inconsistent with this act, are hereby repealed.

Mr. LODGE. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I desire to be heard.

Mr. LODGE. I did not know the Senator desired to speak to the amendment. I withhold the motion, of course, if the Senator so desires.

Mr. PATTERSON addressed the Senate. After having spoken fifteen minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado will please suspend. The hour of 4 o'clock has arrived, at which time, by unanimous consent, unobjected pension cases on the Calendar are to be considered.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Colorado is not going to speak very long on this matter, I will ask unanimous consent that the pension bills may be temporarily laid aside until the Senator finishes his address.

Mr. PATTERSON. I should prefer, Mr. President, to allow the unfinished business to go over and let the special order take its course.

[Mr. PATTERSON's speech will be found in the Appendix.]

GEORGE W. DAY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the first unobjected pension bill on the Calendar.

The bill (H. R. 1316) granting an increase of pension to George W. Day was announced as first in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "forty" and insert "thirty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George W. Day, late corporal company I, Twelfth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. DOLLIVER. That is a bill which, on a previous day, I asked to have go over for the purpose of finding out the condition of the [illegible]. I ask the attention of the chairman of the committee to the statement.

I received, and have just sent for it, an affidavit which came to me, giving a description of the condition of this pensioner. He is absolutely helpless and requires the constant attendance of somebody to dress and undress him. While he is just able to walk, he is still in need of constant attendance; and I will ask the chairman of the committee to let the amendment of the committee be disagreed to, so that the rate of pension may stand at $40 per month as passed by the House of Representatives.

Mr. McCUMBER. Upon the further evidence that has been furnished in this case, I feel [illegible] me to consent that the amendment be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. May I make an inquiry in regard to the pending pension bill? Is it the increase of a $12 pension [illegible]

Mr. McCUMBER. I have not the report with me at the present time, and I do not remember very well what it is.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I inquire for this reason: There are a good many soldiers pensioned under the act of June 27, 1890, the highest rate under that act being $12, who have become absolutely helpless as arose from service origin, [illegible] $12 per month. I had understood and I [illegible] it was the rule of the committee not to increase a $12 pension granted under the act of June 27, 1890, above $30 per month; and in a case where a soldier is absolutely helpless and requires the constant attendance of another party, I had drawn a bill [illegible] rate, supposing that that was the rule the committee had adopted. There is no question in the condition of this soldier but that under the general law he would be entitled to $72 per month. I had understood, however, that where the pensioners [illegible], the rule was that the pension [illegible] could be increased to $30 a month. I shall make no objection to this bill, but if in such cases the rate is to be $40 per month, I want to have the pensioner under my bill pensioned at that rate.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will state to the Senator that, while there are no printed or written rules in reference to the exact amounts that will be allowed in cases of this kind, the general rule that has been adopted by the committee has been that where the soldier has [illegible] the law of [illegible] any [illegible] origin of his complaint, nevertheless, where he is totally unable to perform any manual labor whatever the rate allowed shall range from $24 to $30 per month, depending upon the length of his service. If, in addition to this utter inability to perform any labor, his condition is such that he requires the help of another, so as to require the aid and assistance of a third person, we then allow a sum above $30 a month that will be commensurate with his condition, or such as will pay for the necessary attendance and service that he must obtain to take care of him.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Under these circumstances, I [illegible] the bill in the case to which I have referred, and introduce one fixing the rate at $72 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. GREGORY.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William J. P. Buck, late of Company D, Second Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, a little while ago, on the ground of helplessness, a bill for a soldier in Iowa was passed at $40. I wish to call attention to the report of the committee in this case:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2952) granting an increase of pension to William J. P. Buck, have examined the same and report:

I introduced the bill at $72 per month.

This bill as amended proposes to increase from $12 to $24 per month the pension of William J. P. Buck, late of Company D, Second Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Heavy Artillery, who served from January 4, 1864, to August 9, 1865, when honorably discharged.

[illegible] is now receiving the maximum pension [illegible] June 27, 1890. He is 7[illegible] years of age, [illegible] in [illegible] other infirmities of old age. He has never made claim under the general law.

He is a poor man, without a home, and now lives with a son, who works in a factory.

It seems to me that this case is just as deserving as the first one passed this afternoon at $40.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will state to the Senator that the distinction between that case and the present one is this, and it is a distinction which has been considered in every case: First, the length of service in this case, I believe, was about a year or less than a year.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Less than a year.

Mr. McCUMBER. Second, there is no evidence in the report of the committee showing the necessity for any outside assistance. In other words, while the pensioner is unable to perform any manual labor, I believe there is nothing in the report which shows that it is necessary to have anyone else to take care of him.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I would suppose that it was not necessary to have much evidence of that if both legs are off and he is 77 years old, and is deaf and has other infirmities.

Mr. SPOONER. How old is he?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Seventy-seven years. He has had both legs amputated, there is a great degree of deafness, and there are other infirmities. In view of that fact, it seems to me the committee ought not to have required positive evidence that he needed the constant aid and attendance of another person.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Senator can call to mind many persons who, having lost both legs, do not need the constant aid and attendance of another person. At least there is nothing in the report of the committee which shows that this applicant does need such constant aid, and it does not follow as a matter of course because of the loss of both legs that he does need such constant aid and attendance.

However, if the Senator feels that the rate should be raised above $24, I shall not object in this case.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It should be at least $30.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will move to make it $30 I shall not object.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out "twenty-four" and inserting "thirty."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

AGREEMENT WITH TURTLE MOUNTAIN AND CHIPPEWA INDIANS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to ask unanimous consent that on Friday, after the routine morning business, the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 464. It is a bill to which I understand there is no objection whatever.

Mr. KEAN. What is the bill?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is a bill confirming an agreement with the Turtle Mountain and Chippewa Indians. I ask that it be taken up on Friday after the routine morning business.

Mr. KEAN. I know nothing about the bill, but I hope the Senator will not make that request in so thin a Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER. I would not make the request if I thought there was any objection to it, but the bill has been reported several times to the Senate, and there are reasons why it should be promptly passed.

Mr. CULLOM. Does the Senator mean that it is an appropriation bill?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; it is a bill to open up an Indian reservation.

Mr. KEAN. Does the Senator not think it would be better to make that request to-morrow morning?

Mr. McCUMBER. I should be willing to do that, but I do not think there will be any objection to it in the morning or at any other time.

Mr. CULLOM. I am not objecting.

Mr. KEAN. I do not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the request of the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. McCUMBER. That on Friday morning, after the routine morning business, the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Calendar No. 464, being Senate bill 196. I will say that, if it leads to any discussion, I will allow the bill to be displaced by any other business.

Mr. TELLER. What is the bill?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is the bill (S. 196) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Turtle Mountain and Chippewa Indians in the State of North Dakota, and to make appropriations for carrying the same into effect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the request is that the bill shall be made the special order for the time named, not to interfere with appropriation bills?

Mr. McCUMBER. Not to interfere with appropriation bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. TELLER. Oh, let us adjourn.

Mr. CULLOM. It is only for a very few moments.

Mr. CARMACK. How far have we gone on the Calendar of pension bills?

Mr. KEAN and Mr. MITCHELL. We have finished the pension bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM].

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 28 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, March 3, 1904, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, March 2, 1904.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12833, being the appropriation bill for the District of Columbia for the ensuing year.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. LAWRENCE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12833, and the Clerk will resume the reading of the bill by paragraphs.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose last night we had just read [illegible] and I rose for the purpose of [illegible] at that time, but the matter was overlooked with the understanding that the inquiry might be made this morning. Now, I should like to ask the committee [illegible] provided for in this section. It seems [illegible] I would like to inquire whether it is for the purchase of [illegible] required to [illegible] every year. I notice there is a [illegible] for the keep of horses. I would like to inquire whether they keep their own stables for its own horses, or whether they are hired out, or when they are hired out.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I can not offhand answer as to the exact number of horses that are kept. I can say, however, that the District has its own stables and cares for its own horses.

Mr. THAYER. Can the gentleman give me any idea of how [illegible] own provender, this amount would pay for a great deal of care in keeping the horses. I should naturally presume there must be a very [illegible] number of horses, otherwise the appropriation [illegible]

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Has the gentleman read the [illegible]

Mr. THAYER. I surely read the paragraph, and I heard it read by the Clerk. Here it is. I know what the paragraph contains.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. The gentleman will note that this $5,000 is to cover all the [illegible]

Mr. THAYER. Oh, well, [illegible], repair of harness, whips, oil, brushes; these must amount to very little. It must be for the purchase of horses and caring for horses. Five thousand dollars for chamois skins, buckets, halters, rubber boots, coats and medicines, brushes and combs, would buy a whole barn full.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. It also provides for shoeing [illegible] all horses connected with the sewer and [illegible]

Mr. THAYER. [illegible]

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Why, there are hundreds of [illegible] I do not know the exact number.

Mr. THAYER. [illegible]

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I can not give the exact figures; [illegible]

Mr. THAYER. [illegible] tell whether there is 100 or 500?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I can not answer definitely.

The Clerk read as follows:

[illegible] for coroner's office, [illegible] fees, removal [illegible]

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, on page [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 14, in line 3, strike out "for livery of horse or horse hire."

Mr. COWHERD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say just a word on that, if the House will hear me. I venture to say there is no man in this Committee of the Whole—unless it be the chairman of the subcommittee—who has any idea, and certainly I think I may say the chairman of the subcommittee, after the response to the question of the gentleman from Massachusetts, himself has no idea how many horses are provided for in this bill. Now, why should we provide a horse and carriage for the coroner of the District of Columbia? Here is a provision for the removal of bodies. Here is a provision under which expenses can be authorized [illegible] Why should there be a necessity for a [illegible] of the District, except that he may [illegible] business in the practice of his profession? The coroner of your [illegible] home is not furnished with a horse and carriage. He is simply some physician elected to the position [illegible] to say it is used ten times more in professional business than anything else.

Mr. BURKETT. Let me say to the gentleman that item last year for all needs was $300, and it was for removal of bodies. That is [illegible]

Mr. COWHERD. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The gentleman from Nebraska says this item for livery of horse and horse hire is for removal of bodies, but there is another item in that [illegible] expense covered by the removal of bodies. This is "livery of horse and horse hire" for coroner's office, and if the gentleman has any explanation to make, I would like to hear it; if not, it seems to me [illegible] that law.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection [illegible] I simply desire to say the business of this office is quite peculiar, and it may be important for that gentleman to ride to places where the inquest is to be held. It happens to be on a different line. There were thirty-six inquests [illegible] June 30, 1903. The number of [illegible] from accidental injuries, 19 accidental poisonings, 54 suicides, 18 homicides and 1 homicide not in the District, and 1 legal hanging.

Mr. COWHERD. Will the gentleman tell me how the coroner of the District is paid, whether by salary or by fees?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. He is paid a salary of $1,800 a year.

Mr. COWHERD. I think the gentleman will agree with me that this is not intended to pay for the removal of dead bodies or anything of that kind.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. It is intended for his official purposes in going to these places where inquests are held, and in the judgment of the committee that provision ought to remain [illegible]

Mr. COWHERD. I understood the gentleman to say yesterday in response to a question that, as he understood it, the only official carriages and buggies provided were those for the Commissioners of the District. So this is another official conveyance [illegible]

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. No, sir; this is not. It comes right within the line of the gentleman's own statement. Horses and carriages provided for necessary official [illegible] and as the Chief has a horse, and just as other men connected with the District have horses and carriages for the purpose of carrying on their official work.

Mr. COWHERD. The coroner of the District is a practicing [illegible]

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. The law does not prescribe whether he shall or shall not [illegible]

Mr. COWHERD. I asked whether he is not.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I am not sure.

Mr. COWHERD. Well, I submit, Mr. Chairman, that coroners are not allowed a horse or buggy or official carriages in other cities of the United States and I do not believe they need them in the District of Columbia.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing work on the municipal building, $300,000, which sum shall [illegible] a building six stories high on all sides, with suitable accommodations [illegible] heating and lighting plant and for [illegible] for the police [illegible] District.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order, beginning with the word "which," in line 23, and ending with the last line, in line 6 on the next page, that it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, that is clearly a limitation on the expenditure of the money provided, which sum shall not be available except for expenditures under certain conditions.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, even if it be a limitation on the appropriation, it is a change of existing law, because there is no law for this building except the law which provides for a building to be otherwise constructed. And if this is a law authorizing a new building, it is subject to a point of order because there is no existing law on the subject. You can put a limitation on an appropriation but you can not change the law.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question.

Mr. MANN. Very well.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman where his authority is for saying that the law that was passed a [illegible] provided for the particular offices that shall be placed in it. If the gentleman has a law to carry out his statement, I would like to hear it. My understanding of the law is that it merely provides for a new District building, and this question of what offices shall be placed in the building is merely a matter between the District Commissioners and the architect in the drawing of the plans. If the gentleman has the law, I would like to hear it.

Mr. MANN. I may be incorrect, Mr. Chairman, in the statement of law covering the point. I supposed it did provide what offices the building should contain.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the gentleman from Illinois is mistaken. I do not think it provides for any particular offices.

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly the gentleman in charge of the bill can give the information on that question. But if there is no law on the subject, then this is creating and fixing what the building shall be and is enacting new law upon that point. If it were a mere limitation on the appropriation, very well. But I do not see how by limiting the appropriation you can pass laws defining what the building shall be and what it shall contain. It necessarily involves a very large appropriation hereafter, increasing the amount of the appropriation heretofore provided. I supposed the appropriation heretofore is a fixed sum as to what shall be the expense for the building. May I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether there is any limitation on the amount to be appropriated on the cost of the building under existing law?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. The building is to cost, including the site, $2,000,000.

Mr. MANN. That is the building as it stands. Here is an appropriation which changes the law and will very much increase the amount of its cost.

Mr. MORRELL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. MORRELL. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if any estimate has been made of the cost of the building [illegible] according to the limitation provided in this section?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Yes; the Commissioners estimate that it will cost [illegible] more if it is built in this way, provided they do not change the character of material they now have in view for the construction of the building.

Mr. MORRELL. That will make an increase in the cost over the original amount provided.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Not necessarily. It is wholly within the control of the Commissioners to determine the character of the materials to be used, and by changing the quality of the materials they can keep within the cost provided.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I think there is a misapprehension by the gentleman objecting to the clause, as to its being a change of existing law. I feel confident, although I have not read the act providing for the building for some time, that I can assure the committee that there is no provision in the original act creating this building that provides what offices shall be located in it. It merely provides for the building of a District building, the cost not to exceed $2,000,000.

Where this contention came in was this: It seems that the District Commissioners have had plans drawn to carry out the act of Congress for this building, and in those plans they have left out the police court, the registry of wills, the registry of deeds, and certain other offices. When this matter came to the attention of the Appropriation Committee there was some discussion as to whether we should include these offices in this one building or not, and it was finally decided by a vote of the committee that all of these offices should be located under one roof in one building.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in regard to carrying that out, if we appropriate this money, simply appropriate $300,000 to start the work, saying nothing about what the building shall contain, the District Commissioners will go on and carry out their plans. The building will be constructed according to their order. There will be certain District offices left out of the building, which will ultimately require the building of another building costing a million or more dollars. The committee think it is in the interest of economy, as well as good business discretion, to house the entire District offices under one roof, as can be done without increasing the cost of the original appropriation.

This amendment does not contemplate any increase of cost. The appropriation here is only a small portion of the contemplated cost, but it is merely directory to the Commissioners as to how they shall prepare this building, as to how the plans shall be drawn. It is a limitation on the power of the Commissioners in expending this money. Mr. Chairman, it is not necessary to argue with the Chair that Congress has the power to limit the expenditure of money that we provide for in general appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LAWRENCE). The Chair is ready to rule. The pending paragraph appropriates $300,000 for continuing work on the municipal building. It specifies that that sum shall not be available except for constructing said building on plans that will provide for a building six stories high on all sides, with suitable accommodations therein for the offices of the register of wills, register of deeds, and the police court, in addition to the offices and departments now designed to be accommodated therein, and with a sub-basement story of sufficient height of ceiling to afford suitable accommodations for heating and lighting plant and for a repair shop for the District of Columbia. To that provision the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH] raises the point of order that it is new legislation; that it is in violation of Rule XXI, which is very familiar to the members of the committee, and especially to that clause of the rule which says:

> Nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto.

While the committee has no power to adopt a provision which changes existing law, it has been many times held that it has a right to limit an appropriation. It can withhold it altogether or it can make it subject to certain conditions. This paragraph provides that the appropriation of $300,000 shall not be available except under certain conditions which are named. It seems to the Chair that it is a distinct limitation on this appropriation. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Strike out in line 23, page 14, after the word "dollars," all down to and including line 6, page 15.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, in reading the report of the hearings of the committee I was very much struck with the reasons assigned by the Commissioners for not desiring this change in the construction of the building. The building as originally designed was in the shape of a U, and was so designed so as to give the best possible ventilation and light to those occupying the building. As I understand the provision in the bill, as it has been read, this will build up the open portion of the U and prevent the light and ventilation which was originally designed for that part of the building. The U is so small, according to the plans, that the interior court will not be sufficient to give the proper amount of light and ventilation, according to the ideas of the Commissioners, if the open portion is built up. On page 54 Major Biddle, the Engineer Commissioner, speaks of this fact in the following language:

> On account of making the other rooms lighter and with more air in my opinion, in a block of this size, an interior court of this size in these rooms would make all of the interior rooms unsatisfactory. And a special point I made with the architect was, that he should make the court long, short of course, possible to it and not destroy the architectural effect. That is one of the few conditions that I personally laid down to him. In my opinion it would make a much more satisfactory building for offices to be used before 9 and out the year, if we could have it 3 stories instead of having an interior court. The architect could not do that with reference to the two lower floors, built up almost solid, but he did it with reference to the floors above.

So much, Mr. Chairman, for the alteration in the construction of the building. It is proposed under this paragraph to move the police courts from the situation which they now occupy to this new building. In relation to this matter the president of the commission, Mr. Macfarland, speaking, on page 57 of the hearings, of the location of the proposed new building, says:

> It is an entirely different neighborhood and vicinity. It might as well be 3 or 10 miles away for practical purposes. A building can be built for the police court on the present site for less than it would take to add to the District building or readapt the District building for that purpose. The space now occupied by the police court—and we are asking an enlargement—would take a whole floor of the District building, and this certainly is a very important consideration.

If it can be built for anything like the same amount of money, it ought to be built where it is. There is also an argument, which is a very strong argument, that it is very undesirable to bring to the offices of the government of the District of Columbia the many objectionable people who are brought into police courts or who follow the police courts. It would be often seen to the citizens, to public men, and others dealing with the District government, and unless there was some overwhelming reason for it, which does not appear, this ought not to be done. If it was a matter of imperative necessity, if we had another place, if we had room, or for any reason it was a necessity, if necessary to put the police court in the District building it would be a different matter, but there is no such necessity. You would have to strain everything to do it, and probably the expense would be greater than it would be to build on the present site.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the experience in my own city of Philadelphia of having a police court located in a public building has proven it to be a source of great annoyance, and it is practically decided to have been a mistake to locate it there.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the time of his colleague may be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, this has proved to be the case, even though the public buildings in Philadelphia are, I should say, at least three times the size of the proposed building here.

There is another provision in this paragraph in regard to the subbasement, where it is proposed to locate the heating and lighting plant and a repair shop for the District of Columbia. As I understand it, the bill provides that the height of the ceiling shall be greater than the original plans called for. Where the building is to be located I also understand there is ground of a marshy character which requires piling. If that is so, to increase the depth of the cellar would make a very expensive item in the construction of the building. Another matter in relation to that is that it is proposed to locate in this cellar the repair shop of the District. Everybody knows what a repair shop means. It means continual hammering and pounding, and would absolutely destroy the quiet which is necessary for the proper carrying on of the business which is to be transacted in the public building. I therefore trust, Mr. Chairman, that my amendment will prevail.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, does the amendment only have the effect of striking out the repair shop?

Mr. MORRELL. It strikes out the whole of it. It strikes out the location of the repair shop in that building.

Mr. MUDD. Does not this amendment strike out the whole limitation?

Mr. MORRELL. The whole limitation?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, it would strike out all of this provision, which includes transferring to this building the office of the recorder of deeds. It seems to me the records of deeds ought to be transferred to this building; that these records have no place in the court building.

Mr. MORRELL. Allow me to ask the gentleman whether the office of the recorder of deeds is not now very much more used by those who have business in the courts than it would be if transferred to the new location?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I think not. I see no reason why the office of the recorder of deeds should not be in this building. I am of opinion that the police court ought not to be there. I therefore desire to offer an amendment, which, as I understand, will take precedence of the amendment now pending, to perfect this section according to my own idea. My amendment is to strike out, in line 1, page 15, the words "register of wills," and to strike out, in line 2 of the same page, the words "and the police court."

The amendment of Mr. SMITH of Iowa was read.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. If the provision in regard to the recorder of deeds should remain in the bill, why not that in regard to the register of wills?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I am glad the gentleman has asked me that question; I take pleasure in answering him. Under the judicial system of this District the judges of the district court are also judges in probate. The judge of the district court has to transact the probate business; and he is obliged to transact most of his business at the ordinary court building. Now, it seems to me it would be unwise to require this same judge to transact his ordinary judicial business in the court-house and then come down to this other building to transact the probate business. It seems to me that all of his business ought to be conducted in one building. I am therefore of opinion that the office of register of wills ought not to be transferred to the District building.

Mr. MORRELL. May I ask the gentleman whether he is in sympathy with the project of absolutely altering the character of the construction of this building?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I am in sympathy with the plan that provides for raising the basement of this building.

Mr. MORRELL. Is the gentleman also in sympathy with the project of shutting out light and ventilation which will follow this proposed change in the construction of the building?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The light and ventilation will be but slightly affected, because while they will be slightly impaired as to some rooms on the north side, there will be a new set of rooms on the south side that will have identically the same amount of light and ventilation taken away from the north rooms.

Mr. MORRELL. But that would manifestly defeat largely the very purposes of the new building.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. No; I think not. This building is surrounded by streets on four sides, and the means of ventilation and light will be ample.

Mr. MORRELL. This building will have corridors with rooms on both sides. Now, the rooms on the corridors which face the interior of the building will be, if the project proposed be carried out, absolutely cut off from a proper supply of air and ventilation, and the gentleman must realize that during the summer months that is a very serious thing in Washington.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. This building, if constructed as proposed in this amendment, will be constructed exactly like the State, War, and Navy Department building in this regard, and exactly like the Treasury building in this regard.

Mr. MORRELL. I should like to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the area included in this new District building is very much less than that of the State, War, and Navy Department building.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I grant that the area will be somewhat smaller.

Mr. MORRELL. And there are already complaints upon complaints made by the [illegible] of proposed [illegible] in the last two [illegible] buildings. I may [illegible] mentioned them, for [illegible] examples of what might occur in this new building under the plan which the gentleman proposes.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I should like to ask the gentleman this question: [illegible] as in every State of the Union [illegible] to go from one [illegible] to another in the same city?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I am not claiming that it is a hardship upon the judge. I claim that it will be an inconvenience to the [illegible] business to be required to go to the judge holding district court in another building.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. He will not hold the two courts at the same time.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. In my State we have identically the same system in this respect that prevails in the District of Columbia. Anyone may go to the district court there at any time and obtain orders in probate, because the judge is there, the records are [illegible] difficulty in getting an order any day of the week [illegible] day.

[illegible] he would only have a [illegible] unity to transact his probate business, as compared [illegible] now enjoyed by him.

Mr. MAHON. Why don't you put all these judges in that [illegible]

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. [illegible] the wills [illegible] court, which has a general law and equity [illegible] it.

Mr. MAHON. Why not put all the courts [illegible] and put them all in one place.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. There is no pretense that this building is or can, without [illegible] ing it unreasonably, be made large enough [illegible] understand that. It would mean a considerable increase [illegible]

Mr. MAHON. I do not think that is any objection, considering the [illegible] to be gained.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It would mean an addition of millions [illegible] the size of the building to put all the courts [illegible]

Mr. MAHON. We ought to do just as any large municipality [illegible] is in one building regardless of cost. [illegible]

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word in behalf of this section as it is in the bill. I do not know whether I can talk very loud to-day, but I want the Members to hear what I have to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must insist on the committee being in order.

Mr. BURKETT. This is an important matter in dollars and cents to this District and to the Government. What we do here to-day we can not undo in any succeeding bills. In my judgment, the action that we take here to-day means a million dollars or more to the Government.

The House is familiar with the legislation that we have had with reference to this building. It started out with an appropriation, in the first place, to buy a site. Then the limit of cost was a million five hundred thousand dollars; afterwards it was increased to $2,000,000. Of that $2,000,000 there was appropriated in 1902 the sum of $500,000, and in 1903 the sum of $[illegible].

There is nothing in the law concerning this building that says what it shall contain, except that it shall be for municipal purposes—a municipal building for the District of Columbia. I take it when this law was originally passed nobody had any other idea than that it was to house everything belonging to the District that it was possible to put in the building. For years the District had been asking for a municipal building. The District authorities had been applying to Congress for it, the papers had taken the matter up, delegations of citizens had come before the committee, and Congress finally acted and provided for the building, and limited the cost to $2,000,000 for a District building. Now, the plans have been prepared, or partially prepared, and I have them here. A few weeks ago the subcommittee having this bill in charge addressed a letter to the Commissioners, and in that letter they asked about seven or eight questions. In short, they asked for a copy of the plans; they asked for the total floor space that all the departments of this District are occupying now, together with the number of clerks in each and every department, and also the total floor space of the new building, together with the assignment of the rooms contemplated in the new building, the number of clerks who would be in that new building, and the number of square feet of floor space that it was proposed to give every department.

When we received the reply we found there were several things that were not provided for at all in this new building. For instance, there was the harbor master's office, the superintendent of repairs, coroner, and several other things. Among the list not provided for was the police court of the District, the register of deeds, the register of wills, and the probate court. The committee went over the proposed plans thoroughly and carefully, and as a [illegible] decided that when we build this building it should include all the officials of the District except some, perhaps, that could not go in. For example, the harbor master's office, which would have to be down on the river front; the coroner's office, which has to be in the morgue, and one or two things like that; but we decided that all [illegible] should be gathered together under one roof. So the next question was, [illegible] enough? Now, I want to show you how we have chosen they [illegible] in that building; and in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania let me say we have not contemplated a single change in this building except raising it 18 inches from the ground and building in or filling up the open prongs of the "U" on the south side of the building.

The building, as these plans show it, will be six stories high. The lower floor is about 18 inches above the ground. That will permit a cellar 7 feet, as now proposed, underneath the first floor. If we raise that building so that the first floor shall be 5 feet or [illegible] above the ground, they can build a cellar [illegible] which will give an abundance of ceiling height for [illegible] heating plant, and a repair shop, such as is contemplated and [illegible] to put in that cellar.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Where is the repair shop of the District of Columbia now?

Mr. BURKETT. They have got them everywhere.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. What does this include?

Mr. BURKETT. It would include in this building, of course, only such light repair work as could be done there properly. It will be the same sort of repair shop that they have under the Post-Office building and under all of the great buildings, the same sort of repair shop as is in every other public building in the District of Columbia.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. There is to be such a repair shop under this [illegible]

Mr. BURKETT. This is to get such a repair shop there.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. How, under this [illegible] you know that the [illegible] shops of the District or Columbia will be put under that [illegible]

Mr. BURKETT. We are trying to put all of the forces of the District [illegible] a place [illegible]

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It does not say that all the repairs of the District shall be done in this shop.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. That is what the clause in the bill indicates.

Mr. BURKETT. It does not contemplate running a blacksmith shop in the cellar, or a wagon shop.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I ask you, under this provision, how are you going to prevent it?

Mr. BURKETT. If they choose to put it there, let them put it there. I wish they would put it there if they want it. I am not afraid about that. We will not have any trouble about getting the things we do not want there. The trouble is to make them put all the things that ought to go into that building. That if where our trouble is, I would say to the gentleman.

I want to compare a little as to the room which they are going to have when this building is completed. All the departments of the District of Columbia occupy to-day 66,011 square feet.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. Chairman, this is a matter of some importance, and I should like to have about ten minutes longer.

Mr. BENTON. I hope the gentleman will have ten minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman's time may be extended ten minutes. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURKETT. Now they occupy a total floor space of 66,011 feet. In the new building as now planned they will have 165,215 square feet. In short, they will have almost three times as much space in this new building as the present District government occupies. That is all right. We want it to be too large. We want to have an outlet for the growth of the city. It is shown by the plans that there are 25,000 square feet of floor space in this new building that they have not been able themselves to find anything to occupy, and they have labeled it "unassigned," and there is 25,000 square feet of it.

Now, another thing. When the Commissioners were before us we asked whether this building was large enough, and they informed us that there was planned 25 per cent outlet. Now, let me compare to you the room as now occupied and to be occupied in the new building. For instance, the sealer of weights and measures, against which somebody raised a question yesterday, has 11 employees. They occupy one room now with an area of 1,216 square feet; when they get down to the new building they will occupy 3,553 square feet. They are going to have a public hall in the new building with a floor space of 2,550 square feet. The Commissioner has a room which now gives him 885 square feet; in the new building he will have an area of 2,073 square feet. The auditor now occupies 2,244 square feet; when he gets in the new building he will get an area of 5,472 square feet. The property clerk now occupies 620 square feet; when he gets into the new building he will occupy 2,666 square feet. So you find we have abundance of room, and we have provided for them about two and a half or three times as much floor space as they now have. Our question was, Can you have enough room with that for the recorder of deeds, the register of wills, the probate court, and your police court?

Now, when we got the plans of the building—the building is going to be located, I take it gentlemen of the House understand, on Fourteenth street, right below the Avenue, right south below the Willard Hotel, where the Mount Vernon street-car line comes when it jogs west on a short street and turns south. It is the block around which the Mount Vernon street-car line turns—the old power-house block. In addition to that block Congress vacated the street north of the block, so it gets that block and the street north of the block clear up to the little triangular piece of ground next to the Avenue. The plans contemplate covering only that block south of the street and do not include covering the street. Now, the plans as we found them provided for a U-shaped building, a building facing on Pennsylvania avenue, with two prongs running to the south. It is six stories high; the first two floors are built up solid all around. After it gets to the second floor, the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth will be U-shaped. I trust gentlemen will understand this.

Now, it occurred to the committee that it would make a prettier building if they would fill up that southern side, two-tailed proposition, and make a square building, facing all the points of the compass, and make it as good to the south as to the west or the east or to the north—make a completed building, as it ought to be. So when we had the Commissioners before us we asked them to figure out and add the amount of space that would be required for the police court, because the very next item in the bill, I think it was, appropriated $38,000 to buy a site for a new police-court building. The very next item after this $200,000 or $400,000 municipal building was to appropriate $38,000 to buy additional land for a site for a police court building. So we said to the Commissioners, "Figure up how much floor space it will take for the police court building; figure up all about it and let us know; figure up how much additional space will be in the municipal building if it is built up on the south the remaining stories." Peculiarly enough, it required 15,000 square feet for the police court; peculiarly enough, there were just 15,000 square feet gained by building up this building.

They argued that we could build a new police-court building as cheaply as we could put that addition up. They figured it up and there was about $20,000 difference in the cost of the two, and then we would have them all together—housed together. And their figures, mind you, was to build a police-court building out of brick at a cost not to exceed $75,000, and you and I know that while that will do to estimate for and to put in the bill as a beginning, you and I know that when we once commence a building like that it will cost half a million dollars and it will not be built out of bricks, because we are not building any buildings inside the District of Columbia out of bricks. Last year when the Commissioners were before the committee the matter was discussed somewhat, and it was intimated to them at that time that in the judgment of some of us it was better to have all the District offices housed in one building, and that Congress preferred that it should be that way. That was before the plans were out. Ignoring, apparently, that suggestion, they have come in this session in this way, with these particular departments left out. Now, the question is up to Congress to say to these people before we have gone any further: "We want you to build a building that will house all the departments of the District of Columbia."

Now, I want to get to the proposition that my friend from Pennsylvania is very anxious about. He fears there will not be light and air in some of these rooms. Let me tell the gentleman from Pennsylvania he ought to have looked at the plans. He spoke about the light and air being shut out of the rooms on the north side of the court. Well, there are no rooms on that north side of the court. It is all taken up by stairways and toilet rooms—not a single office room is contemplated. Let me tell the gentleman something else—there is but one floor, just one floor, on which it is contemplated to occupy these inside rooms next to the court as office rooms. The rest are to be occupied by dark rooms for the photographic department of the police officers and by records of the surveyor's office and various offices. There is just one floor, as I recall it now going over these plans, above the second, and of course that is dark under their plans, as the gentleman says, that is contemplated being occupied.

Now, here [holding up a plan] is the shape of the building. I wish you could all see it. It faces north. It is open to the south. Now, it is proposed by this section to build across the south end the same as across the north end, making the front the same as the north, and build that up four stories above where they have left it off. They complain that that will leave a closed court in here about 100 feet square, and that it will be dark in the inside rooms. There is the north side, as you see designated. A stairway and a toilet room extend clear across the north side of the court. On the east and west sides of this court there are storerooms, etc., in the main. That is the fifth floor.

Now, here on this other plan is the fourth floor. You see the stairway and the elevator goes clear up. Here we have a large room on this floor for the engineer department's records. That takes up practically all of it. There is only one other small room there. It is all occupied by the engineer department's records.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has again expired.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Nebraska be extended for ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks that the time of the gentleman from Nebraska be extended ten minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. Chairman, I will not take the time to go over each of these floors. I went over them all the other day, and there is just one, as I found, that is contemplated being occupied by a force of clerks, as I now recall it. The first and second floors are filled up across there, and it will be a closed court below the third floor. They propose in their plans to put in this court the heating plant on the first floor, so that will fill the whole interior court up as far as the first story is concerned. The rear part is built up two stories, as the roof shows on the second-floor plan, which is really the third floor, for they count the basement floor as the first floor.

Now, I want to say just one more word in response to the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that it would strain everything in this building to do it. That was the statement of the Commissioner—the Engineer Commissioner—at the hearings; but he has a good deal of pride in his plans. But when you get the plans and figure them over you will find that they only contemplate using the outside, a row of offices around here for an office force; that the inner side is used for the elevator and stairway and the record offices and that sort of a thing. In spite of the extravagant use of the increased floor space they still have 25 per cent outlet, and I can not see how you are going to strain anything very much when they have got 166,000 square feet and 25 per cent outlet. They only need 15,000 square feet for a police court. If anybody will tell me how that is going to strain anything very much, I would like to know it. I am willing to put in some concession.

Mr. PALMER. What does he mean by straining?

Mr. BURKETT. I suppose he means to crowd—to jam some department up and put it in a less space than it ought to be put in. We do not propose to crowd them. If we build up the south end, it will probably cost $130,000—to build it clear up and make it a complete building. The architect figured it out, and I think he said it would cost $130,000 more. We believe the $2,000,000 appropriated for it is enough to do it: if it is not, we would rather increase it $130,000 than to start out with this building and know that we have got these three departments to put into some building hereafter.

Now, there is one other proposition. In my judgment and everybody's judgment there is no question but that the recorder of deeds ought to go down there. There ought to be no question but what the register of wills and the probate court ought to go there. It pertains distinctly to this District. It is true that one of the District judges up here one day in the week, under the law, goes into the probate end of the building and sits as a probate judge. Now, in my judgment, that probate court and its records ought to be down there in a municipal building, where its clerk would be and where all the business pertaining to the probate court and the registry of wills will be performed, and when that day of the week comes that the judge shall preside over the probate court he ought to go down there and sit in the municipal building. All the affairs of this District ought to be housed in one building.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say that the probate judge, or the judge who sits as probate judge, sits only one day in the week.

Mr. BURKETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand from the gentleman that a man who wants to probate a will can probate it on only one day in the week; that a man who wants to produce witnesses can produce them only on one day in the week, and that a man who wants to take out letters can take them out on only one day in the week in the city of Washington?

Mr. BENTON. Oh, no, no.

Mr. BURKETT. It is suggested to me that their practice here is to take the evidence before the clerk. I do not know what the practice is, but the testimony was that he sat as a probate judge one day in the week.

Mr. MANN. Is it not the practice that a man can probate a will any day in the week, and he can obtain letters of administration any day in the week as a matter of formality, but that it requires the presence of the judge to permit this?

Mr. BURKETT. I do not know what the fact is as to the practice in this District. I do not know whether the gentleman does or not. I have not practiced any law in this District. I know what the practice is in my own probate court, and I presume the gentleman does in his own, and unless he has practiced here he probably does not know what it is here. They told us in the hearings that he acted as probate judge only one day in the week.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt, if the gentleman will pardon me, that he is required only one day in the week to sit hearing matters relating to probate business, but that so far as the issuing of letters of administration is concerned, so far as the probating of wills is concerned, that he is sitting all the time, and under the change proposed by the gentleman that could not be done, and a man who came here from a distance, for instance, could be heard on only one day in the week.

Mr. BURKETT. It could be done just as well as it can be done now. He is sitting as the judge of a regular court here all of the time, except when he is on the bench of the probate court. If he has the authority to make orders outside of his own probate court room, he could make them just as well down there four blocks away as he could in another room in the same building.

Mr. MANN. Very likely, but the people would be required to trot down there to see him.

Mr. BURKETT. There would not be any people about it. Attorneys would get these orders as they do now, I presume.

Mr. MANN. Nobody would know where the judge was to be found.

Mr. BURKETT. They would know when he was to be down in the probate court.

Mr. MANN. They might, after they came to town.

Mr. BURKETT. Now, the only serious objection that has been raised to this whole plan, of course, has been to putting the police court down there. They want a new police court building here. They have been talking pretty loud about it and a good long time about it, and with a good deal of difficulty have we insisted finally on their fixing up the present headquarters to make it habitable. They have complained of Congress for not furnishing the money to make that building habitable, and yet, if I remember rightly, for several years we have appropriated the money and it has been unused. They have had the money available to make those cells and conditions over there more habitable.

We are simply up against this proposition now: Is Congress going to make them put the city government in that municipal building when we know they have the room, and every showing is that they have abundance of room, or are we going to let them have control of the purse strings and dictate another new building in this District? That is the whole question. They argue that the police court would not be a very suitable and desirable thing down there in the municipal building. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORRELL] says they have the police court in that magnificent municipal building over there in Philadelphia, and he says it is not a satisfactory arrangement over there. But Philadelphia thought it was all right to put it in its municipal building, and I dare say if we were to take a census of this House that out of the 386 Members five-sixths of them would testify that the police courts in their respective cities are in the municipal buildings. Now, they say it will be prominent. Everyone knows where the police court here is——

Mr. MANN. No; we do not know.

Mr. BURKETT. Well, the way the gentleman was talking about the courts I thought he understood all about it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's acquaintance with the probate court and the acquaintance of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT] with the police courts are reversed. The gentleman from Nebraska may know where the police court is. I know where the probate court is. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURKETT. The police court is over there on Louisiana avenue, just below Judiciary Square, where the car line turns east after coming south from the Pension Office. It is one of the most sightly places in this city. More people go right through that section of the city than any other, it occurs to me. Yet gentlemen say they do not want to remove the police court——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to have three minutes more.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to conclude his remarks.

Mr. BURKETT. I shall not want more than three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to granting the gentleman from Nebraska five minutes more?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURKETT. Gentlemen object to transferring the police court, because they say in the proposed new location it will be unsightly; but, sir, the south side of that block, down next to the electric power house, is farther away from Pennsylvania avenue, farther out of town, more hidden from the sight of the people, than the present location of the police court.

Now, what is the condition of the finances of this District? This District owes about $20,000,000. We can not put this bill through without increasing that indebtedness probably $2,000,000 more the present year, because we are doing some enormous work in the way of extending public improvements—in providing for the sewage-disposal system, in providing for the filtration plant, in building up the approaches to the new terminal station. All these things are going to involve an expense of two or three millions more than the present indebtedness.

Now, it occurs to me that the thing for us to do is to protect the District in this respect; and the people of the District want to be protected. Let me say that the persons who are clamoring for this thing are not all of the taxpayers. Since this bill has been reported I have been approached by many more of the strong business men and taxpayers of this District who want to be saved from the unnecessary extravagance of additional buildings than by people who have criticised the position that I take in this matter.

Mr. Chairman, we must meet this proposition. If we do not it simply means the addition of another million dollars to the indebtedness of this District. We have got to provide for the police court. If we do not provide for it by placing it in this building we shall be obliged to buy a site for the erection a new police court and erect another building.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I fully concur in the remarks of the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. BURKETT]. We are putting up in this city a great municipal building, and why should we have a part of the judges sitting in the city court building and a part of them in the new municipal building? There is no question to my mind that the probate judge and every judge of this District should go to this new building and also all the records of these courts. There will be plenty of room there for the records to accumulate.

Now, in regard to the police court. That court is now located about a great square from where the other courts are held. What are you going to do with that building if the police court should be transferred? That building is in pretty fair repair, and it might be kept for the use of two or three of the judges of our courts, and for the register of wills and his records. But why not transfer all the courts down to this new building, and if we must have a police court in that part of the city where it now is take the proceeds of the sale for a police court and such other offices as you may need in that locality?

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORRELL] has spoken of the great public building in Philadelphia, costing about $[illegible]. In that building there are all of the courts of the city. There is an archway cut through, as there ought to be in this new building. Hundreds of thousands of people pass through that archway every day. The people passing through there do not see good [illegible] of the criminals. The prisoners come there and back up to elevators which are used only by prisoners and the police officers. When the court is over those prisoners come down and are taken away.

Gentlemen know that where the police court of this District is now situated the prisoners, no matter how desperate or how dirty, pass to and fro in the presence of the passers-by.

Mr. MANN. Is it possible in Philadelphia to always tell criminals by looking at them? [Laughter.]

Mr. MAHON. In Chicago you can not tell them; but we can in Philadelphia.

Mr. MANN. There is no trouble, then, in Philadelphia; you know them whenever you see them.

Mr. MAHON. Because we have but few in Philadelphia; but in Chicago the criminals are far more numerous. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. The gentleman takes my idea, but reverses it.

Mr. MAHON. I agree with the gentleman. He has taken his seat. That house is no reason why this new building should not be made large enough to provide accommodation for the police court. It can be done by spending a little more money. You already have your or son venue; you should have in the new building [illegible] to bring the prisoners up to the court room and down again, and in that way they will, perhaps, be more removed from contact with the citizens than they are at present.

I have gone past the police court often during the last ten years. It looks more like an army hospital than a court building. In passing you meet many maimed and bloody handed, standing on the pavement. You see gathered every morning around that police court a crowd of desperate people [illegible] their friends. Now, why not remove all that? These judges need not be so degraded. They are judges of the United States. They hold their police court and their criminal courts in these great buildings. If you are going to finish this building and have a police court in that locality, then there will be another and another building. I do not have hope how to enlarge it. Now, I am in favor of putting the offices of all the courts, criminal and all, in that building.

Mr. BENTON. Mr. Chairman, what is the present parliamentary situation?

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the committee is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BENTON. What was the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report such amendments.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Strike out, on page 14, after the word "dollars," in line 23, all of the paragraph commencing with and including line 6, on page 15.

And the amendment to the amendment, as follows:

On page 15, strike out, in line 1, the words "register of wills," and in line 2 the words "and the probate court."

Mr. BENTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether I can enlighten the committee any more than they have been enlightened by what has been said. I shall address myself first to the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON], who has just taken his seat.

The probate court ought to be there. As to the other courts, they are Federal courts; there is a building already in the District of Columbia, paid for, for their use. I do not see any reason why the other courts of law and equity should be in the municipal building. It might be all right if we had the room, but there are a large number of offices that have to be housed in this building.

Now, as to the main proposition. I have been on this committee some years. The people of this District, or those who are in control, the Board of District Commissioners, have insisted, year after year, that the District of Columbia should be housed in a building of its own, complaining that the offices were scattered around all over this city, and I agree it; that the District ought to have a home. Finally we bought a very [illegible] piece of property down here on Pennsylvania avenue, running south to and across what is known as D street. We then appropriated, as you have been told, money to build a $1,500,000 building, making it cost altogether $2[illegible].

Without consulting the committee or the Congress the Commissioners prepared elaborate plans, and these plans show a very handsome building, but one which does not come anywhere near covering all the ground.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman pardon me, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. BENTON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. We have not heard stated on the floor of the House yet, and I know it would be a matter of information if the gentleman would tell us, what offices are to go into the building according to the Commissioners' plan, in addition to the offices enumerated now in the limitation proposed by the committee?

Mr. BENTON. If I do not come to that in a moment I hope the gentleman will rise and call my attention to it. I think that is an appropriate inquiry, and I will try to meet it.

It was the opinion of the committee (I am frank to say there was some division in it, however) that the ground which we had purchased at an enormous cost had not been properly utilized. A suggestion was made that we buy a piece of ground at a cost of—I do not remember how much money—$30,000, I believe, on which to erect a repair shop for the District. That was for the ground. The repair shop was to come later. A suggestion was made to purchase some property for the erection of a police court, and later would come the police-court building. There have been frequent suggestions for a building of records, to house the recorder of deeds and the register of wills.

Your committee thought that in the interest of economy, and in the interest of the people who transact business with the District, the offices ought all to be put into one building. The Commissioners proposed—if I am mistaken I hope some one who knows better will correct me; I am talking from memory now—the Commissioners proposed to house first the superintendent of police, together with his office force and the officials of the fire department. Each of the Commissioners was well provided with a large amount of room.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have ten minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request for an extension of ten minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENTON. They proposed also to house in this building the assessor of the District and all his clerks and assistants—and he has a large number of men; the collector of the revenues of the District and all his officials, and the water department; the sealer of weights and measures—and, in fact, all of the officials except the harbor and wharf master and the police court, the recorder of deeds, the register of wills, and the probate court—are about all that were left out.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to a question? The recorder of deeds and the register of wills and the probate court are ordinary county officers, I suppose. I will ask the gentleman to kindly inform me whether the plan contemplated putting into the new building all the officers usually relating to the city affairs in the ordinary city except the harbor master? Is not that the case?

Mr. BENTON. Yes and no, both. The District government is just like a county and city government.

Mr. MANN. Well, I understand that, but I say we distinguish between the city and county governments possibly the same as in other places. Now, here the plan contemplates putting in this building, as I understand it, the general offices that in other places usually relate to the city government.

Mr. BENTON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And the offices left out were those offices usually your county offices.

Mr. BENTON. With the exception of the police. All the police officials we provide for in the plan of this new building.

Now, Mr. Chairman, your committee is of the opinion that the officers of the District of Columbia ought all to be housed in one building; and if the committee is sustained by the Committee of the Whole House, I shall offer an amendment that the probate court shall be put in there. Now, just a word on the general subject, gentlemen. Those of you who have been in Congress here a number of years know that there is a disposition among a class of very nice gentlemen to make a lot of splendid buildings in this city and District at the expense of the people of the United States. This committee has not been niggardly with the people of the District of Columbia. We have given to it here the largest bill by $1,300,000 that we ever made for this District. If we had followed the suggestions of those whose duty it is to make suggestions to us, we would have made the bill very much larger than we have.

The Committee on Appropriations, as I understand it, in obedience to the voice of this House, has been undertaking to pare down wherever it could and keep the expenses within bounds. This is a campaign year, and it is not a political secret to say that it is the desire of the Administration this year, and it ought to be always the desire of Democrats, to be economical. These people have asked us and we have generously granted them $2,000,000, and with the addition of $133,000 for a municipal building the Commissioners say we can put every official connected with the District of Columbia into the municipal building.

Mr. MORRELL. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BENTON. Certainly.

Mr. MORRELL. The gentleman has just stated it would cost $133,000 additional. Was not that the figure?

Mr. BENTON. I ought to explain——

Mr. MORRELL. My understanding from the chairman of the committee was that this increase in cost over the building at this other site in this new shape of the building was all to be included in the $2,000,000.

Mr. BENTON. I think it could be without any question. But I am telling you what the suggestions of the Commissioners were.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Will my colleague on the committee yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BENTON. Certainly.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. What I meant to say was that if would all be included in the $2,000,000 if changes were made in the material.

Mr. MORRELL. Then that alters the situation.

Mr. BENTON. Oh, no.

Mr. MORRELL. Because if this is to be an additional appropriation for building this wing part, I may say that this part of this clause is subject to the point of order.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. All that you would have to do would be to change the material and bring it within the amount. The quality and character of the material has not been fixed yet; it is simply in contemplation; and by changing the material it could be brought within the amount.

Mr. MORRELL. I just wanted to be informed whether it would be included in the $2,000,000.

Mr. BURKETT. Let me say to the gentleman that we do not know how much it is going to cost yet. They have got no bids on it. They might have $500,000 of the amount left.

Mr. MORRELL. I was just taking the words of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BURKETT. Now, we do not know what it will cost. They may be able to make this within the bound, and they may submit the bids so that it will not exceed $2,000,000. But the whole cost, according to the figures, would not be more than $130,000 additional for the present plan of the building.

Mr. MORRELL. That was certainly not the impression the chairman of the committee made on me when I asked the question.

Mr. BENTON. Mr. Chairman, of course the gentleman from Pennsylvania did not purposely misunderstand me. I just want to make myself clear. I intended to say the suggestion was made to us that it would cost $133,000 more than the present appropriation. I am of opinion that it all can be built with the $2,000,000, and I think that is the opinion of your committee as well. Now, if we follow the suggestions of the Commissioners——

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, if my friend will just allow one word of interruption. Of course that does not provide for the raising of the building so as to give a higher ceiling to the subbasement. That would cost $50,000 more, but we think it can be all included within the $2,000,000.

Mr. BENTON. If we purchase this piece of ground for the erection of the repair shop that is going to cost $30,000, to say nothing of the erection of the repair shop. We will make money by putting the repair shop in this building. We know it is going to cost at least $38,000 to buy the ground for the police court building. Then it is the intention afterwards to build a records building, and we do not know how much these buildings are going to cost, but from the experience this committee has had in the past in paying for these buildings I venture the opinion that there can not be erected a repair shop and police court building and hall of record and probate court short of a million and a half dollars.

This committee in the interest of economy insisted upon putting the whole District of Columbia in this one municipal building. Now, I think, perhaps, with what we have already stated to the committee, that you understand the position of the Committee on Appropriations. We are erecting a magnificent building here for the use of the District. We are proposing to have it cost $2,000,000, one-half of which comes from the pockets of the taxpayers and all the people. We believe it is enough, and therefore I hope that this committee will sustain the committee in its conclusion.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LACEY). Debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. MORRELL. Just one word——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. MANN. The Chair states that debate on this amendment is exhausted. That was true more than half an hour ago.

The CHAIRMAN. Then it is equally true now.

Mr. MANN. The gentlemen favoring this item of the bill have now been occupying forty-five minutes, and it would hardly seem that it is necessary that the Chair should call attention to the fact that debate on this question is exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. If debate has been running forty-five minutes beyond the time, it is certainly necessary now to call attention to the fact.

Mr. MANN. But it has been forty-five minutes on one side. While the present occupant of the chair has not been in the chair, it has been forty-five minutes on one side of this discussion, and now I think the other side should be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. It rests wholly with the committee.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to the gentleman that I did not intentionally misunderstand him, as he seems to think.

Mr. BENTON. No; I said I did not think you did.

Mr. MORRELL. The gentleman has stated that the cost of the new police court and the ground which he claims is to be purchased would probably be altogether, with other buildings, a million and a half dollars, if the change is not made as provided for in this bill. Now, Mr. Chairman, in regard to the price for this ground, it must be remembered that the District already owns the ground upon which the present police court stands, and this $38,000 was only to purchase a small additional piece of ground and to prepare plans. The Commissioners say that an adequate building can be erected for $75,000. My experience with the Commissioners, Mr. Chairman, is that their estimates do not run so very much behind what the building would eventually cost as the difference between $133,000 and a million and a half of dollars.

Now, the gentleman has claimed that the fact of raising this fourth side will not shut out the light and air, because there is a corridor and no rooms on the side of the building facing the court. I do not believe that that is the case. I think the building will suffer from lack of ventilation and lack of light just the same by having this proposed building erected on the open part of the U. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has made the remark also in regard to its not being at all disagreeable or injurious to the building to have the character of people that frequent the police court come to this new building. To this I disagree.

The gentleman from Nebraska described the site of this building, and described the character of the building. He said that it was to be a monumental piece of architecture, located near the New Willard Hotel, and yet for the paltry sum of $133,000 we are going to run the chance of destroying that neighborhood, to run a chance of having the character of the people around this new building such as he must see if he ever goes near the police court where it is situated to-day. I therefore trust, Mr. Chairman, that the House will give some consideration to this amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if debate is exhausted on this amendment, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill whether the police cells are to be in this building?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Of course, there would be no cells for permanent incarceration. There would be a few cells for temporary detention pending trial.

Mr. MANN. Where are the permanent cells to be?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. In the jail.

Mr. MANN. I am still at sea. I do not know where the jail is.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. In the eastern part of the city.

Mr. MANN. Where is it expected that the drunks and disorderlies will be taken when arrested? Where are they now taken?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. There are a number of police stations around the city, and they will be taken to those stations.

Mr. MANN. At the different stations and then brought to the police court here in the morning. Are they always brought in covered vans?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. MANN. From each station?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is sure of that?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Yes: no question about that.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. But let me suggest to the gentleman that it is understood that there are to be certain police cells in this building, if this provision goes through as it is contained in this bill. They will be cells for the temporary detention of persons awaiting trial.

Mr. MANN. I am very glad to hear the explanation given by the gentleman in charge of the bill, because it partially removes the objections to putting the police court in this building. We have had the experience of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, where they erected a housing costing $2,[illegible] occupied by criminals, two-thirds of whom ought to have been put in the cells, because that building never cost $2,[illegible] except by a building.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania is not responsible for that conclusion, because he would never allow anybody to steal if he could prevent it. The drunks and disorderlies are to be gathered here in the same building. And here is a proposition to construct a moderate-sized building, in which it is proposed [illegible] disorderlies necessarily shall come in contact with the gentlemen who perform business at the city hall in the District building. Because the gentleman from Pennsylvania has given his experience with his building, I feel constrained to give mine, having been connected with the city government of Chicago, where there are police courts and plenty of criminals, and I say it would be a distinct outrage to put the police court of any large city in the same building with the ordinary city offices, where ladies and gentlemen ought to be permitted to go without being compelled to contact with the drunks and disorderlies and [illegible] and there are as many of them here in the city of Washington proportionably, in proportion to the population, as there are in any other place except Chicago and Philadelphia. [Laughter.]

There is no reason for it. Saving $[illegible] Mr. Chairman, we are legislating for the capital of the country. The cheese paring in reference to this expect not to be permitted. We can afford to give to the capital of the country [illegible] a proper District building, but, if necessary, a proper police court. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. [illegible]] [illegible] or the day before delivered a very learned [illegible] relations between the District and the General Government. I am not in favor, any more than he, of unnecessary appropriations in behalf of the District, but I do not believe that we ought, in justice to ourselves or to our constituents, in this, the capital of the country, to do what they would not do in any respectable town of large size in the country, put the register of deeds and the register of wills and the probate court and the drunks and the disorderlies together in the same building with the usual city officers. [Applause.]

Mr. BENTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has found a [illegible] The police [illegible] by the committee [illegible] the balance of the building. The south side is [illegible] away from the north side of the building, on Pennsylvania avenue. The drunks and the bad people and we have them in all cities—come in on that side of the building. They [illegible] through the building, they come in on the [illegible] street side. The register of wills, and the [illegible] and the probate court, and the Commissioners are not in any [illegible] connected with the police court. We looked after that perfectly, so the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. CLARK. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BENTON. Go ahead.

Mr. CLARK. If you build the new building you are talking about, what is to become of this old building over here?

Mr. BENTON. That belongs to the United States Government.

Mr. CLARK. The whole thing belongs to the Government, does it not?

Mr. BENTON. No.

Mr. CLARK. I thought somebody said here yesterday, a member of this committee, that the District of Columbia belonged to the Government.

Mr. BENTON. I would like to state to my colleague, on the suggestion made by the gentleman from New Jersey, that it does not take the place of the court-house where the Federal judges who are appointed by the President try the general cases. It is just the probate court and the police court that we want to put into that building.

Mr. CLARK. Are they going to build this great building for the benefit of a probate court?

Mr. BENTON. Oh, no. We build it for the whole District—the water department, the fire department——

Mr. CLARK. Oh.

Mr. BENTON. The police department and the collection department, the assessment department; in fact, the whole District of Columbia.

Mr. CLARK. And now they are objecting to the police court going in there?

Mr. BENTON. Yes.

Mr. CLARK. On the ground of the social status of the fellows that attend the police court?

Mr. BENTON. Yes; that is the idea.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It is a fact, is it not, that the probate court and the registry of wills are now in the court building on Judiciary Square and are costing the Government of the United States nothing and the District nothing to house them?

Mr. BENTON. Yes; but it is the intention to have another building.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will ask the gentleman if he has ever heard from anyone a suggestion that we build a separate building for the probate court?

Mr. BENTON. Oh, yes; I have more than ten times since I have been on this committee. Not specially the probate court, but for various city offices. It is to be called a "record building."

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The gentleman does not claim that the contemplated hall of records is intended as a court room?

Mr. BENTON. No; not the hall of records, the gentleman is thinking about, but the building that they will try to get is for the business of the registry of wills and the registry of deeds and the probate court, a separate building from the court room and a separate building from the municipal building.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Whatever may be the fact as to that, these offices are now conducted in the ordinary court building without any expense to the Government of the United States or to the District of Columbia.

Mr. BENTON. Yes; but we have no reason to believe that that is going to continue.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Is there any reason to think that we can not continue to shelter them there?

Mr. BENTON. Yes; I know the persistence of certain men in the District of Columbia and that they will never let up; that they will keep after us until they get a big police court, and they will get a building to put the registry of deeds and the probate court in, and they will have a [illegible] in the municipal building. Where we have [illegible] we will be compelled in the [illegible] to have [illegible] business, and so on, the government of the District [illegible] as long as I have he will get [illegible] as I am with [illegible]

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. [illegible]

Mr. BENTON. [illegible] will be no expense [illegible]

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Does the gentleman say there is an expense [illegible]

Mr. BENTON. There is, because the whole District ought to be in one building.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I am talking about whether there is any [illegible] in removing them from where they are now to the new building.

Mr. BENTON. Absolutely there is [illegible] for [illegible] that they are costing and costing other [illegible] That is the purpose for it—to stop the [illegible] it unnecessary for them to say that they need [illegible]

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I would like to know [illegible] any more necessary to have a separate building now than it will be when you get them into the [illegible]

Mr. BENTON. There would not be any more necessity, except the excuse for it would be removed because we will have gotten them [illegible]

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I can not see where the excuse will be removed.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman if it is contemplated to house the supreme judges of the District of Columbia and the judges of the court of appeals in the new building?

Mr. BENTON. No: it is not.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. That it is not contemplated?

Mr. BENTON. [illegible]

Mr. McDERMOTT. I do not understand that the courts are to be in the [illegible] building.

Mr. BENTON. [illegible]

[illegible] It does seem to me [illegible] those offices who are, [illegible] of the records of record, as distin- [illegible] a passage [illegible] which we [illegible] will [illegible] by a proper build- [illegible] dis- [illegible] to the ju- [illegible] it. In [illegible] is not a [illegible] All rec- [illegible] public [illegible] of judicial business, [illegible] the court is held.

[illegible] ined on. I want to enter my protest against allowing the police court to occupy any part of [illegible] hall. That is what it is to be called. You may call it the "department building" of the District of Columbia, but it is to be in fact what is ordinarily called in a city the "city hall," and it is very seldom that police courts are held in the city hall of any city.

[illegible] the police court of the [illegible] is not matter in what part of the building it may be placed—it is going to be a nuisance. It is a nuisance to-day in the present [illegible] On any day when there is a trial of any importance, when the committing magistrate is called upon to have preliminary hearings; for instance, in a case of burglary or the commission of any misdemeanor, the vicinity of the police court is crowded; the streets are crowded with characters more or less offensive. And so it will be in this new building, which should be an ornament as well as a convenience.

If you attempt to set off any particular part of it for the transaction of business ordinarily carried on in the police court of the District, on any day when there is active police court business you will have the whole of Pennsylvania avenue crowded with the vagrants, with the "hangers-on" around the police court—with objectionable characters. You can not keep them out of the building; they will be roaming in and out; they will be intruding themselves upon the sidewalks, offensive to everybody. I do not mean to say that they are different in this District from what they are in any other municipality, but if anybody will attend the police court of the District, will watch the gathering on the adjacent [illegible] and particularly in this District of the objectionable features that will necessarily present themselves if you put the police court of the District in the city hall.

If in spending two or three million dollars, as seems to have been contemplated in the consideration of providing for this new building, [illegible] that a part of the judicial system should be provided with the same roof as the municipal system, it will be a great error. I may be wrong. That is a matter to which, of course, the committee has given more calculation, more scrutiny, than I could give; but I should like to see the judicial system and all its appurtenances in the court-house and the municipal system in the hall. But, above all things, let us not put the police court down there adjacent to Pennsylvania avenue. If you should do so, you will simply provide for the congregation there of [illegible] objectionable to everybody—men, women, [illegible] to have dealings with the municipal government of the District. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri seems to be worked up a little because he thought I did not know that the entrance to the police court will be different from the entrance to the main part of the building. Mr. Chairman, in connection with the Capitol there is an entrance on the House side as well as an entrance on the Senate side, but it is not to be supposed that all the Senators go in on the Senate side and all the Members of the House on the House side. Yet it is just as likely [illegible] Members of the House come into the Capitol from the House side and all the Senators will come into the Senate side and those who have a [illegible] to enter it. [illegible] to be used the [illegible] and those who have a [illegible] because [illegible] have [illegible] that the police court [illegible] is the [illegible] of a large population [illegible] element of the city. Here in the [illegible] capital [illegible] employment as well as the [illegible] element [illegible] will [illegible] frequent the police court [illegible] Now, the [illegible] and [illegible] go to transact [illegible] business with the [illegible]

Mr. BURKETT. Let me say to the gentleman that the police court is [illegible] now to the [illegible] it will be [illegible] this arrangement. It is closer to [illegible] and would have been in this city than it will be under this arrangement.

Mr. MANN. Very well, we are [illegible] to cause the present [illegible] it is not [illegible] The gentleman proposes to [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment [illegible] Iowa to the amendment offered by [illegible]

Mr. [illegible] Mr. Chairman, will we have the amendment reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report [illegible]

The [illegible] read the amendment, as follows:

[illegible] after the word "[illegible]," in line 23, page 14, down to and including [illegible]

And the amendment to the amendment:

Striking out [illegible] the words "register of wills" and in line 2 the words [illegible]

The question being taken on the amendment to the amendment, the [illegible] announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. LENTON [illegible] a division.

The committee [illegible], and there were—ayes 22, noes 27.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. SMITH of Iowa and Mr. BENTON.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 44, noes 46.

Accordingly, the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, in line 2, page 15, I move to strike out the words "and the police court."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that that amendment has already been acted upon.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. But it was acted upon in connection with another part of the clause, and not by itself.

Mr. BURKETT. The gentleman should have asked for a division then.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is correct.

Mr. BENTON. I submit that that question has been settled.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. Chairman, that question was voted on in conjunction with the other one. Now, if the gentleman did not ask for a division of the question, that is his lookout, and not that of anybody else.

Mr. BENTON. The amendment covered both.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LAWRENCE). The Chair will remind the gentleman that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] was to strike out the words "register of wills" in the first line and the words "and the police court" in the second line. No one called for a division. The proposition offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH] to strike out the words "and the police court" is a different proposition. Perhaps it would have been better to have called for a division of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa, but that was not done, and the Chair must hold that this is a different proposition—one which has not been acted upon. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 21, noes 33.

Mr. MORRELL. Tellers.

Tellers were refused, not a sufficient number rising in support of the demand therefor.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I have one more amendment that I should like to offer, in line 6, page 15, beginning with the word "for," to strike out the words "for a repair shop for the District of Columbia."

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, line 6, strike out the words "for a repair shop for the District of Columbia."

Mr. BENTON. Mr. Chairman, if that motion is carried it means the purchase of a property valued for $30,000, and then the erection of a building. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The amendment was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. DALZELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 13290. An act making an appropriation for clearing the Potomac River of ice;

H. R. 5761. An act to authorize the Charleroi and Monessen Bridge Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela River; and

H. R. 5578. An act to authorize the Mercantile Bridge Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela River, Pennsylvania, from a point in the borough of North Charleroi, Washington County, to a point in Rostraver, Westmoreland County.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1760) granting a pension to Ann A. Devore.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 200) granting an increase of pension to Austin Almy.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 6582) granting an increase of pension to Harry Haller, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. PATTERSON as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3658. An act ratifying an act of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Oklahoma legalizing the waterworks-bond election held by the city of Geary, in said Territory;

S. 2263. An act to require the employment of vessels of the United States for public purposes; and

S. R. 73. Joint resolution authorizing the reprinting of certain documents to be sold by the superintendent of documents.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary [illegible] the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. [illegible]) for the relief of Juliette Westbrook.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assessment and permit work: For assessment and permit work, $160,000.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the gentleman in charge of the bill what this appropriation is for. What is meant by "assessment and permit work?"

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. For sidewalks, alleys, sewer connections with houses, etc., one-half the cost being paid by the property owner, the other half by the District.

Mr. OLMSTED. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. PERKINS. I move to strike out the last two words. I would like, Mr. Chairman, to make some suggestions to the committee with reference to the question of local improvements, not that they will act upon them now, but it may be well to consider them with a view to future action. If I understand rightly, all local improvements—the continuation of streets, the construction of roadways, the construction of sidewalks, the construction of local sewers—are paid for by the city at large. Is that right?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Except such as are paid for under the provision now under consideration.

Mr. PERKINS. They are paid for by the city at large. They are not paid for by local assessments on the abutting owners.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. The improvements covered by the pending paragraph are paid for by the District and by the abutting property owners half and half.

Mr. PERKINS. One-half. And what improvements are paid for by the abutting property?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I have just answered, as provided for here—sidewalks, branch sewers, and such things.

Mr. PERKINS. I would like to ask the gentleman for information. If a sewer is constructed on some new street, who pays that expense? It is paid for by an assessment on the abutting property?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. It is all paid for by the Government; that is, out of a general appropriation carried in this bill.

Mr. PERKINS. All paid for by the Government. Suppose a macadam pavement is put on Massachusetts avenue, who pays for it?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. That is all paid for in the same way.

Mr. PERKINS. It is all paid for by the Government. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to make some suggestions——

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. My general statement is subject to certain modifications. For example, sometimes gentlemen desire to make improvements which are obviously for their own personal advantage, they having large tracts of land which they wish to improve. For such improvements they pay the entire expense. In other cases improvements are desired in advance of the necessities of the community, as judged by the Commissioners. Sometimes, where it seems in the public interest, the Commissioners grant permits for such improvements and pay one-half of the expense. They do this on the theory that these improvements would have to be made soon anyway, and would then have to be paid for entirely by the Government.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. That is speculative.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. They are permitted to improve, to lay out their own property, providing that such new streets conform to the general plan of the city, and they may make improvements upon them, provided that those improvements reach the standard of quality which the Commissioners deem proper.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, it is hard to speak about this, because I am not entirely familiar with the practice. But it seems to me that the procedure adopted by the committee needs some further consideration.

The bill this year provides for spending in the city of Washington the sum of $10,000,000, which is a larger sum than is expended for the entire expenses of several of the States in the Union. I find in looking over the bill, at a rough estimate, $2,000,000 is spent for what I should regard as local improvements. Now, certainly, Mr. Chairman, the system of paying local improvements by the city at large is a very costly and very unfortunate one. Every man knows who lives in a city——

Mr. BURKETT. That depends the gentleman mean by local improvements?

Mr. PERKINS. I would say this: Suppose a sewer—we will say on Nineteenth street—is constructed. I should call that structure a local improvement. It should be defrayed by the property abutting on Nineteenth street. I want to find out whether this city, the Government [illegible] this present year for local improvements.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Well, now, that is true if it originated with the property owners.

Mr. PERKINS. If it originated with the property owner.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. If it originated with the Commissioners as part of the general scheme, they are responsible for it, and pay a larger proportion than anybody else.

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, no; the gentleman is not right about that.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I am right.

Mr. PERKINS. In any city government, when the time comes where they are to have a roadway or a sewer, it is paid for by the people whose property is affected.

Mr. Chairman, where is the difference between constructing a new sewer on Nineteenth street in the city of Washington and constructing a new sewer in a similar street in any city of the country? Why should it not be paid by the owners of the abutting adjacent properties who receive the benefit?

Mr. BURKETT. Do you ask that as a question?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes.

Mr. BURKETT. I thought that was a question you asked. But the simple difference is the way we do it here in the District of Columbia.

Mr. PERKINS. Why should we do it that way?

Mr. BURKETT. Because the law on the statute books prescribes the procedure, and when we meet as a committee we simply take the law and appropriate in accordance with the law. Now, the law says that it shall be done on the half-and-half plan, that sidewalks shall be built in a certain way and sewers shall be built in a certain way and pavements in a certain way, all paid for out of Government funds, and we simply appropriate under that law.

Mr. PERKINS. Then I should like to ask the gentleman, who is himself a lawmaker as well as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, whether he thinks that the law should provide that all these local improvements should be paid out of the general fund, one-half by the Government, instead of being defrayed as they are in almost every city in the land, by owners of the property [illegible]

Mr. BURKETT. No, I will say to the gentleman this: While this is the national capital and while we want to make it as beautiful as we do, we must keep in our hands control when we make these improvements [illegible]

Mr. PERKINS. But——

Mr. BURKETT. Now, just let me finish. When the gentleman states that in my city or any other city no street is paved until two-thirds or three-fourths of the abutting property owners have paid, he knows there are streets which ought to be paved for the good of the city and the beauty of the city, yet you can not get the requisite number of signers to the petition to pave them. Here in Washington we are not going to wait for a few obstreperous property owners to come to the conclusion they want that street paved. Whenever the Government says, "Pave the street," we are going to pave it. We are going to tax the owners for half of it, and we are going to pay the other half out of the Treasury. This is the law of 1878. If gentlemen do not like the way Congress does it, they must change the law and assess these pavements and sidewalks and sewer extensions. We are appropriating in accordance with the law, gentlemen, and I think it is a good law.

Mr. PERKINS. The question is whether this is the way the law ought to be.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Will the gentleman pardon a question?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I did not understand exactly the point of the gentleman's suggestion. He mentioned, I take it, that the general trunk line sewers are paid for wholly out of public funds, one-half being paid out of the Treasury of the United States and one-half out of the revenues of the District——

Mr. PERKINS. Yes.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. But minor sewers are paid for by the public and by the property owners, half and half. For example, take the case of a block or square adjoining a trunk-line sewer. It is desired to run at right angles to the trunk sewer a [illegible] sewer for the accommodation of people living on the street at right angles to the one upon which the main sewer lies. In such a case those who desire such accommodation must pay half of the cost.

Mr. PERKINS. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman——

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I did not quite understand [illegible] question is. Is it that the public ought to [illegible]

Mr. PERKINS. I want to ask about the propositions here on page 25, and I think the House ought to understand what the propositions are. On page 25, "For continuing construction of the Piney Branch and New Jersey avenue trunk sewer, $200,000." Now, there [illegible] property in that vicinity?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Yes, sir; but it also drains a vast territory which is not [illegible] to it.

Mr. PERKINS. What does it drain?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. That is what I referred to a moment ago. The sewer referred to is one of the great trunk-line sewers. It receives sewage from a very large area and brings it to a point where we are going to have a general exit under the East Branch to a point 2 miles below the city. It is not for local purposes alone or chiefly. It is for general purposes for a large area.

Mr. PERKINS. Then let me ask the gentleman another question. In line 14 of the same page, "For sewer system of Rock Creek and B street in [illegible] sewer, $25,000."

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. That is also a trunk sewer. It is not being built for the benefit of those in that immediate neighborhood, but as a part of the system of general sewage disposal.

Mr. PERKINS. Does the gentleman mean to say that all these intercepting sewers at B street and at Water and L streets and at Four-and-a-half street are all part of the outlet sewers?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. That is exactly what "the gentleman" means to say.

Mr. PERKINS. Where is the provision of the bill which provides for the construction of any sewers that are not outlet sewers?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. That is the item we have under discussion—the $160,000 item.

Mr. PERKINS. What portion does the abutting property owners contribute to that?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. One-half. That is in cases where the usefulness of the sewer is purely local. Those who enjoy the benefit of it pay one-half of the expense. That, as has been said by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT], is statute law which the Committee on Appropriations has no authority to change.

Mr. PERKINS. Is it the fact that in a great city like Washington, the entire local improvements for this year, which would ordinarily be assessed on the abutting property owners, only represent $320,000? There is not a city of this size where the local assessment would not be in an ordinary year one or two million dollars.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. This is the amount estimated by the engineers for this particular kind of work.

Mr. PERKINS. Is not the result that, as matter of fact, pretty nearly all the improvements which would ordinarily be regarded as local improvements are put under the head of "general improvements" and paid for by the public at large?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I think not.

Mr. PERKINS. In this bill there are $2,000,000 for improvements—such as making roadways, [illegible] of sewers—paid by the District at large, and only $320,000 of which is assessed upon the abutting owners?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. The gentleman's question is a perfectly proper one, and is entitled to as respectful and complete an answer as I can make in a brief time.

The gentleman understands that the sewage-disposal system of Washington has not yet been completed. It is now in process of construction. The trunk sewers now utilized have their exit in front of the city, in various places, into the Potomac River. A number of years ago the unhealthfulness of that system was recognized, and the project was begun of constructing a great trunk-line system of sewage disposal which should gather up the sewage into a number of great trunk lines from different parts of the city and bring it down here to the Eastern Branch, tunnel under the Eastern Branch, pump the sewage out of that, and send it down 2 miles below the mouth of the Eastern Branch, wholly away from the city.

That work is now in progress, and all the items the gentleman refers to are parts of that trunk system, being parts of the general sewage-disposal system which [illegible] being constructed. Of course, for the time being, while this trunk system is being constructed, its cost is very much larger than the part where contributions are made by private owners.

It is not easy, Mr. Chairman, without a map showing what this system is, to make it clear to anyone, however eager and intelligent he may be. I know that we had quite a time getting it through our minds with the map before us. The general thought is to prevent the exit of that sewage in front of the city or into some basin where the water is not fluent or is largely stagnant. [illegible] the sewage and dispose of it away down below the mouth of the Eastern Branch, and therefore far from the city, to the end that the health might be preserved.

The total amount estimated for the construction of this sewage-disposal system was $4,500,000. We have already expended something like $3,000,000 upon it, and we are nearing the completion of it. I think in a year or two from now if the gentleman raises a similar question, he will find that the trunk sewers are very much less expensive, take a very much smaller part of the total expense for sewage than they do now.

Mr. PERKINS. I would like to ask the gentleman another question for information. Many [illegible] have been during the last two or three years extended. Who paid the expense of that?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. The gentleman is referring to the pavement of the streets?

Mr. PERKINS. No; to the cost of the extension.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. That is a part of the general highway system, and is regarded as not purely of local benefit, and is, to my recollection, paid out of the general fund.

Mr. PERKINS. Does not the gentleman think that property in that vicinity must necessarily be largely enhanced in value by the extension of those highways, and that it ought to contribute something, instead of the Government being asked to pay the whole improvements which are of such value to the owners?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. The gentleman from New York will remember that the committee that has this bill in charge is not a legislative committee; it is an appropriation committee. And we are not responsible for the laws as they are upon the statute book. I find that there are things about the laws which I would change if I had the power, but this committee must make the appropriations in accordance with the laws as we find them.

Mr. PERKINS. I understand; but the question is whether this committee, which is familiar with local conditions, should not only make appropriations, but, if changes ought to be made in a general law, should report a proper modification of the law.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. My friend will recognize the fact that two committees, whose work impinges upon each other, are naturally a little jealous of their respective prerogatives, and we recognize the right of the legislative committee of the District to initiate the work that belongs to it.

The simple fact is that we jealously protect, so far as we possibly can, the rightful prerogatives of the other committee.

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman does not mean to say that if he thinks a proper bill should be introduced, he, on a question of delicacy and good manners, would decline to introduce it?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. As an individual Member of the House?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Why, certainly not; any more than the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS], having a good idea, would be barred from introducing that idea in the form of a bill. [The privilege is open to my friend just as it is to me.

Mr. OLMSTED rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS] has the floor.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield. Mr. Chairman.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask the gentleman from Minnesota another question, by way of further elucidation of the question that I have already asked, and merely for information.

In the city in which I live, when we pave a street the property owners have to pay for the pavement, as most of us know by recent experience. But I note that in this bill, in the paragraph we have just passed, we appropriated $200,000, part of which is for paving, and on page 17 we appropriate for the Commissioners District of Columbia for the northwest schedule, $13,000; for the southwest, $6,000; for the northeast, $15,000, and so on; and I note that that is for asphalt paving, the cost of which is provided for there. Do I understand that all of that paving of streets is paid for wholly by the Government and not by the property owners?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. It is paid wholly from the public Treasury. I assume that the gentleman uses the word "government" in the sense in which we use it in connection with this bill.

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. That is, one half is paid by the District and one-half by the Government of the United States.

Mr. OLMSTED. This item of $160,000 for assessment work is the only item where the property owners pay one-half of the expense.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. That is right.

Mr. OLMSTED. And this $160,000 is the other half, to be paid by the public.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. That is correct.

Mr. OLMSTED. And except for that, the whole cost of paving is paid by the public?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Yes; on the general theory suggested by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT] that this capital city imposes a duty upon the Congress and upon the community which it would be unfair to put upon the community alone or upon citizens individually.

The Clerk read as follows:

It shall be the duty of the [illegible] separate gas mains with such [illegible] deposited in a [illegible] with the provisions [illegible] received and deposited and the provisions [illegible]

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order for the purpose of asking the gentleman in charge of the bill for some explanation of this paragraph, which is to me absolutely incomprehensible.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, it has been suggested, with a large degree of truth, that the District of Columbia, or the city of Washington, is the best-governed municipality in the United States. It is governed, as the gentleman knows, by the Congress of the United States, having no self-government.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. And the least government.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. And in one sense the least government, as the gentleman from Michigan suggests. Of course that seems irrelevant at this time——

Mr. OLMSTED. It is not always objectionable, either, to have the least government.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. That is right. But last summer during a vacation of Congress occurred what is so unusual that the attention of the country was attracted to it, viz, a defalcation on the part of an employee of the District government amounting to some $73,000. That occurred in what is known as the "whole-cost" fund. Sometimes a person wants an improvement which is so manifestly for his own personal benefit that he is required to pay the whole cost of it. For instance, the connection of a sewer with his house. Before the District Commissioners will allow anything to be done in that matter the citizen must deposit a sum of money with the District, a sum which, in the judgment of the officials, is sufficient to cover the total cost of that improvement. This being done, the District makes the improvement and recoups itself out of this deposit made by the individual citizen.

If the money be sufficient to return him a balance, the balance is returned. This money was the money in which occurred this defalcation. It arose out of peculiar conditions, as the gentleman will see, and was not sufficiently guarded. The man who had charge of it was not under bonds, and by devious ways he put into his own pocket the sum of $73,000 of that money. The whole purpose of the paragraph which has just been read is to make such procedure in the future impossible by requiring that that money which had heretofore been placed to the credit of the auditor in one or more banks shall hereafter be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the "District of Columbia trust fund," and that it shall be paid out only upon proper authority. The whole purpose of the paragraph is to prevent any such thing as a defalcation in the future.

Mr. OLMSTED. This does not change at all the purpose for which the money in these several funds is to be used?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Not at all; the object is simply to protect the money——

Mr. OLMSTED. From loss in the manner that the gentleman has pointed out?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Yes, sir.

Mr. OLMSTED. Upon that very satisfactory statement I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Under appropriations contained in this act no contract shall be made for making or repairing [illegible] yard for a [illegible] prior to [illegible] for making [illegible] required, in [illegible] price [illegible]

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Will the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. McCLEARY] kindly state the object of this limitation?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. The committee is of the opinion that by limiting the amount to be paid we shall be able to induce the Commissioners to reduce the price. This provision is a fair warning that if those who bid for this work—the contractors——[illegible] to secure a higher price than that made here the Commissioners can not make the contract; the work will simply have to go undone. We have found that the prices paid [illegible] decreased, and we have continually done [illegible]

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Can you get good pavement at this price?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. We found that last year we got the best prices that have ever been obtained, namely, $1.51 to $1.56.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. You got "the best prices," but did you get the best quality of work?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Oh, yes. It is required that the quality shall come up to the standard set by the Commissioners, or it will not be accepted at all.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. What is "the best quality?" What is the standard?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. As the standard is gradually being increased, it is almost impossible to state what the standard is. The standard as expressed in the bill is that of a superior quality of work which was done at a date named.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Is this asphalt to be Trinidad asphalt?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. We do not specify that this material shall come from a specific source. There was a certain piece of asphalt pavement put down some years ago which was the best work of that kind that had been done in this District up to that time, and that has been taken as the standard. Since that time no pavement has been laid of a lower quality than that.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. That standard is not fixed by law?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. We simply place that as the minimum standard. As a matter of fact, the standard now is, I understand, far higher than that.

As a result, in large part, of the limitation here inserted, as we believe, we have accomplished two things: First, we have reduced the cost; and second, we have obtained a higher quality of work. We believe that this limitation has been helpful in accomplishing those two results; hence we continue to insert this paragraph.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Is there much standard asphalt-block pavement in Washington?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. They are gradually putting down a good deal of this asphalt-block pavement.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Is it standard asphalt block, or is it some other material?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. It is the standard asphalt block.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Is there not some good pavement that is made out of other material than asphalt?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I can not answer that question positively, but I think not.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I know they are introducing such a class of pavement in different States, and I have been told that there was some here. I was anxious to locate it if I could and to ascertain how it is wearing.

The Clerk read as follows:

Grading streets, [illegible] and roads: For purchase and repair of [illegible] parts. [illegible] to be used in the [illegible] of the [illegible] pay of [illegible] employed to [illegible] at the [illegible] $[illegible]

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It is such a pleasure to receive information from the gentleman from Minnesota, who states it so clearly and so satisfactorily, that I want once more to ask a question. Where is this grading to be done, or where are these horses and carts to be used which are to cost so much as $[illegible]

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. The purpose of this paragraph is to place under the control of the Commissioners this sum of money for the purchase of materials enumerated, to the end that the Commissioners may use the labor of people who have been committed to the workhouse. Those people ought to be employed, and this seems to be a kind of employment to which there is no objection.

Mr. OLMSTED. They may be employed in any or every part of the city?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Wherever the Commissioners deem it wise to employ them.

Mr. OLMSTED. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For Harrison street, Anacostia, grade and improve, $5,000.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 8, on page 21, insert:

"For Pennsylvania avenue extended, grade, $10,000."

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, the necessity for such a provision as is embodied in this amendment seems to me to be so great that I can not but think that the omission of it in the bill must be due to an oversight on the part of the subcommittee.

I will state, in the first place, that an estimate for the $10,000 covered by my amendment was submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and by him transmitted along with the other estimates, as will be found on page 515 of the Book of Estimates. This extension of Pennsylvania avenue SE. was authorized by the act approved March 3, 1899—nearly five years ago. I have that act before me; and I want to call attention particularly to the requirement therein that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia should—

[illegible] open Pennsylvania avenue [illegible] E. to the District line, the same to be a straight extension and [illegible] width of said avenue as now [illegible]

That will be found in the first section of the bill, as I say, passed [illegible], in the Fifty-fifth Congress, authorizing and requiring the opening and extension of this street. The Government has opened the street, all the surveys have been made, and all of the titles to the necessary land acquired to the District line.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in order to give an idea of the importance of this street, I will ask the Clerk to read a marked extract which I have sent to the desk, being the approval by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia of the bill for the opening of the street, which letter was submitted to the chairman of the District Committee at the time the bill was pending.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
[illegible] 18, 1899.

DEAR SIR: The Commissioners have the honor to submit the following on House bill 11899, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session, for the extension of Pennsylvania avenue SE. to the District line, referred to them by your committee for examination and report:

Pennsylvania avenue is now opened up and available for travel from the east side of the Anacostia River to Branch avenue. From this point to the Bowen road the District possesses title to the street, but the street has not yet been graded. It is for the purpose of acquiring title to the land necessary to open the avenue from Bowen road to the District line that the bill has been introduced.

In previous bills of like nature the Commissioners have expressed themselves as being unfavorably in favor of opening up streets such as this, but now [illegible] for road purposes and the convenience of the District, and in view [illegible] the present case we see only a small area of land is needed to complete the extension to the District line, they consider the case [illegible] meritorious. The amount of land which will be necessary is only about five and a half acres, the price is reasonable for which is believed to be less than [illegible] the amount of money appropriated for the purpose of the temporary [illegible] is quite small.

In addition to the fact of having the best link in order to the high avenues of the District, the extension is very much needed because it will [illegible] access to and from the eastern portion of the District lying east and beyond the Anacostia River in Maryland, and by affording [illegible] it is believed that it will contribute greatly to the material [illegible] of the business interests of the District, while [illegible] to the public generally resulting from the opening of such a main thoroughfare.

Very respectfully, yours,

JOHN W. ROSS,
Acting President Board of Commissioners District of Columbia.

Hon. J. W. BABCOCK,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MUDD. Now, Mr. Chairman, it will be seen that five years ago the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the committee, as well as the House, thought this street ought to be opened and considered that it was very important that it should be opened. The Commissioners speak of it as a "main thoroughfare" of the section of the District through which it extends, being that section of the District of Columbia across the Anacostia River.

As shown by the extract from the bill authorizing the opening of the street, it was required to be on a straight line of extension and of the same width as the street now is in the city. It will readily appear, therefore, that this is the widest street, and certainly in many respects, if not in all, the most important street, in that section of the District of Columbia. Perhaps I should speak of it as a highway or road, as it lies in what is called the "county," or rural portion of the District. From the time it was opened down to the present time very little money has been expended upon it. The only work thus far has been as far as Branch avenue, a very short distance from the end of the Pennsylvania Avenue Bridge.

The question, it seems to me, might occur right here, why was it that Congress a few years ago appropriated several hundred thousand dollars for the construction of a bridge over the route of this street extended if it did not intend thereafter to continue the roadway? There is no reason why we should build an expensive bridge merely to open to the people of the District the farther bank of the Anacostia River. It was built because it was seen then that there was a great necessity for a highway, as is stated in the report, to give access to the city to the people in that part of the District, as well as those in the contiguous section of Maryland.

Now, I understand that the local authorities of Prince George County, in Maryland, lying along the District line at that point, are anxious to build a road to connect with this proposed extension. Gentlemen may say that the District of Columbia has nothing to do with the access to this city of people living in the contiguous portions of Maryland; but a moment's consideration will show that that is an erroneous view to take of the matter. These people just beyond the District line in Maryland make Washington City their market. They bring all their produce here, and they buy practically everything that they have to buy, and in that way they contribute almost as much to the volume of business and growth of Washington City as those do who are just outside the city, but inside the District.

As I say again, this is a straight extension. It is, I think, the only straight street on that side of the Anacostia River. It is the widest roadway there will be there, and it will accommodate in time a much greater number of people than any other roadway across the Anacostia River.

I do not disguise the fact that the opening of this street is of some benefit to the people of my district. I am always anxious to furnish them with an easy and convenient access to this city and a good route to go home over after they have spent their time and money here, to the mutual advantage always, I trust, of the city and themselves. I hope the gentleman from Minnesota will not object to this amendment. The little appropriation carried by it entails appreciably no burden upon the District of Columbia, and I assure him that from my personal knowledge and familiarity with the ground and the population over there I know it is a very important item, and I hope the gentleman will permit it to go through with his consent. I know I can have but little hope for its success if opposed by the committee that holds the purse strings of the Government.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman I am always reluctant to make objection to anything that my friend from Maryland wants, because what he wants is always good.

Mr. MUDD. It is good in this case.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. This item is in connection with the county roads—that is, the roads outside of the city of Washington [illegible]. There is a very great demand for the improvement and [illegible] of these roads in all parts of the District. The [illegible] have carefully considered the requests and [illegible] and have incorporated some [illegible] of these improvements [illegible]. We asked the Commissioners [illegible] and it is a standing order—to go carefully [illegible] for these improvements, and to give us a schedule [illegible] of their recommendations. Now, that schedule, as [illegible] the number of their recommendations. The particular [illegible] to be the Brookville Maryland road is No. 17 in that list. [illegible] of the gentleman, and the [illegible] at all, because the improvement [illegible] question, we would have to deny the [illegible] improvements. As I say, of the [illegible] for five is made, assuming that [illegible] if any addition should be made we [illegible] it to be made out of the other sixteen, instead of the [illegible].

Mr. MUDD. Does the [illegible] be, in that section of the [illegible].

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Not that section; I referred [illegible].

Mr. MUDD. [illegible] how many there were.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I can find out by [illegible]. I want to say to the gentleman, Mr. Chairman, that [illegible] was a Commissioner, and he will find that there are [illegible] roads of the [illegible] and I think two—that are to be improved in the [illegible] to which he refers. They [illegible].

Mr. MUDD. I understand.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. We have provided for the improvement of [illegible] well [illegible] is what I am trying to say. I [illegible] to deal fairly with the [illegible] and I appeal with much force to the consideration of my friend [illegible] begun with a [illegible] of Minnesota. Which is the time of our respected [illegible].

Mr. MUDD. I would like about [illegible] has been so fair that I believe he would [illegible] and that to all the [illegible] and generosity of the House in [illegible] to have this great improvement [illegible]. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that [illegible] the last [illegible] and the [illegible] on by the present [illegible] and [illegible] of roads and highways [illegible] and [illegible] with others, is so slight as to be almost [illegible].

Now, here are two little roads, [illegible] can not present anything of the importance of a [illegible] to be, and they receive [illegible] appropriation for all the northwest section. On the other hand, here is a great, broad magnificent central avenue, a road which I say of my own personal knowledge will, when completed, afford accommodation and access to thousands [illegible] than any road in that section. I do not wish to criticise the Commissioners. I do not think they are [illegible]. We all know that there are not the same facility and convenience in driving over that portion of the city as there are in driving over the excellent streets and roads in the northwest section.

These gentlemen always live in the northwest section, and they are human, and I am not complaining that they should do as the rest of us would likely do, in that they look most particularly to the interest of the section that is most close to them and with which they are most identified. The result is that this section of the District over here is like unto an ordinary farm, with paths and winding byways through it that hardly amount to the dignity of a country road in comparison with the splendid asphalt paved streets and finely macadamized roads of the northwest section.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, if in order, I reserve a point of order. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Maryland [illegible] gentleman that the point of order would come later.

Mr. MUDD. It would come too late, but I want to answer the gentleman. I have in my hand now the act approved March [illegible] authorizing the opening and extension of [illegible] act the Commissioners have already acquired all the property they need for the street, and have opened [illegible].

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. As far out as the District line?

Mr. MUDD. [illegible] the street as far out as the [illegible], but in the [illegible] to go much [illegible] the Bowen road, or the [illegible] to a large extent will answer the purposes of the proposed road for [illegible]. It was the [illegible] to open and improve to the District line in [illegible].

The [illegible] seven; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota) [illegible]—ayes 5, noes 22.

So the [illegible].

Mr. H[illegible]. Mr. [illegible], I was absent when page 18 [illegible] the consent of the gentleman [illegible].

The CHAIRMAN. [illegible] gentleman specify [illegible].

Mr. McCLEARY of M[illegible] the nature of [illegible].

Mr. [illegible] Is I want to strike out lines 3 and 4 and insert:

[illegible] shall be [illegible] is with [illegible].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous [illegible] to page 18, to the paragraph consisting of lines [illegible] ment which he has [illegible].

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I am [illegible] I m[illegible]. I do not want [illegible] for my objection [illegible] to a schedule [illegible] in the bill, and we ought not [illegible].

Mr. Ch[illegible].

The Clerk read as follows:

And [illegible].

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the point of order against this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota makes the point of order. Will the [illegible].

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That it is not authorized by existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota in charge of the bill desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Is that the one beginning with [illegible]?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. With line 9; yes.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Why, Mr. Chairman, I trust that [illegible] order pending an explanation [illegible] is.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will do that.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, the whole point of this paragraph [illegible]: At the [illegible] bill there is a [illegible] of ground co[illegible]. In another place [illegible] same size and [illegible]. [illegible] suits him. That there is a [illegible] or break in each street. By [illegible] exchange with the owner of the adjoining [illegible] one place [illegible] the [illegible] they have [illegible] and [illegible] the improvements. That is all there is to it. There is only about [illegible] of ground to be [illegible].

Of course, we found upon examination that it is entirely competent for the committee to appropriate directly to make this purchase, but this arrangement enables us to do it without expense to the Government.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I am informed, Mr. Chairman, that there are two committees of this House which have to do with the District of Columbia. One is styled "the legislative committee" and the other "the appropriations committee." Now, under the statement of the gentleman from Minnesota, the chairman of this subcommittee, I am very reluctant to make the point of order as to the matter involved. But if the appropriation committee can straighten streets and enact legislation in regard to a small street of only two or three hundred feet in length I do not know any reason why they can not do so in reference to a street extending from one side of the District of Columbia to the other.

But in view of the smallness of this matter I will say that if the gentleman will agree not to usurp hereafter all the prerogatives of the District of Columbia Committee I will withdraw the point of order; otherwise I will make it.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, of course I am not authorized to make promises which are binding upon anyone except myself. I will simply say to my friend that our Appropriation Committee makes earnest effort not to trench upon the ground of the other committee—the legislative committee of the District of Columbia. Sometimes in making appropriations which legitimately come to us the connection of the appropriation to the improvement or whatever it may be is so close that we feel that the District of Columbia Committee itself would say: "Do it. That is the shortest way." And when that is a clear case we recommend an appropriation of the kind objected to. But nine times out of ten we decline to do it. It is only when a case is so clear that we believe that practically every gentleman on the legislative committee would approve it that we consent to trench upon their proper prerogatives.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Let me ask the gentleman, this does not cost anything?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. This does not cost anything at all. I am very much obliged to my friend from Minnesota for withdrawing his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. W[illegible] tion, the point of order made by the gentleman from Minnesota will be withdrawn. The Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For replacing and repairing sidewalks and curbs around public reservations and municipal buildings, $10,000.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 22, in line 5, after the word "building," insert the words "including not exceeding $5,500 for sidewalks and curb around Lincoln Park."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

[illegible] the Am[illegible] under direction of the C[illegible] [illegible] reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this provision.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose——

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Will the gentleman from Maryland be kind enough to reserve his point of order?

Mr. PEARRE. If the gentleman from Minnesota will let me make the point of order I will consider his request later. I do not want, Mr. Chairman, to make the point of order to the whole section, but to the proviso contained between lines 16 and 25 on page 23.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland makes the point of order against the paragraph extending from line 16 to line 25 on page 23. What is the nature of the point of order?

Mr. PEARRE. It changes existing law on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maryland desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. PEARRE. I do not think it is necessary to discuss it, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota desire to be heard?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I would like the gentleman from Maryland to point out what law it contravenes.

Mr. PEARRE. It does not contravene existing law, but it is a change of existing law, which is a violation of Rule XXI——

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. What is the law?

Mr. PEARRE (continuing). In that it changes an existing law.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. It is new legislation, the gentleman means?

Mr. PEARRE. It is a change of existing law, as all new legislation is. I think the gentleman quibbles about that.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, if I may be heard on this. This is a bridge which goes, and over which a railroad goes toward a section of the country in which I am interested, which, I suppose, may fairly explain my dissenting from the position of my colleague in regard to it. The portion of the paragraph referred to by my colleague would ordinarily be subject to a point of order, not in that it contravenes or changes any law now upon the statute book, but in that it adds a section which has not been law before, and that has always been declared to be new legislation. But, Mr. Chairman, we have had a number of decisions within the last few days, particularly upon the naval bill, to the effect that when a clause or part of a paragraph that would of itself be subject to a point of order has gone in without a point of order being made, anything germane to that is then in order.

Now, the provision for the bridge itself is against both clauses of section 2 of Rule XXI, in that it is an appropriation not authorized by existing law, and in that it changes existing law by making a law not now upon the statute books anywhere. I understand this means a reconstruction, or rather an entire rebuilding of the bridge, and that it does not necessarily follow, nor is it altogether likely that it will be placed over exactly the same portion of the river. It is not, therefore, a public work or object already in progress, but is a legislative proposition in the bill, and passed without a point of order against it. But without considering the early part of the paragraph as to the construction of the bridge, it is clear that down to line 16, page 23, we have legislation, new legislation, in without objection, without a point of order, containing quite minute regulations as to the terms on which the railroad shall go over the bridge. I want to call the attention of the Chair particularly from the bottom of page 22, line 24, down to line 16, page 23, where I say the Chair will find several regulations as to the terms upon which this railroad shall cross the bridge, all of them clearly out of order if a point of order had been made to the whole section. No one will deny that the part of the paragraph against which the point of order has been made is in every respect germane to what precedes.

I think, therefore, Mr. Chairman, it is clear that the part of the paragraph against which the point of order has been made, if not in order originally has been made so by the action of the committee, by practically unanimous consent, in letting these other provisions go in to which the part objected to by my colleague is germane.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I am willing to rest the question on the statement made by the gentleman from Maryland.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand what section the gentleman means has already been adopted.

Mr. MUDD. It has not been formally adopted, Mr. Chairman, but everything to line 16—from the first proviso on page [illegible] down to line 16 on page 23, where the portion of the paragraph to which the point of order now raised begins—while it has not been adopted by any affirmative action of the House, has been gone over, and the gentleman from Maryland specifically stated that he made no point of order as to that. Therefore, that much of this paragraph is before the House, has been discussed, no point of order has been made against it, and anything germane to that is now in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that as far as that is concerned, there has been no discussion on the merits as to this [illegible] of order.

Mr. [illegible] Mr. Chairman, [illegible] make the [illegible]

Mr. [illegible] Mr. Chairman, I think the [illegible]

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think not. It is not authorized by [illegible] too late. The gentleman [illegible]

Mr. [illegible] I would ask the gentleman [illegible] point of order for a moment until I can say a [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the [illegible] discuss the [illegible]

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. [illegible] I think [illegible] I would like to know what the gentleman's point of order is?

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. First, let me ask the gentleman what the present rates are.

Mr. BARTLETT. The present rates are whatever the telephone company makes them.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. What do they make them?

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand that they make them to the departments in the District of Columbia about the sums that I have quoted in this amendment. That is what I understand.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I should like to know what they are, generally, in the city of Washington?

Mr. BARTLETT. The telephone rates in the public departments of the District of Columbia, according to a letter that I have seen this morning addressed to the gentleman who has this bill in charge, are in accordance with the rate fixed by the act of June 30, 1898.

That act provides (paragraph 5):

[illegible] of this act it shall be unlawful for any per- [illegible] in the District of Columbia to [illegible] for the use of a telephone on a [illegible] than two on a [illegible] on a wire, and [illegible] or more on the same wire.

The telephone rates to private individuals are about $78 per annum for a limited service. That limited service permits you to send twelve hundred [illegible] messages and no more, as I see from a contract that I have, and charges 5 cents additional for every message over twelve hundred. Now, I have here a memorandum of the charges paid by the hotel where I board, the Riggs House. [illegible] pay there $[illegible] a year for the mere privilege of having a telephone put in the hotel, and then the hotel is charged a cents a [illegible] for 4,[illegible] messages, and after 4,000 messages that charge is [illegible] cents a message [illegible] that, answering the gentleman's question, it appears that in hotels the charges are $126 per annum. In residences and offices of individuals the company now charges $78 a year for the instrument with a limited service and extra for all messages over a certain number. I have had some little experience with the company. I had a contract for a telephone in an office which I have here in the Bond Building, and they charge me $[illegible] a year for the service, charging me 5 cents extra for every message sent from the office exceeding three per day, as I understand it.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I should like to ask the gentleman, is there any difference between the charge for telephones in offices and private residences?

Mr. BARTLETT. I have never had a residence in Washington except at the hotel, and I do not know. I think there are gentlemen upon this floor who can give their experience as to the charges of this company.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me, I can state that I paid $72 per year for a phone in a residence, for the same kind of service that I get at home for $[illegible] and that I have the privilege of a rebate of $12, provided I do not use the phone for a period of three months. But if I only use it three months, I have got to pay $72 less $12. I think there is an extortion about it that is most unwarrantable and that ought in some way or other to receive the condemnation of this Congress. We ought not to be pillaged in the way that we are by these gentlemen.

Mr. BARTLETT. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman from Iowa, as I generally do in matters not political.

the purpose of offering a substitute for the paragraph which has been stricken out. Is there objection?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, if I can reserve the right to make a point of order upon the substitute I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, certainly; the substitute will be subject to a point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

[illegible] new batteries, and battery supplies, tele- [illegible] and other necessary items, [illegible]

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the amendment which I sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 19 on page 9 add the following:

[illegible] appropriated shall [illegible]

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I reserve a point of order upon that proposition.

Mr. BARTLETT. I should like to know what the gentleman's point of order is?

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. First, let me ask the gentleman what the present rates are.

Mr. BARTLETT. The present rates are whatever the telephone company makes them.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. What do they make them?

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand that they make them to the departments in the District of Columbia about the sums that I have quoted in this amendment. That is what I understand.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I should like to know what they are, generally, in the city of Washington?

Mr. BARTLETT. The telephone rates in the public departments of the District of Columbia, according to a letter that I have seen this morning addressed to the gentleman who has this bill in charge, are in accordance with the rate fixed by the act of June 30, 1898.

That act provides (paragraph 5):

We ought not to be pillaged in the way that we are by these gentlemen.

Mr. BARTLETT. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman from Iowa, as I generally do in matters not political.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say that in the city where I live, a city of about 40,000 inhabitants, I have at my residence on a separate wire a telephone service which, so far as efficiency and promptness are concerned, is far superior to what we are furnished in this city, for $36 a year.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. BARTLETT. Certainly.

Mr. LACEY. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. It is stated here that the rate charged to a private individual in a dwelling house is $72 a year.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. LACEY. There is a statute fixing the rate. What is the amount fixed by the statute?

Mr. BARTLETT. Fifty dollars on a single wire, $40 where there are two on a wire, $30 where there are three on a wire, and $25 where there are four or more on a wire.

Mr. LACEY. Then if I understand the gentleman's proposition it is that so far as the Government is concerned this appropriation bill will be so limited that the Government will not be permitted to pay this company more than the law orders it to accept for that kind of service?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. LACEY. And at the present they are refusing to obey the law as to private individuals as to the amount of the rates.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. LACEY. And it is proposed, so far as the Government is concerned——

Mr. BARTLETT. To limit the amount.

Mr. LACEY (continuing). That it would not pay the money unless it take the amount as fixed by statute as to the rates.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is right.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman know what became of the series of lawsuits that were begun wherein the people, I think, attacked the rates as unlawful or unreasonable or the system as objectionable?

Mr. BARTLETT. I can only give the history of the lawsuits down to 1901, as evidenced by the report of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, which I hold in my hand, in volume 186, United States Reports; but as the results of the investigation of the local court in the District of Columbia report directed to be made by the Supreme Court of the United States I have no information.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. My understanding is that it was finally disposed of out of court, and in some way, but the condition of the people was not improved in any way. That is my recollection of the press reports of the case.

Mr. BARTLETT. I will not undertake to read what the Supreme Court decided in this case, reported in volume [illegible] of each volume, in the case of the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company against Manning.

Congress had in 1898, on the District appropriation bill, passed a law substantially almost in the words which I have copied into this amendment. The act of June 30, 1898, provided what the charges for telephone service in the District of Columbia should be, not only with reference to the services rendered to the Government and the departments in the District of Columbia, but what they should charge to the citizens of the District of Columbia. Now, I have not undertaken to remedy the evil caused by the extortionate and exorbitant charges that are made upon the citizens of this District, because I would be met with a point of order, at least, that it was legislation. If I could, I would on any appropriation bill in the House offer an amendment that would [illegible] the throats of the people of this city, the capital city of [illegible] and [illegible] the gentleman raises the point of order when you undertake to protect the Government from extortion.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How much does the Government pay the telephone company?

Mr. BARTLETT. That is what I am going to state. Mr. Chairman, it is remarkable how this company acts in order that the Government may seem satisfied and that [illegible] of the Government. It [illegible] with [illegible] as the Government is [illegible] the [illegible] 1898, an act which the [illegible] in the court [illegible] constitutional and void; but when it gets beyond the restraining power of the Government's hands it outrages and robs the people of this District.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How much do we allow the company for telephones used by the Government?

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not know the amount. It is $50 apiece per annum for each telephone upon a separate wire, $40 where there are two on a wire, $30 where there are three on a wire, and $25 where there are four or more on a wire. Now, I do not know whether that is carried out in all the Departments of the Government, because I had not made the inquiry as to the other Departments; but the District government office and the Census Office pay that amount.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many machines does the Government hire?

Mr. BARTLETT. I have no idea. According to the letter which I have seen, about $8,000 is paid for the telephones for the District of Columbia—that is, for the public business of the District of Columbia. I understand there is about $800 or more paid in the Census Office. Further than that I have not been able to make inquiry.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I wish to say to the gentleman from Georgia that I simply reserved the point of order. I am heartily in sympathy with the gentleman from Georgia, and I intend to withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT. It is not subject to the point of order. I was satisfied the gentleman would withdraw it. It is simply to have a limitation placed on the expenditure of the money.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman desires to withdraw his point of order?

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Yes, sir.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, in order that I may ask a question of the gentleman in charge of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to withdraw his point of order. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman withdraws it, and it ought to be withdrawn, because there is no reason in the rule why it could be sustained, because it is drawn in accordance with the law as it is now, and therefore it is not a change of existing law. It simply carries out the existing law and limits the expenditure of this money under the terms of the law that is now upon the statute books.

Mr. LACEY. As I understand, this amendment will not——

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. BARTLETT. I desire to say to the committee further they now already charge the government of the District of Columbia the same as provided for by this amendment. It is well for us to see that they shall not exceed it, and that they shall charge no more to the other Departments, and make them obey the law, and for myself I would be willing to put any proper limitation upon this extortionate monopoly in the District of Columbia.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota has the floor. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. LACEY. As I understand the proposition of the gentleman from Georgia it will not change the proposition so far as the District is concerned, because the company is not overcharging the District; they yield to the law as to the District.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. But they are doing it under protest.

Mr. LACEY. But they are doing it under protest. Now, there is a very simple way of getting at this—two ways. One is to repeal their franchise, and another is to grant a franchise to a rival company. This franchise is subject to be amended and repealed at any time by Congress. Why not bring in a bill repealing this franchise for that company which, for the last six or seven years, has not only given the worst service that has ever been given in any city in the United States, but is charging these extortionate prices in defiance of the acts of Congress? Why not bring in a bill repealing their charter?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, in reply to my friend from Iowa, I would say this: That such a thing would be legislation, hence not within the province of the Committee on Appropriations. That is the function of the legislative committee on the District of Columbia. And if I understand the purpose of my friend from Michigan [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH] in raising the point of order at all, it was to indicate that the Committee on the District of Columbia, of which he is the ranking member, has in contemplation some action which will bring this company to terms.

As has been said, Mr. Chairman, the company accepts from the District the terms provided by the law which has been referred to, but it does so under protest. There are forty-three one-party lines at $30, one two-party line at $40, one four-party line at $24, and two extension stations at $21, making an aggregate of $2,377.

I want to add for the further information of the House that for the interoffice work the District has its own telephone system, which is not subject to this company at all. It comes in touch with this company only when it desires to communicate with the citizens outside of the offices.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does not the gentleman think this company, possessing as it does the right to use the streets under various acts of Congress, and these various acts reserving the right to revoke the grant at pleasure, but without compensation—does he not think something ought to be done either to revoke the grant to use the streets that Congress has granted to them with this reservation or make the company reduce its charges and give better service?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, again I reply that that matter belongs to the legislative committee of the District of Columbia. It is only fair to the company, however, to say—and I am not occupying the attitude of a defender of it, because I believe the rates ought to be lower—that the kind of service rendered is the metallic service, which was not installed at the time these rates were fixed. I have examined into the matter, but I understand that is the ground upon which the company claims that these rates fixed before the metallic service was initiated would not be fair and does not apply to this improved kind of service.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I say to the gentleman that in my own town the metallic service has been put in, and instead of increasing the price it has remained the same.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I may say to the gentleman that in my own town I was one of those who started a company which has greatly reduced the cost of telephone service there, and I am in entire sympathy with him in this matter of reducing cost and improving service, but——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman speaks of the District owning a system of its own. How did it get it and what kind of a system is it and is it a competing company?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I am advised by the Engineer Commissioner that it owns the lines and owns the power furnishing the electricity.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What connection has it with this other telephone system?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. It is the property of the District; it does not do any commercial business. It belongs to the District for the uses of the District in connecting one office with another.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The gentleman suggests that he has means of correcting this evil in some other form, yet with the extortion that has been going on so long, with the contempt this company has shown to Congress, unless we get a speedy remedy will not the users of this telephone system perish in the desert before they reach the promised land?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the inquiry of my friend from Indiana, I will say that our appropriation has only to do with the service rendered to the District, and for this service no overcharge has been made. Very properly, this question of high charges to individuals has not been brought to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations. Such matters belong to the legislative committee of the District of Columbia. I understand that that committee has this question under consideration.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. There is a bill before the committee.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. There is a bill before the committee now to consider this whole question, which belongs to them and not to us. We appropriate merely for the telephone service for the District of Columbia, which, as has been said, is being paid for at the rates provided by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers the following amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, this is my handwriting, and I will read it myself. I offer the following amendment:

Add to the paragraph the following "Provided, That the above rates and no more may be charged by the telephone companies doing business in the District of Columbia to their patrons receiving service in private residences, and any violation of the above provision is hereby declared to work a forfeiture of all rights to conduct a telephone business in the District of Columbia."

Mr. BARTLETT. May I suggest to the gentleman that he add the word "offices," as well as private residences?

Mr. HEPBURN. I did not want to do that, because I did not know but that the service for offices might vary, while that for residences is substantially the same.

Mr. Chairman, I believe there ought to be some legislation of this kind. This telephone company has been in defiance of the act of Congress now for nearly six years. There is an act limiting the price that they may charge for service. They completely disregard it, probably because there is no penalty attached to it. There is no provision working a forfeiture of their charter in case of violation, and therefore they have been willing to litigate the matters in the court and to go on with their robbery. I think that this will have a beneficial influence upon them if we can pass this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment as amended.

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended was agreed to. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For medical inspectors: For twelve medical inspectors of public schools, [illegible] Provided, That [illegible] shall be subject to the approval of the [illegible]

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, in lines 21 and 22 on page 38 I move to strike out the words "four of whom shall be of the colored race."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Lines 21 and 22 on page 38 strike out the words "four of whom shall be of the colored race."

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if it is not a fact that this provision has stood in the law several years, and that the board of directors or Commissioners, or whoever may be in charge of the public schools, have been utterly unable to find four men of that race competent to fill the [illegible]

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I will say that this provision for medical inspection has been in the bill only one year. But it is true, Mr. Chairman, that the Commissioners have failed to find the full number of four colored physicians this last year.

Mr. COWHERD. Does the gentleman mean——

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. The difficulty being this: The gentleman will notice that there are a number of requirements, among others that appointees shall have been five years in practice within the District. What has been said does not mean that the Commissioners could not find four colored physicians competent to fill the positions, but they could not find four who had been in practice in the District five years and who would accept appointment.

Mr. COWHERD. How many medical inspectors have been appointed?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. All of the white inspectors.

Mr. COWHERD. There have been eight, then. How many colored?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Three, I think, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. COWHERD. As a matter of fact, then, there is no necessity for twelve [illegible]

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. The law provides for twelve. The simple fact is that there is work left undone by reason of the nonappointment of the other colored physician.

Mr. COWHERD. I want to say frankly that I very much doubt whether there ever was a necessity for twelve medical inspectors to inspect the schools of this city. I think it is more than probable that one-half of that number would have been sufficient to perform the necessary duty in that regard. I think, however, if there be twelve necessary, and we are going to appropriate for twelve, let us say "twelve medical inspectors." Then, if they need four or five or six colored men to inspect the colored schools, let the Commissioners employ them. If they need only one, let the Commissioners employ that one. But it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, it can not be excused on the ground of good legislation and good conscience that we put into this bill that they should have "four of the colored race," when we know by experience that we can not find men in the District of Columbia that are qualified for the place. It looks very much to me as if it might be a sop thrown to these people for political reasons, and I therefore move to strike it out of the bill.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. It does not follow at all that because it was not possible to secure the full number of four last year or this current year, the first year in which the bill is operative, that it will not be possible to find them during the coming year. The difficulty, as I understand it, has been to secure men properly qualified, who have had five years' service or practice within the District. Now, each year removes that difficulty, and it seems to me that the paragraph ought to stand just as it is. There is a large number of colored people in this District, something over 80,000, and I am sure that my friend is too big a man to suggest deliberately that this committee legislated itself by partiality in so important a matter to the colored race for political reasons. That suggestion is unworthy of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COWHERD. I hope the gentleman will understand that I supposed the suggestion comes from some other source.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. But the committee is responsible for what goes into the bill. It is not responsible for suggestions, but is responsible for the bill, and the committee put this into the bill because it felt it should, just as it provides for colored schools, colored teachers, and colored normal schools. The condition is here, and we have tried to face it manfully and fairly and squarely. I think the provision ought to remain just as it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COWHERD) there were—ayes 17, noes 27.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingent expenses, including furniture, books, books of reference, and periodicals, stationery, printing and binding, [illegible] for, [illegible] shall be insured [illegible] by fire.

Mr. SAMUEL W SMITH. Mr. Chairman, beginning with the word "Provided," in line 5, page 40, I would like to reserve the point of order on that proviso, which continues to the end of that particular section, for the purpose of asking the gentleman in charge of the bill what the present provision of the law is about the War Department issuing arms to high school cadets, as to whether that practice is limited by law to the District of Columbia.

Mr. BURKETT. No, it is not.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. No; it is not.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. If such is not the case, then I offer an amendment and move to strike out, in lines 6 and 7, page 40, the words "of the District of Columbia."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 6 and 7, strike out the words "of the District of Columbia."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I understand the purpose of the gentleman in the amendment to strike out the [illegible] as to the [illegible] have all high school [illegible] upon the same footing in this matter.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Yes; that is [illegible]

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Very well; the committee has no objection to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, on page 40, beginning with the word "including," in line 4, what follows, down to and including the word "dollars," in line 5. In other words, to strike out the words "including livery of horse for the superintendent, $35,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3, beginning with the word "including," strike out the words "including livery of horse for the superintendent, $35,000."

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I think I have made a mistake. I do not wish to strike out the words "thirty-five thousand dollars."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "including livery of horse for the superintendent."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say but a few words on that proposition. It seems that there has been considerable discussion heretofore in this body recently as to the propriety of furnishing livery horses for various officers of the District. I am informed that the superintendent here receives a sufficient salary for [illegible] the chairman of the committee can show that it is absolutely necessary that he should have a horse and that the [illegible] to furnish the same. I think the amendment should prevail.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, in answer to my colleague from Minnesota I will say that he will notice that this provision is simply for the livery of the horse. As a matter of fact, the horse and carriage both belong to the superintendent. They are his private property, bought and paid for with his own money. The only thing provided for here is the livery of that horse.

The gentleman will remember that the superintendent of schools has supervision of all the schools within the District of Columbia. The District covers about 70 square miles. The schools are scattered all over the District. A large part of them are away out in the country, where they are not accessible by street-car lines. It is a matter of necessity that he should have this horse and carriage. It is unlike the situation which exists with reference to schools in most cities. It is a matter of necessity for him to go by carriage to the country.

In many cases carriages and the horses with which to haul them have been purchased out of the public fund and maintained in the administration of the affairs of the District. This gentleman from the beginning has owned his own horse and has paid all the expenses of its maintenance except its livery. It did seem to the committee that in simple justice he is entitled to transportation, and it was only fair to allow him the livery for that horse, so useful and necessary in the discharge of his duty.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I would like to have an explanation as to what is the full meaning of the word "livery." What is comprehended by that word?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. The keep of a horse—that is, the feed and the care, like the grooming, etc. It does not include horseshoeing; it does not include the furnishing of blankets: it does not include other similar expenses. I would understand the word "livery" to mean the feeding and the grooming.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Does not the salary of this superintendent warrant him in providing from his own pocket for the feeding and cleaning of his horse?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I presume that in one sense the answer should be "yes," but in another sense it should be "no." The salary of the superintendent of schools in Washington is not so large as the salary of similar officers in most other cities of the same size.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. What is the salary?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Four thousand dollars a year. In many cities of the size of this the superintendent is paid $5,000 or $6,000.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I would suggest, then, that if the salary of this officer is not large enough, it should be raised; but we should not increase his salary under the guise of paying the livery for his horse.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. It is a very small sum.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentlemen in charge of the bill a question in connection with this matter of salaries. I notice that on page 35 of the bill there is a provision that—

In assigning salaries to teachers no discrimination shall be made between male and female teachers employed in the same grades of schools and performing a like class of duties; and it shall not be lawful to pay or assign any salary to be paid, from any of the salaries of teachers herein provided, any portion or percentage thereof for the purpose of adding to salaries of higher or lower grades.

Now, as I understand, that provision is inserted on the theory that it is better to provide specifically for all these salaries and not have the superintendent apportion the amounts; yet I find that in almost the next clause there is a provision—

For kindergarten instruction, $35,000.

An appropriation in a lump sum which allows the superintendent to do exactly what in the previous part of the bill we have forbidden him to do with reference to the other grades. I understand that a smaller sum is paid to the kindergarten principals than to the principals of the primary schools, who have even less to do; that while these have been raised by this bill to a minimum of $500 a year, the kindergarten teachers are much below that. I should be glad if the gentleman from Minnesota would explain this discrepancy.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I do not get the exact point that my friend would like to have me cover in my explanation.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. My question is why these most poorly paid kindergarten teachers should be provided for in a lump sum of $35,000, instead of apportioning it to the different teachers, as is done in all the other classes? I will suggest to the gentleman my suspicion is that the appropriation is put in this form because the superintendent is ashamed to show how very small the sum is that is paid to some of the kindergarten teachers.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, by way of answer to my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] I will say that this kindergarten work is a new part of the school work of the District of Columbia. I think it has been in existence for only five or six years. It began with a very small appropriation, and has gradually been extended. It is in its experimental stage. The question whether we should make specific appropriations of specific salaries, as we do in relation to the other teachers, was raised in the hearings, and those in authority—those who have the direction of school affairs in the District—thought it would be well to go on for at least one year more under this policy, because it enables them to apply this sum with greater flexibility.

The subcommittee could not say exactly how many of these kindergartens there should be, and those in charge of the work were not prepared to make a definite recommendation. The question lies between the number of schools and the salaries for the teachers in those schools. The school authorities have tried to balance these elements. They have tried to extend the system so far as they could without crippling the teaching force by paying too small salaries. On the other hand, they have tried to pay as large salaries as they could without crippling the extension of the service. The pith of the argument is this: It was thought that by giving this lump sum the plan would work out with greater elasticity, and that was the idea that prevailed with the committee. If on further investigation and with larger experience we find it would be better to do in this case as we do with the other teachers under our school system, we shall certainly adopt that method of proceeding, and I may add it is the judgment of the committee that this is what we shall do as soon as we can reach it wisely.

The Clerk read as follows:

For text-books and school supplies for use of pupils of the first eight grades, who at the time are not supplied with the same, to be distributed by the superintendent of public schools under regulations to be made by the board of education of the District of Columbia, and for the necessary expenses of the distribution, distribution, and preservation of said text-books and supplies, $52,500: Provided, That the board of education in the District aforesaid is authorized to make exchanges of such books and other educational publications now on hand as may not be desirable for use.

Mr. OLMSTED. I move to amend by striking out the last word, for the purpose of seeking information. Can the gentleman in charge of the bill state how many books and of what character it is proposed to purchase for this great sum of $52,500?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I will say that in this District we have what is known as the free school-book system; that is, the children in the first eight grades are provided with school books at public expense.

Mr. OLMSTED. Can you state how many pupils there are in those eight grades?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Somewhere from 40,000 to 45,000, as I remember.

Mr. OLMSTED. This provides for the supply of books to those who at the time are not supplied with the same. I assume from that that the most of them are already supplied. Yet this appropriation would, I should say, be sufficient for the purchase of 200,000 books.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Well, each child requires quite a number of books. This fund is to make good the worn-out books and to supply the incoming pupils in the ordinary increase of the schools.

Mr. OLMSTED. The supply, and exchange particularly, of school books is a matter that has given rise to a great deal of controversy and a good deal of scandal in some cities, but if the gentleman states that he has investigated this matter carefully and thinks this is a necessary appropriation, I shall not oppose it.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that we follow the estimates of those in authority having this matter immediately at heart and having the best information obtainable in regard to it.

FREE LECTURES TO THE PEOPLE OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. RIDER. Mr. Chairman, the lectures aim to Americanize the foreigner and to stimulate the American. They substitute recreation that is clean, healthful, and constructive for amusements that are often crass, unwholesome, and destructive. They make for law and order, for knowledge and good reading. They are emphatically an extension of the public school. To express their purpose and character in terms of mathematics, the free lectures are to the adult as the public school is to the child. They "bring culture to the uncultured;" they are both a university for the busy and a workingman's college.

So long as there are ignorant masses in a community, so long should its public system of education provide for them; so long as there are classes eager for guidance along technical lines, so long should boards of education supply such instruction in a form available to the working people; so long as there are half-educated individuals craving a wider culture, so long should the public school supply school-extension courses. Only thus can the individual standard of life be raised and the material interests and cheap distractions be crowded out by intellectual joys, thus overcoming the evil of cities with their good.

The spread of the hunger for knowledge among the people makes the task of adult education yearly more important.

The pioneer in the movement was the city of New York. Sixteen years ago this January, upon the suggestion of Mayor Abram S. Hewitt, the board of education received a small appropriation for lectures, and the first course of free lectures to the people was attempted in connection with the public school system. The first course of lectures to the people was from January, 1889, to April, 1889. There were 186 lectures, and the attendance was 22,149, with an average attendance of 119 adults per lecture.

So encouraging was this experimental short course, both to educators and the public, that it was continued and lengthened and firmly established. Now the course runs each year from October to May, and its statistics are such that Hon. Charles R. Skinner, the official head of the State public school system, spoke of them in May, 1901, as "almost beyond belief, unless we reflect a moment upon the magnitude of this great city."

In that year and the following the statistics contrast with the first half year's course as follows:

	Lectures.	Attendance.
First course, January, 1889, to April, 1889	186	22,149
Thirteenth course, October, 1900, to May, 1901	1,993	553,558
Fourteenth course, October, 1901, to May, 1902	2,243	585,908

In February, 1902, the lecture course was extended to take in all the boroughs of the "greater" city, and the figures seem indeed stupendous.

FOR ALL BOROUGHS.

Course.	Number of lectures.	Attendance.
1901-2	3,172	928,281
1902-3	4,221	1,204,126

With an average attendance for the two years of 288 adults per lecture.

It would be impossible to pass from a contemplation, however brief, of these amazing figures without a word of appreciation of the man who has from the first year, and almost from the first month, systematized this vast movement. The New York supervisor of lectures, Henry M. Leipziger, Ph. D., is a man of frail physique and delicate health, yet so intense is his wise enthusiasm for the spread of learning and culture among the masses that the lectures have developed and increased with a momentum that would suggest to the uninitiated a boundless physical force behind them instead of the intellectual discipline and the spiritual impulse to which alone they have been subjected.

More and more deeply has the movement gained the respect of all classes in the community, and it is perhaps the only branch of the city school system that no one has wanted to "reform."

It is a remarkable tribute to the work of the system of free lectures under the auspices of the board of education that they form the single feature which has not only escaped censure, but received unanimous approval. Our public schools are being steadily subjected to a fire of criticism, largely undeserved; but that the free-lecture movement for working men and working women should arouse only warm admiration indicates that its excellence is genuine.

In the forty-third annual report of the trustees of Cooper Union—that great monument to the munificence of a whole family to popular scientific education—appeared these words about the transfer of its free-lecture system to the board of education:

An arrangement was * * * made with the department of public education for carrying on the work in Cooper Union. This work has since grown to great proportions, and courses of lectures given in every part of the city and many of the public schools. There is no part of our educational system more valuable or more effective, and the success of the board of education in reaching the masses of the people through this instrumentality is a subject of general congratulation.

After a sufficiently wide interest had been awakened by the early free-lecture courses, a successful attempt was made in New York to unify some of the lectures into connected systematic sets of three and five, and so on, with a consistent educational purpose in view. The lecturer made a more or less elaborate syllabus and bibliography of his proposed work, and desk libraries of reference books were established on his platform.

Six lectures on English romantic poets of the early nineteenth century.

Six lectures on modern methods and instruments and the starry heavens.

Eight lectures on heat as a mode of motion.

Six lectures on English writers of the present era.

Six lectures on nineteenth century literature, the greater English novelists.

Many evidences of serious reading in connection with the lectures have been given, and many copies of scientific books were purchased by auditors to supplement the teaching of the lecturer.

Noticeable has been the increase in culture on the part of audiences where lectures have been continuously given.

The courses of lectures at some centers were arranged almost like a college course. At one center fifty lectures on history and literature were given. At another, for the past four years on each Saturday night, a lecture on some subject in natural science has been given. In the hall of the board of education subjects relating to education were the chief themes.

Letters written by many auditors at the lectures indicate that they have been regular attendants at these courses for several years. This continuity of interest, combined with the systematic arrangement of the lectures, makes it possible to make these courses of lectures a peoples university in the real sense, affording opportunity to the toiler to acquire after a series of years the elements of a broad, general education from the best teachers. (Annual report, 1901-2.)

Since the success and practicability and economy of these free lectures have so royally proved themselves in New York the public school systems of Cleveland, Boston, and Yonkers have adopted the same plan. Their statistics are not before me, but I have no reason to believe that a perusal of them would result less favorably to their further adoption than the experience in New York, which caused these cities to adopt similar methods of adult instruction.

In closing his report on the free lectures of 1901-2 Doctor Leipziger says:

The movement for adult education is just in its infancy, and judging by the results of the past twelve years in our city and the many inquiries from all parts of our land it would not seem improbable that ten years from now every great city in this Union will make provision for adult education. * * * We are beginning to recognize more generally that education does not belong to either sex or to any particular period of life, for in many ways the mature man or woman is better able to use educational opportunity than he was in childhood.

Our imperial city is to be congratulated on being the pioneer of this genuine movement toward the attainment of America's educational ideal.

The number of the public schools proving too small for the demand of the people for free lectures, many religious and educational institutions in yearly increasing numbers put their halls at the disposal, rent free, of the board of education's lectures.

From the libraries, and from well-known preachers of Catholic, Protestant, and Hebrew denominations, from the social settlement, and from the American Museum of National History come words of no faint praise for the lecture system as "a most valuable extension of the educational machinery of the city" and for "its effect of stimulating the higher and spiritual aspirations above and beyond the material occupations and ambitions which are so engrossing to the most of the people."

HOW ORGANIZED.

In pursuance of the idea of making the lecture educational in the highest sense and conducive to mental health and serious reading the board of education in New York appoints a committee on lectures and libraries, to whom the supervisor reports, and upon whose advice and cooperation he can reply.

The expenses of the work are provided for in the regular school budget.

The city authorities have shown their interest in the movement by constantly increased appropriations.

The form and matter of printing, as well as the lecture courses proper, are at the supervisor's discretion. This official must be as much sociologist as pedagogue and be able to analyze the community into its various elements.

Thus, in New York, among the largest colonies of foreigners are the Italian, the French, and the Hebrew congeners. Therefore circulars must be printed in Italian, in French, in Russian, and Hebrew, as well as in several other tongues.

Attention is called to the gay coloring of the Italian leaflet, which is also, in concession to the superior politeness of the foreigner, couched in terms of an invitation, and not distributed as a bare announcement of a date and subject. The Italians are "cordially invited;" and the fact that the entertainment is free is boldly proclaimed to the victims of the padrone. Then a wise concession to the Italian love of music is shown in the combination of a programme of song with a hygienic lecture on "Preventive Measures v. Consumption."

Thus the characteristics of each nationality are studied, that the individuals may more readily be reached and helped in the direction they desire. Above all, no class of people, however far removed from our American standard of citizenship, is ever browbeaten or affronted by printed or spoken word. The public lectures serve the people, and in turn they, the people, develop into a better understanding of the obligations of good citizenship.

In 1902-3 among the subjects given in Italian before audiences largely composed of Italians were the following:

The United States.

The American Citizen.

The Constitution of America.

The Life of George Washington.
Why We Come to America and Why We Stay Here.
Protective Measures v. Contemporism.
Florence.
Ancient Rome.
An Evening in Venice, etc.

Other lecture courses were given in French and Hebrew, but the vast majority were given in English.

Besides the circulars in a foreign tongue, attention is publicly called to the lectures in other ways.

Large placards are printed and placed prominently in store windows.

On the evening of the lecture transparencies are put over the lamps outside the schoolhouse or hall or on the nearest lamppost.

The newspapers each week during the season give a prominent place to a list of the dates, subjects, speakers, and local centers.

But, chief means of all, to each pupil of school child are given lectures "bulletins" for distribution at home. These give a full presentation of the lectures which will begin at some one public school center, and each child receives the bulletin belonging to her school. Thus the parents understand that the lectures, although meant for them, are in some way connected with the public school system. And they are glad to avail themselves of the opportunity so presented. They hear so much from the little one's school "saluting the flag" and "being a good American," that they are half jealous of the school, and very anxious to penetrate it for themselves; and so, wooed and invited in various ways, they find themselves one day in the Classroom of some school and have made their first step toward Americanization. If they are foreigners, toward a deepening and broadening of their intellectual life, in any case.

If the schools become the lecture center, then—

[illegible] school would be uplifted by their environment and [illegible] ing to become the center of [illegible] (Doctor Leipziger's speech at [illegible]

In an article in Leslie's Weekly, January 29, 1903, just about a year ago, the writer, L. A. Maynard, names his article "How to Educate the Masses—The Free Lecture System in New York's Public Schools," and he thus sums up:

[illegible]

It is well [illegible] to recall the sociological conditions in New York [illegible] these lectures [illegible] in the District of Columbia.

[illegible] great numbers of [illegible] live in these numerous tall tenements known popularly and [illegible] as "[illegible]" and "[illegible]." The [illegible] results in a lack of privacy which [illegible] and social [illegible]. Then, the narrow streets make each house [illegible] in which night after night the same [illegible]. Thirdly, few workshops and fewer offices close before 6 o'clock, so that the toiler is more tired than here. Finally, owing to the peculiar shape of Manhattan Island, people [illegible] live far from their work and undergo more or less [illegible] trips to their homes.

Fifthly, inadequate bridge and transit facilities render the tedious journey home one long not only in distance, but in duration of time. It is there often 7 p. m. to 7.30 p. m. before the toiler reaches home. The lectures begin at 8 o'clock promptly and are often crowded before the doors are closed, so that the workman runs the risk of standing.

Moreover, cheap amusements—not all of them pernicious—are far more numerous in New York than in the District; and yet, despite these and many other distracting social elements which might be enumerated, so great is the proven desire for the instructive recreation of these free lectures that out of a population of nearly three and a half millions in 1900, the attendance for the session of 1900-1901 represented nearly three-quarters of a million (715,906), or considerably over one-quarter of the population enumerated by the census of 1900.

The fact that many of the auditors reappear in these statistics may be offset by the number of those in the census physically unable to attend through infirmities of age, illness, and so on, so that the proportion remains approximately true of over one-quarter of the entire population of the city.

We see the great aggregates of figures of attendance: but in this vast multitude, what of the individual response to the opportunities these lecture courses present?

Dipping at random into the official reports of the free lectures for 1901-2 and 1902-3, we hear the individuals answer in the following extracts from letters received by the supervisor from auditors:

The writer of the first letter from which I shall quote was a listener who had attended forty lectures and who was invited to write as follows:

A busy and often very tired woman, unable to spare much time or sight for reading, gives thanks for the pleasure and [illegible] I have enjoyed [illegible] as many feel [illegible] I am not [illegible] as many feel [illegible]

Another writes:

I have been going to school all over again.

A married woman with three children writes, with unconscious pathos and courage:

I shall try my best to pass the examination (in first aid to the injured course, although I am very [illegible] for the [illegible] tion of typhoid fever a year ago and of remittent fever last fall. If I fail I [illegible] I [illegible] stays with them Thursday evenings to [illegible]

Another:

I know a little now, and if I want to know more the lectures have pointed me the way.

Another:

The lectures are a boon to us mothers. They keep us in touch with one's [illegible]

[illegible]

Three months ago I came from Turkey to New York; since then I attended [illegible] the lectures which take place at the National Museum of History; [illegible] under.

Here is another:

[illegible] which I am very thankful to the board of education.

[illegible]

I [illegible] forward to this entertainment [illegible] week.

A [illegible]

Still another:

[illegible] and the [illegible] for more [illegible]

This [illegible] which I manage to take [illegible] great benefit to me, and I thank everyone who has had anything to do with them.

That these lectures afford stimulation for the mentally inert, [illegible] for the [illegible] can doubt after a perusal of these letters and that the people are grateful and appreciative of the new privileges granted the spontaneity of the expression amply demonstrates.

For a true educator in a democracy no more grateful task can well be outlined than the inauguration of a system of adult instruction at once so wholly [illegible], so intellectually stimulating, and so thankfully accepted.

Judging from the [illegible] in these letters from the people, every community must be [illegible] for this precious educational seed to fall upon.

That the District of Columbia would be an excellent field is shown by the fact that Superintendent Stuart has already had calls made upon him for lecturers, the last one being from the Citizens' Association of [illegible], where the best people, through their [illegible], have preferred this request, giving the board of education an opportunity for extending and intensifying the righteous influence of the school system, which it were a thousand pities to disregard.

SPECIAL NEED IN WASHINGTON.

To the Italians.—The District Italians live in temporary shacks, many of them within sight of this Capitol. What sort of citizens are they going to be of a country in whose very capital they are allowed to squat and harbor like neglected birds of the air?

Many of them are here without family ties, and hence are all the more a possible element of social disorder, unless immediately they have normal, wholesome, attractive recreation and instruction. The first course advocated is a series of free lectures in Italian on hygiene and sanitation, and on the history and laws of our country.

In an educational club—the City History Club of New York—we had this experience with a rugged little Italian boy in an industrial school. So perfectly had we succeeded in enthusing him with American ideas that when we told him about the French and Indian wars one day he asked quite naturally, "And what side were we on?" That is the spirit to imbue our Italian neighbors with, right here and now.

Washington can not shake off its responsibility by saying: "The Italians are only a temporary factor in our population." All the more is it necessary to inculcate a feeling of social responsibility in this foreign colony, here this year and in Boston next year or St. Louis, or any other of our American communities, for incalculable is the harm to our own boys and girls that the neglected stranger within our gates will work us unless his artistic and fiercely beauty loving instincts are recognized and so developed that along the lines of his social virtues he is led to the realization of our national ideals of an average American citizen, as a cleanly, quiet man of self-control, intelligently striving after self-culture.

To the colored population.—I need not go into details here; what we did not realize, that great social educator and quickener, Jacob A. Riis, told all who had ears to hear. The best elements among the colored people will welcome these lectures for themselves and for their less gifted brethren. The board of education can help along the solution of the colored problem by extending the public school to take in the negro adult, offering free lectures near those congested districts in which the descendants of your old faithful colored mammies and uncles uncomplainingly work out an unhealthful existence, which would be miserable indeed were it not for their inborn sunniness and patience and laissez faire.

To the Chinese.—These people, industrious and law-abiding, are yet not cared for intellectually as they should be in the capital of our great land. Their restaurants are patronized as a "fad," but their eager minds are left to the chance pabulum of commercial relations.

To the working man and woman.—Not only for recreation for the turbulent, not only for Americanizing the foreigner, but to increase the efficiency of the Washington man and woman, these lectures are needed.

Washington is, happily enough, not an industrial center; there are few great shops and factories where the working forces can learn much beyond the rudiments of their trade. The need for efficient workingmen throughout the country was never more pronounced than to-day. These workingmen and working women need this public school extension work, need these free lectures to the people.

For example, the series of lectures on electricity in New York were followed by "Men engaged in callings where a knowledge of electricity would prove of great value." Increased intelligence and enthusiasm in the workingmen resulted.

SPECIAL FACILITIES IN WASHINGTON.

With the Congressional Library reading room free to all and the Carnegie Library fast increasing its stock of books, a marked decrease in the consumption of mediocre novels and a marked rise in the consumption of serious works of literature and science may confidently be looked for. If this were the only result, the free lectures to the people would amply justify their existence.

The early closing of the Departments and most business works; the several institutions of learning within the capital's limits upon whose members or faculties the supervisor could draw; the great national departments, with their earnest and thorough investigations in every realm of the natural sciences; the world-famous collections in the Smithsonian Institute and the Corcoran Art Gallery, with both of which institutions we should endeavor to cooperate; a fine public school system, which already has the confidence of Congress and of all the residents of the District, so that any extension of the public school in the free lectures to the people would be readily received with docile and expectant enthusiasm. These, Mr. Secretary, are the elements which loom large for success on the horizon line of our suggested voyage into new seas of endeavor, seas that are not wholly uncharted, since the gallant sister ships of New York, Yonkers, Cleveland, and others, have sailed over them successfully, bringing back each year large cargoes of encouragement, great log books writ full of lands of ignorance discovered, claimed, and named with names of knowledge and civilization, of culture and citizenship.

The Clerk read as follows:

For extending the telephone system to the public school buildings, including the cost of the necessary wire, cable, hooks, crossarms, brackets, conduit connections, manholes, telephone instruments, extra labor, and other necessary items, to be expended under the electrical department, $5,000.

Mr. MUDD. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making an inquiry. I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if he considers that this provision is in such form that the limitation heretofore fixed in the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia as to telephone rates will apply to it? I am not sure on that point myself. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] was to page 29, under the head of "Electrical department," and is to the following effect:

Provided, however, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be used for the payment to any person, [illegible] company in the District of Columbia for the hire of or use of any telephone or for any telephone service, except at the following rates, etc.

Now, the question is, would not that be held to apply only to the rate for telephones under the electrical department provided for in the paragraph to which this amendment was offered?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. My own judgment would be that the limitation placed upon the expenditure of money for telephone service would apply to any appropriation for the service provided in this bill, and therefore would apply to this paragraph.

Mr. MUDD. The amendment is as follows:

Amend by adding at the end of line 19, page 29—

Which relates to telephone service, under the head of "electrical department"—

"No part of the money herein appropriated"—

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. That is, appropriated in this bill.

Mr. MUDD. But is not this $5,000 here in addition to and outside of the money appropriated in the paragraph to which that amendment was passed?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. If the word had been "hereby" appropriated I think the answer to the gentleman's question would have been yes, but the word is "herein," that is, in this bill anywhere.

Mr. MUDD. I think it would apply simply to that paragraph.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I should say in the bill.

Mr. MUDD. I submit the following amendment out of abundant caution. It is very brief.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 5, page 41, the following:

"Provided, That the money herein appropriated shall be subject to the same limitations as to telephone rates as heretofore provided under the electrical department."

Mr. MUDD. That simply reapplies the provisions of the amendment passed already, if it be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Minnesota in charge of the bill whether it is not proposed in this paragraph that the Government shall pay the cost of the wires, cables, and so forth, that ought to be paid for and ordinarily are paid for by the telephone company? In all the cities where I have had any knowledge of the telephone system, the telephone companies themselves have been very glad to furnish the wires and establish the connections, and do everything of that kind, charging a rental for the telephone when it is established in the building. This seems to provide that the Government is to do all the work, and pay all the expenses, and pay rental in addition.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I am not exactly clear on this, but I think upon second thought, upon rereading it, that this refers to an extension of the system owned by the District. I do not know whether the gentleman was in when I explained that the District itself has a telephone system connected with its fire service, and so forth, an interoffice service which is not dependent upon the telephone company at all. Now, I am not absolutely sure, but I am inclined to think from the reading of that——

Mr. OLMSTED. Is that service not operated from the company's exchange?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. It has its own power and exchange.

Mr. OLMSTED. And they do not charge for the use of the instruments for the District service?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. It is a rival company, in fact, providing only service for the District, and the purpose of this is to extend it to the school stations and the fire stations and the police stations, etc., that account some distance connecting them.

Mr. OLMSTED. Your understanding is that the telephone company pays nothing out of this appropriation?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I so understand.

The Clerk read as follows:

FOR METROPOLITAN POLICE.

[illegible] and assistant superintendent, [illegible] each; 26 drivers, at $[illegible] each; in all, $[illegible].

Mr. PERKINS. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I decline to agree to compress the action of the committee, but I would like to make some inquiry with reference to the question of the police department of the city of Washington. Now, it may be desirable, Mr. Chairman, that the city should be beautified and enlarged in a manner that fits the capital of the country, and at a larger ratio of expenditure in most cases, but I see no reason why the police department of the city of Washington should cost out of all proportion to the police departments in many other cities.

I have in my hand the expense account of the police department of the city of Washington. I see the cost per head is about $1.30. We have a well-regulated city, we have a sufficient police force. The law is enforced there as well as it is here. And it seems strange that the cost of the police department as measured by the cost per head in the city of Washington should be more than [illegible] per head. Now, Mr. Chairman, the expenses of the police in the city of Washington should not materially differ per head of population from the expenses of police in any other large city. Does the chairman know of any reason why the cost of police in the city of Washington is that makes the expenses here larger than they would be in other American cities?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Does the gentleman want me to answer his last question?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. There are two reasons. Mr. Chairman, why the police force in this city costs more than a similar force in a city of equal population. In the first place, this is the seat of the National Government.

Mr. PERKINS. Why does that [illegible] the criminal class.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I think it does. It is the place that [illegible] and the United States [illegible] of population. It is a fact, gentlemen may smile or frown.

Mr. PERKINS. [illegible]

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. [illegible] It is a fact that many persons from all [illegible] come here to transact business with the Government, [illegible] into wrong paths and require the services of the police.

Again, the White House requires quite a large assignment of police. The authorities of the Department of Agriculture have special protection. Again, there are several institutions [illegible] Because this is the great capital city, people come here to attend conventions, etc. Large conventions bring a large number of people that need special watching. These things are considered when taken together to make up a force that requires a larger police force than a city of a [illegible] size elsewhere would require.

Mr. PERKINS. Can the gentleman inform us what difference there is between the average wages of the police of this city and other cities? Are they more highly paid?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. No; I think not, Mr. Chairman. It is possible that they are [illegible] in some other cities receiving smaller salaries than those paid here, but the salaries here are, I think, under rather than over the average.

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman does not think there is any——

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. As a matter of fact, if the gentleman will permit me to go further in my answer to his inquiry, we provided in last year's bill for forty policemen of a grade lower than the two grades provided for in this bill. We authorized the Commissioners to enlarge the force by forty policemen at $80 per month, instead of $75, which is the lowest grade as now fixed. As a matter of fact, the Commissioners simply could not get the men. Therefore we raised the minimum rate from $80 to $75 a month.

We must have the men. Experience has shown that we can not get them unless we pay them at least the same that are provided for in this bill.

Mr. PERKINS. Has experience shown, in the opinion of the gentleman, that the number of men who appear on the list are actually required to keep order in the city of Washington?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I forgot to mention another reason why we need an especially large number of policemen, and that is the [illegible] to the national [illegible]. This [illegible] about [illegible] miles. Out in the suburbs here are many [illegible] of a few hundred people each, scattered all over the District. The force [illegible] should be provided.

These people are entitled to police protection. The judgment of the Commissioners is that we keep this number down to the minimum of safety, and that is the judgment of the committee also.

Mr. PERKINS. And that is the judgment of the committee also?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Yes, sir.

The Clerk read as follows:

HEALTH DEPARTMENT.

For health officer, $[illegible]; health inspector and deputy health officer, $[illegible] each; 23 food inspectors, at $[illegible] each; in all, $[illegible].

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I know, of course, no one pays very much attention to anything that may be said about a District of Columbia appropriation bill; but it seems to me that when we provide, as we have in this bill, for thirty-seven people in the health department at an expense of $[illegible], it is time some little attention was being paid to the subject matter.

Now, I want to call your attention to the fact that we start out in this item with thirteen sanitary and food inspectors, and then, after providing for various other kinds of inspectors under different [illegible], we get down again to seven sanitary and food [illegible] and food inspectors. There is an inspector in addition to that of marine products, and here are [illegible] sanitary inspectors. I do not know how many other [illegible] there are in all, but there are thirty-seven people provided for in this appropriation.

I venture to say, Mr. Chairman, that in an average city of this size [illegible] that sanitary would be [illegible] to the entire [illegible] of this House. In the city where I live, long ago, where I had [illegible] anything about this service, five men in the entire [illegible].

Mr. CLARK. How many horse doctors do they have here?

Mr. COWHERD. Three.

Mr. CLARK. How many horses have they got?

Mr. COWHERD. I believe they are not to inspect the city horses.

Mr. CLARK. Well, what do they inspect?

Mr. COWHERD. I suppose the [illegible] horses or the city and inspect the cows that give the milk sold in the city. Am I right?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Yes; only they do a great deal [illegible].

Mr. CLARK. [illegible] of course [illegible] law or [illegible].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. COWHERD. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK. I beg the gentleman's pardon. Is not that true?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, there is a whole lot of the District of Columbia outside of the city limits. The gentleman knows, of course, that the city limits of Washington include only a very small part of the District of Columbia. And, Mr. Chairman, go over into Virginia and Maryland and inspect the places from which the milk comes.

Mr. COWHERD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have read that statement in the hearings—that these inspectors go into Virginia, Maryland, etc.—and I suppose they probably do cover a small portion of territory outside of the District. But from how far do they ship milk into the District of Columbia? The gentleman says a large part of the District is outside the city. That is true, and a part is given up to dairy and gardening purposes. We certainly are not going to send inspectors out all over the United States because they send food products into the District of Columbia, and [illegible] that the inspectors inspect outside of the District [illegible] dairy.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to remind you right here of the fact that my [illegible] [Mr. CLARK], a few days ago, when we had [illegible] up here, called the attention of the House to the [illegible] that became a law we would find hundreds and [illegible] of inspectors go on the pay rolls of the United States under some pretext or other for the inspection of foods.

I remember when we passed the pure-food law here for the District of Columbia. The matter was discussed then in committee whether it would require more inspectors, and we were [illegible] then that it would not, that it would cause practically no addition to the force, or at least a very small one. But here we find to-day thirty-seven inspectors, and the District authorities [illegible] that number can not begin to do the business, and they [illegible].

We find here a [illegible] and a deputy [illegible] further, and you find a [illegible] and deputy [illegible] health officer at [illegible], a clerk at $1,400, four [illegible] at a sum not to exceed [illegible] so I think that two or three or four are [illegible] ly not all the time; in a [illegible] $80,000 for [illegible] one. That does not include any hospital [illegible] a very small sum. The total appropriation for the [illegible] in all to $89,880, while in the ordinary city where you find an appropriation of [illegible] you will find that it cares for the entire hospital [illegible].

[illegible] to strike out the seven sanitary [illegible] and food inspectors [illegible] 23 of this bill; or if [illegible] that it had better come out of the first thirteen. I will [illegible] it out there. It does seem to me, also, that six [illegible] entirely unnecessary to run the health department [illegible] all the other clerks we have in all the other [illegible] District of Columbia. Therefore I move first to strike out the word "thirteen," in line 7, and insert in place thereof the word "six."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

[illegible] the word "thirteen" and insert the word "six," so that it will read "six sanitary food inspectors."

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri surely does not expect or desire that amendment to prevail. This [illegible] conditions prescribed by law that certain things shall be done for the protection of the health of the people of this District. If it were not done, he would be one of the first to rise and query why we were not attending to the business that the law imposes upon us.

Mr. COWHERD. Does the gentleman from Minnesota say that thirty-seven men are needed in the health department, as provided in this bill? Has he investigated it sufficiently to say that all of these men are needed?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. To answer the gentleman specifically, I will say that I do think that every one is required, or else I should not have been a party to putting them in the bill. As a matter of fact, a good argument was made for the addition of seven more, making a total of forty-four. We did not believe the argument [illegible] and therefore we denied it.

We believe that every person provided for in this paragraph is needed for the protection of the health of the people of this District, and I trust that the committee will vote down the proposed amendment.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. How many of these inspectors are sanitary and how many food inspectors? The bill says so many sanitary and food inspectors.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I think the question is impossible to answer. The men are competent perhaps to act in either line and are used in the [illegible].

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not mean to say that a man who is competent to inspect sanitary matters is a proper man to inspect the quality of food?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. There are a few specialists.

Mr. MANN. And that a man who is fit to test the quality of food would know of anything that would be of value to him in testing plumbing?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I think the expression "sanitary and food inspectors" is used so that the department may operate with greater elasticity.

Mr. MANN. That is what I supposed, and that is the reason I asked how many were sanitary and how many food inspectors. How many are food inspectors now?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. The bill says thirteen.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; it does not say thirteen food inspectors.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. It says thirteen sanitary and food inspectors.

Mr. MANN. But how many are food inspectors?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I have just said to the gentleman that we can not segregate the item.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota says that I do not expect my amendment to prevail. If he means that I do not expect it because of the weak and small influence that I can bring to bear against the power of this great committee, he is speaking correctly and by the card. If he means that I do not think it ought to prevail, I want to assure the gentleman that he is very much mistaken. Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has well asked how many of these men are sanitary inspectors and how many are food inspectors. Mr. Chairman, as I remember it, we have just passed a law for food inspection in the District of Columbia. Every one of those men is or ought to be under the law a sanitary inspector of the District.

The men that inspect the alleys and report upon them, the men that pass upon the conditions of the streets and things of that kind are not [illegible] and should be called upon for that work; and the sanitary inspector is the man under the health department who is sent to inspect, for instance, the plumbing or the conditions of the outhouses, and so forth. As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has well said, he is not for so many food inspectors, and yet here are not [illegible] men, as the gentleman suggests, but twenty men provided in this bill, thirteen in one place and seven in another, all with this title of sanitary and food inspector.

But that is not all. That does not begin to cover the food inspection. In addition to these there is one sanitary and food inspector to [illegible]. Here is another sanitary and food inspector to inspect. I suppose, the dairies [illegible] is provided that he shall be a veterinary surgeon. There is another sanitary and food inspector to inspect marine products. There are four clerks provided for, and two of them [illegible] and food inspectors if needed, and so on down [illegible].

It is not a question of thirteen sanitary and food inspectors, even twenty, but, as I make it out, twenty four [illegible] are provided in the bill for the inspection of food products. I submit if my amendment prevails and the seven men are stricken out, leaving six sanitary and food inspectors at this point and the seven provided further on in addition to the special ones named in the bill, there will still be an ample force.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I demand a division, Mr. Chairman.

The House divided; and during the division Mr. BURKETT rose.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. Chairman, is this open to debate?

The CHAIRMAN. No; not while the House is dividing.

Mr. BURKETT. I thought the question was open to debate until the vote is announced.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had announced the vote, and now we are verifying the vote by a rising vote. The yeas are 31 and the nays 26, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, it is now 5 minutes after 5, and I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, it will be noted that tellers are demanded. I give notice that I will demand tellers on this.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman can not move to rise and then demand tellers afterwards.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that if the gentleman demands tellers——

Mr. MANN. He should demand them now.

The CHAIRMAN. He should demand them now.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Can I not give notice that I will demand them in the morning?

Mr. MANN. Oh, no. I ask for an announcement of the result of the vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already announced the vote as 31 ayes and 26 noes. If tellers are demanded——

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. And pending that, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. MANN. The committee can not rise while a vote is being taken. If the gentleman demands tellers, he must demand them now.

Mr. BURKETT. I have demanded tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. As many as are in favor of having tellers will rise.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order at this time. Sixteen gentlemen rising, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LAWRENCE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12833, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MAP OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I wish to call up the report I made yesterday from the Committee on Printing, which was referred to by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON]. It is the joint resolution (S. R. 56) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to print an extra edition of the map of the United States for 1903, and making the appropriation for moneys made in the act of April 15, 1904, and of March 3, 1901, available for that purpose. I ask for its present consideration. I will state that it is not objectionable to the Senator from Colorado now.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been read.

Mr. PATTERSON. The map I had in mind is not in shape for printing. The plates are not made. It is a map prepared by the Geological Survey. It is a most excellent map; better than any we have yet had printed, and I hope the Committee on Printing will look into it and, if possible, let us have some copies of that map.

So far as the pending joint resolution is concerned, I think it ought to be passed.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following amendments, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed:

An amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for the improvement and protection of the harbor and river front of the District of Columbia, the enforcement of laws and regulations, construction and maintenance of wharves and buildings, and for other necessary items and services, from $3,000 to $5,000;

An amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for the Washington Home for Incurables from $2,000 to $4,000; and

An amendment proposing to increase the salary of the assistant surveyor of the District of Columbia from $1,800 to $2,500.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment providing that the sum of $40,000 appropriated in the fortifications appropriation bill, approved March 3, 1903, to increase the price of the metal work of the Emery gun carriage, shall be due and paid to E. H. Emery on the passage of the fortifications appropriation bill, to enable him to proceed promptly in the work of building his 12-inch disappearing gun carriage, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the fortifications appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for the Washington Home for Incurables from $2,000 to $4,000, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SCOTT submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 to aid in the reconstruction and completion of the building of the National Homeopathic Hospital, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

CANAL BETWEEN ST. JONES AND LITTLE RIVERS, DELAWARE.

Mr. ALLEE submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause an examination and survey to be made from the St. Jones River, at Dover, Del., to a point on Little River, and thence to Delaware Bay, for the purpose of determining the advisability and cost of constructing a canal between the said rivers, and the deepening and widening of Little River, so as to provide a channel suitable for the needs of commerce from Dover, Del., to Delaware Bay.

INSPECTION OF MEAT, ETC.

Mr. STEWART submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia report to the Senate what inspection is made of meat, poultry, game, fish, and oysters imported into the District of Columbia in cold storage or refrigerator cars, giving details of when, where, and the manner of such inspection.

PROPOSED ALASKAN LEGISLATION.

Mr. HALE and Mr. BEVERIDGE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Indiana has a statement to make.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, by unanimous consent today was to be given to Alaskan legislation, not to interfere with appropriation bills. I understand that the Senator from Maine desires to call up the naval appropriation bill. That, therefore, displaces the Alaskan legislation for this day.

I therefore ask unanimous consent, on account of the imperative necessity for these Alaskan bills, which will not be objected to, that immediately on the conclusion of the bill which the Senator from Maine will now present the Senate may proceed to the consideration of Alaskan legislation, not to interfere with appropriation bills——

Mr. KEAN. Or the unfinished business.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. As part of my request, to continue until disposed of, not to interfere with appropriation bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], in whose charge is the unfinished business, is not present in the Chamber.

Mr. HALE. I was going to suggest to the Senator from Indiana, in the absence of the Senator from Massachusetts, that that Senator would want nothing done which would displace his bill, which is the unfinished business. The Senator can later, when he has conferred with the Senator from Massachusetts, make his request.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to make a suggestion.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then I will withdraw my request for unanimous consent for the present, and will renew it after I have conferred with the Senator from Massachusetts, according to the suggestion of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. STEWART. It might be well also to confer with the Senator from Nevada. The consideration of the milk bill was pretty much terminated yesterday, and I want to get a vote on it at some time. I do not want to have that bill excluded by a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I shall be very much pleased to confer with the Senator from Nevada.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 12220) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with amendments.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the committee amendments be acted upon as they are reached.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments shall first receive consideration. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read the bill.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I do not observe that there is a report from the Committee on Naval Affairs upon this bill, as there is in another branch, where, I am told, it is the rule or custom to state in a report the general provisions of the bill.

I ask the Senator from Maine whether it would be entirely convenient for him at this stage to give the Senate an idea what the bill contains and what is proposed to be done with the amounts involved in the direct appropriation, as well as the obligations to be incurred if the provisions of the bill become law.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the report of the committee to which the Senator refers is very brief. It states the amount of estimates for the next fiscal year covered by this bill at $100,866,000 in all. The House sent to the Senate a bill appropriating $96,674,000. The Senate committee has not interfered much with the bill as passed by the House and has added to the House items of $96,674,000 only $327,000. So the bill as reported to the Senate carries $97,001,738.94, the estimates having been cut down about $5,000,000.

As to the general question suggested by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], I have prepared some figures, and I think it proper, as the Senator has asked, that I state the reasons for the bill and the purposes to which the money is to be applied and that I should lay the tables before the Senate. My general practice, as Senators know, has been to make no speeches upon appropriation bills, but only to answer questions.

I think it is well, Mr. President, while we are reporting a bill covering a very large increase, the largest increase ever allowed in any one year excepting last year, that the country and the Senate should realize what our situation is as to the Navy, so that all may know just where we stand as to our naval establishment, in which the Senate and the country have a great pride and a great interest.

I do not think it has been appreciated that while we are going on with a large programme, and do not propose this year to change it, a great deal has been done heretofore for the Navy.

I have here a list of the appropriations which have been made and expended up to the present time, including the appropriations for this year, which, of course, have not been expended. I begin in 1883, for that is the beginning of the present United States Navy.

Total amounts of naval appropriation acts for each year from act of March 3, 1883, to and including act of 1904.

1883	$14,829,976.80	1894	$22,104,061.28
1884	15,894,464.23	1895	25,367,196.72
1885	14,986,412.99	1896	29,406,245.41
1886	15,034,867.95	1897	30,542,680.95
1887	16,489,906.30	1898	33,003,234.19
1888	25,387,448.19	1899	56,088,387.68
1889	19,342,885.35	1900	48,089,924.58
1890	21,692,760.27	1901	66,140,946.67
1891	24,542,565.54	1902	78,194,791.00
1892	31,501,654.78	1903	81,876,791.43
1893	28,543,385.00	1904	100,000,000.00

The subject of the new Navy came up in the Administration of President Arthur. While some preliminary steps were taken by Secretary Hunt, who was then a member of the Cabinet and Secretary of the Navy, he remained in office but a short time, and his successor, Secretary Chandler, afterwards and for many years an associate of ours in this Chamber, took up the work in earnest, and in 1883 we began appropriating for the new Navy, after full hearings and examinations by the Committee on Naval Affairs of officers in the Navy, the Secretary, and wherever any information could be obtained.

We began in a modest way, and provided that year for the new ships the Atlanta, the Boston, and the Chicago, cruisers, and the Dolphin, a general boat for the uses of the Navy. It amounted to only 13,000 tons in round numbers, much less in all for that year than a modern battle ship.

At that time, Mr. President, we not only had no establishments for armor or for plate, but we could not build the machinery, castings, and other things essential to the building of a naval cruiser, saying nothing of a battle ship or protected cruiser or an armored cruiser, but an ordinary cruiser.

There the modern Navy began, and I do not go beyond that. From that time we have appropriated from year to year for the increase of the naval establishment, continuing first in building cruisers, gunboats, and second-class battle ships until 1900. I will not read the list, but the appropriations were larger, perhaps, than Senators are aware. Beginning with 1883, when we appropriated only $14,000,000, as the table given shows, we have gone on increasing the Navy, so that, including this bill and the deficiencies of this year, we have already appropriated for the Navy $760,896,567.75.

Mr. CLAY. Since when?

Mr. HALE. Since 1883, for the new Navy, the present Navy. The table already given shows the appropriations from year to year.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator give us a synopsis of that table? We shall hardly get an opportunity of seeing it before the bill is disposed of.

Mr. HALE. It is simply a statement of what the appropriation each year is that makes up the total of $760,000,000.

Mr. TELLER. It is a printed statement?

Mr. HALE. Yes; it is a printed statement.

Mr. TELLER. Very good. I thought it would be something else.

Mr. HALE. No; it is simply a list of the appropriations from year to year. The aggregate is $760,896,567.73.

Now, as showing the growth of the Navy——

Mr. GORMAN. Right there, will it interrupt the Senator if he will give further figures? The appropriations are given at $760,000,000, but will the Senator state how much will be due upon the vessels already ordered and now being constructed——

Mr. HALE. Rear-Admiral Bowles in his last report as the Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repairs says that the total estimated cost of completing these vessels, exclusive of armor and armament, is $76,438,055. This does not include the Idaho and Mississippi, the 13,000-ton ships, which will add $11,478,000. To this must be added the future appropriations for armor and armament for these ships, for which I have not got the exact figures, but the total must be not far from $130,000,000.

Now, as showing the growth of the Navy in another respect, I have a list of petty officers, seamen, landsmen, boys, etc., in the Navy at the time when we began the work of building the new Navy, and for each year up to the present time. At that time the Navy consisted of 8,250 men, petty officers, seamen, landsmen, and all. We have gone on increasing so that, including the number provided for in this bill, the new American Navy, as against 8,250 when we began, now consists of 34,000 men. I put in a table here showing the increase each year:

Number of petty officers, seamen, landsmen, boys, etc., for each year from act of March 3, 1885, to and including act of 1904.

Act of March 3, 1885 (48th Cong., 2d sess.)	8,250
Act of July 26, 1886 (49th Cong., 1st sess.)	8,250
Act of March 3, 1887 (49th Cong., 2d sess.)	8,250
Act of September 7, 1888 (50th Cong., 1st sess.)	8,250
Act of March 2, 1889 (50th Cong., 2d sess.)	8,250
Act of June 30, 1890 (51st Cong., 1st sess.)	8,250
Act of March 2, 1891 (51st Cong., 2d sess.)	8,250
Act of July 19, 1892 (52d Cong., 1st sess.)	8,250
Act of March 3, 1893 (52d Cong., 2d sess.)	9,000
Act of July 28, 1894 (53d Cong., 2d sess.)	9,000
Act of March 2, 1895 (53d Cong., 3d sess.)	9,000
Act of June 10, 1896 (54th Cong., 1st sess.)	10,000
Act of March 3, 1897 (54th Cong., 1st sess.)	11,750
Act of May 4, 1898 (55th Cong., 2d sess.)	13,750
Act of March 3, 1899 (55th Cong., 3d sess.)	20,000
Act of June 7, 1900 (56th Cong., 1st sess.)	24,000
Act of March 3, 1901 (56th Cong., 2d sess.)	25,050
Act of July 1, 1902 (57th Cong., 1st sess.)	28,000
Act of March 3, 1903 (57th Cong., 2d sess.)	31,000
Act of 1904 (58th Cong., 2d sess.)	34,000

I have also tables showing what we are doing and have done for the Navy, covering the entire pay of officers and men, beginning in 1884–85 and ending with the present session. The amount at that time was $6,940,780. In the pending bill it is $19,824,093, and I put this table in, being in line with my treatment of the subject:

Entire pay for officers and men for each year from act of March 3, 1885, to and including act of 1904.

Act of March 3, 1885 (48th Cong., 2d sess.)	$6,940,780
Act of July 23, 1886 (49th Cong., 1st sess.)	7,000,000
Act of March 3, 1887 (49th Cong., 2d sess.)	7,000,000
Act of September 7, 1888 (50th Cong., 1st sess.)	7,092,404
Act of March 2, 1889 (50th Cong., 2d sess.)	7,250,000
Act of June 30, 1890 (51st Cong., 1st sess.)	7,250,000
Act of March 2, 1891 (51st Cong., 2d sess.)	7,300,000
Act of July 19, 1892 (52d Cong., 1st sess.)	7,300,000
Act of March 3, 1893 (52d Cong., 2d sess.)	7,300,000
Act of July 23, 1894 (53d Cong., 2d sess.)	7,475,000
Act of March 2, 1895 (53d Cong., 3d sess.)	7,540,329
Act of June 10, 1896 (54th Cong., 1st sess.)	8,100,873
Act of March 3, 1897 (54th Cong., 1st sess.)	8,236,385
Act of May 4, 1898 (55th Cong., 2d sess.)	9,126,460
Act of March 3, 1899 (55th Cong., 3d sess.)	13,500,171
Act of June 7, 1900 (56th Cong., 1st sess.)	12,420,867
Act of March 3, 1901 (56th Cong., 2d sess.)	15,290,284
Act of July 1, 1902 (57th Cong., 1st sess.)	16,158,199
Act of March 3, 1903 (57th Cong., 2d sess.)	17,706,099
Act of 1904 (58th Cong., 2d sess.)	19,824,093

The additions to the Navy during the last year were twenty-nine in all, including battle ships, turreted monitors, torpedo boats, torpedo-boat destroyers, and submarine boats.

The year 1894 marked another era in the building of the new Navy. It was in that year that the first battle ship came into the Navy, having been appropriated for in 1890, when Congress provided for the three great battle ships, the Oregon, the Massachu-

[illegible] and the Indiana, of about 10,000 tons each, three ships which I still believe were in many respects the best ships ever built in the American Navy for actual war purposes. They carry the same number of large guns as the enormous ships which come [illegible] and are in my judgment better ships for offensive naval purposes than the others. But that I am not going to discuss, because we were going on again, upon the recommendation of the boards, increasing the Navy, so that last year we [illegible] the largest programme for building of any nation in the world, [illegible] battle ships of [illegible] and two others of 13,[illegible] each. Since 1894 we have gone on building battle ships, armored cruisers, and protected cruisers, which are smaller cruisers, gunboats, torpedo boats, torpedo boat destroyers, and submarine boats, as the following table shows:

SUMMARY OF VESSELS IN THE UNITED STATES NAVY.

Vessels fit for service, including those under repair.

But as showing what we are doing now as compared with what we did not do before 1884 when we began the Navy, but in 1894 when we commenced the first battle ships, I have a comparison showing what the appropriations for last year and this year are as compared with the appropriations entire from 1884 to 1894 when we began the battle ships.

The following table shows the tonnage and final cost of all the ships provided for in last year's bill and this year's bill:

Vessels provided for in the act of March 3, 1903.

a Equipment outfit.

Mr. PROCTOR. May I ask a question?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. PROCTOR. I should like to ask whether this cost includes the armament?

Mr. HALE. I am giving the total cost.

Mr. PROCTOR. Ready for service?

Mr. HALE. Ready for service. I am glad the Senator has asked me that question, because I did not content myself with getting what is carried in the bills for the hull and machinery, but I have the figures for the entire finishing of the vessel and ready for service. The battle ships of the size which we have been building lately have each cost about $7,500,000.

Mr. ALLISON. Give the aggregate for the two years.

Mr. HALE. The aggregate for the two years is $64,365,504.

Mr. BACON. Do I understand the Senator to say that each of these largest battle ships would cost $7,500,000?

Mr. HALE. Yes; but as showing the constantly increasing cost of these enormous ships the estimated cost of the corresponding battle ships in the present bill is $7,720,857——

Mr. BACON. Each?

Mr. HALE. That is the total cost of this one battle ship. There are small items of cost, but that includes armor and armament. I have no doubt that when the ship is fitted and commissioned and goes to sea and all the additions are made, as is always the case, before officers and men are put on board, the cost to the Government of one of these enormous battle ships will be little, if any, under $8,000,000.

Mr. MALLORY. Does that apply also to the 13,000-ton battle ships, two of which we are now building?

Mr. HALE. The Senator was not here when I stated it.

Mr. MALLORY. What is their cost?

Mr. HALE. In the table I read I gave the cost of each one of the 13,000-ton ships. It is $5,739,000 each.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator please state what is the cost of the armor on that $8,000,000 battle ship?

Mr. HALE. I can not, perhaps, answer the question with exactness.

Mr. BACON. I thought the Senator had the figures before him.

Mr. HALE. I have the figures showing the cost of both armor and armament for each of these great ships, which is $3,320,857. I have given the totals. The cost, as I have given, for these two years is $64,365,504. The entire cost of the ships of the new Navy which came into the Navy up to the year 1894 was $39,692,350.82.

All the vessels that came into the Navy under the new programme from 1884 to 1894—ten years—cost $39,692,350.82, as against $64,365,504 which we appropriated in the last year's bill and this bill.

I give the figures because Senators ought to know and ought to realize that we have not been remiss heretofore. Senators have said to me during this session, "It is a shame that we are not building up the Navy. The sentiment of the country is for it;" and it has not been realized or understood what Congress has done for our new Navy, or how great and powerful it is to-day or what it will be when the ships now being built are finished.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. What is the character of the vessels which are in process of construction?

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me, I am coming to that and shall state each ship which is under construction. That comes a little later in the order I have arranged.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. That is what I wish to ascertain.

Mr. HALE. As the Senator has asked a very pertinent question, I will now give the table showing the kinds of ships now under construction and the degree of completion of each.

Now, as valuable a table as I have been able to find—and I shall ask to have it put with other tables into the form of a public document—Senators who have seen the table have suggested this. It is in the Philadelphia Inquirer of Sunday, February 28, by Mr. P. Lyle Weaver, who has, for that paper, searched the records of the Navy Department in a more thorough way, I am free to say, than I have been able to do or than anybody else, so far as I have seen, has been able to do. I have examined this table by the light of all the figures which I have gained from the reports from the Department itself, and it is much more exhaustive than anything that I have been able otherwise to procure.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Maine if he has any objection to asking that, in addition to its going into the RECORD, that table shall be printed as a Senate document?

Mr. HALE. That is in the line of my suggestion.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have examined it very carefully. It would be a document that doubtless would be called for; and it would be very convenient to be able to furnish it in that form.

Mr. HALE. I am glad the Senator, who is a prominent member of the Naval Committee, agrees that it is a very valuable table.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is indeed.

Mr. HALE. This writer has a summary of all vessels already built and now in the Navy, going completely into the subject. He gives in the table the name of each vessel.

The tonnage of all these different classes at present in the Navy is 531,886 tons. In addition to that is the statement of vessels building and authorized, to which I have referred, and of which I will give the tables in detail, and those amount to 349,431 tons, with an aggregate of our Navy, when the present building is completed, of 881,317 tons, with the immense horse power of 1,248,386, and requiring a force of sailors, seamen, and petty officers of 45,881 men when the present programme is carried out. As to the vessels now building and authorized——

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think it is important in this connection to state that this table shows that in the matter of tonnage the United States to-day stands third among the nations of the world. I think that is correct.

Mr. HALE. It is undoubtedly. I shall have some further figures to present on the question of tonnage.

Mr. CLAY. I should like to ask the Senator does he mean to say that we stand third in tonnage now, compared with the other powers of the world, or that we shall stand third when the ships provided for are constructed?

Mr. HALE. We stand third at present.

Mr. CLAY. England first, France second, and is not Germany now ahead of us in tonnage?

Mr. HALE. No; not including the small ships in our Navy—those under 1,000 tons.

Mr. GALLINGER. Not according to the figures in these tables, I will say to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. CLAY. I thought that Germany was ahead of us, not taking into consideration the ships we have in process of construction; but taking into consideration the ships now under process of construction, then we would be ahead of Germany.

Mr. HALE. I have tables which will show where the Senator gets his idea of Germany being ahead of us, which I shall come to presently.

Mr. GALLINGER. That has been, I will say, the general opinion; indeed, it was the opinion I myself had until, from a careful analysis of this table, I found, if this gentleman is correct, that we stand ahead of Germany; that we stand third to-day.

Mr. CLAY. I got my information from the report of the House committee.

Mr. PROCTOR. May I ask a question?

Mr. HALE. Certainly; I have no set speech that questions will interrupt. I am only giving the figures, and shall be glad if Senators will ask me questions.

Mr. PROCTOR. On the question of the relative force of our Navy compared with that of other nations I should like to ask if the Senator can tell what it was at the beginning of the Spanish war, in 1898, and whether we were not then counted in naval power sixth or seventh amongst the governments of the world?

Mr. HALE. Quite likely.

Mr. PROCTOR. I think one of the reports I saw stated that we were seventh.

Mr. HALE. I beg the Senator's pardon, but that particular year has gone, and what I am dealing with now is the present status of the building programme we have already authorized.

Mr. PROCTOR. I was trying to show our rapid advance.

Mr. HALE. It has been exceedingly rapid. There was a time when we were behind every other nation, when we only appropriated $14,000,000 a year for the naval establishment—for ships, officers, men, and everything else—and the whole naval world was ahead of us. We then began the work of the building up of the new Navy, and what I am trying to show is what we have already done, including the authorization of this year.

Mr. PERKINS. I should like to ask the Senator to state, in passing, that in the effectiveness, in the improvements of our war ships, and in their appurtenances and appliances and machinery we are second in the navies of the world. We have profited, in other words, by the mistakes made by European countries in building up their navies.

Mr. HALE. We have this great advantage, Mr. President, let me say in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from California, that up to, I will say, 1884 we stood by and saw other nations making experiments in different kinds of new ships. They spent hundreds of millions of dollars upon ships that have since been abandoned as obsolete, and other kinds of ships are being constructed to make their present navies; but in reckoning the entire tonnage of the foreign navies they have reckoned what both the Senator from California and the Senator from New Hampshire suggest, and all of those old and practically obsolete ships that are still existing are counted in their tonnage, while our tonnage is of the new ships that have been built and are fit for some service.

Mr. ALGER. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. ALGER. During the Spanish-American war a large number of yachts, inferior boats, you might call them—were purchased, but they would be of no use in time of war.

Mr. HALE. Twenty-three of them.

Mr. ALGER. I want to know whether they are included in this number.

Mr. HALE. They are not included in the list of ships of sea strength and fit for war service, to which I am coming. They do not amount to much either in tonnage or armament or anything else, but they balance against just the same kind of ships that are found in foreign navies, and that adds to their total. They are of the same kind.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will suspend one moment while the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2259) to regulate shipping in trade between ports of the United States and ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, between ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, that the Senate may proceed with the consideration of the appropriation bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HALE. But I have not been content myself, Mr. President, to rest there; and I have tables, which I will put in the RECORD, showing the sea strength of the principal naval powers up to the present year and not including small ships less than 1,000 tons.

I do not say that in a system either of warfare or of peaceful conduct of a naval establishment gunboats and light-draft gunboats are not very valuable vessels. They are not only valuable in time of peace and are used more than the larger ships, but in time of war they are excellent as scouts. But I do not reckon them in the tables which I am going to give now. I am dealing with the larger vessels, which may, perhaps, be termed "sea strength."

Mr. LODGE. I ask the Senator if the table is the same as that found in the report on the House bill?

Mr. HALE. I think there may be some little change, but it is practically the same thing.

Mr. LODGE. That table shows the sea strength.

Mr. HALE. I was going to explain what it shows.

Mr. LODGE. Do the Senator's tables show the character of ships that are at present building?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, in reference to the interrogatory on the part of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. ALGER], I wish to say that the total tonnage to-day is 531,868, and the converted yachts have a tonnage of 10,880. So they are included in the total, but it is inconsequential as a matter of fact.

Mr. HALE. They make no figure.

Mr. GALLINGER. No.

Mr. HALE. Now, treating of what we may call the sea strength of the larger ships, that is here given for Great Britain, for France, for Russia, for Germany, for the United States, for Italy, for Japan. The table gives the number of battle ships, coast-defense ironclads, armored cruisers, protected cruisers of the first and second class, and cruisers and scouts over 1,000 tons. That, of course, includes all armored ships and all battle ships whatever built. It gives for Great Britain a tonnage of [illegible], France, 576,108; Russia, 416,158; Germany, 387,874; the United States, 294,405; Italy, 258,838; Japan, 243,586; Austria, 93,913. That is the tonnage of ships that are now commissioned.

Mr. ALGER. They are built.

Mr. HALE. Yes; they are now in commission.

Mr. CLAY. I should like to ask the Senator how is it possible with only the tonnage he has stated, for the United States to be the third naval power in the world?

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator let me complete my statement?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly, with pleasure.

Mr. HALE. I have also shown—and that is included in this table—what the strength of this country alone and of each country will be when the present building programme is carried out.

Senators may say that that is not all carried out yet; that we have got to wait. Of course, we have to wait. You can not build a ship in a day. Great Britain can not and Germany can not. But, as showing what we have done and are doing, I have [illegible] table which shows that when the building going on is completed of these larger ships, the tonnage of Great Britain will be [illegible], of France, 755,757; of the United States, [illegible]; Germany, 505,619, or more than 100,000 tons less than we have; Italy, 329,000; Japan, 53,000; Austria, [illegible] the present building programme when it is carried out. I put in, Mr. President, these most important tables:

Now, Mr. President, I will say here——

Mr. CLAY. Is that for this year under this bill?

Mr. HALE. That includes this year's expenditures, but not this year's building programme.

Mr. CLAY. That does not include the $99,000,000 for new ships, does it?

Mr. HALE. It simply includes ships that are now in process of construction.

Mr. CLAY. These items do not include the present bill.

Mr. HALE. That is what I thought.

Mr. HALE. It is figured up to last December, as I have stated.

Now, one thing is remarkable, in which the situation is very marked. The whole Japanese navy, already built and building, is only 47 vessels in all, 253,681 tons.

Mr. PROCTOR. Built and building?

Mr. HALE. But Japan is at home. In any possible controversy that may arise her base is only a few hundred miles from any naval or military operations. The largest figures that Japan can show are small compared with those of every other country that I have cited, except Austria; but she has this immense advantage of being near at home in her fighting.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will ask the Senator what position relatively we shall obtain when the present bill is passed?

Mr. HALE. That will not change it very greatly, except that I will say this: Germany is not keeping up a large new programme. Her programme is not nearly as large as ours. France's programme is not as large as ours, excepting in some smaller vessels. The only power that is keeping up an increase as large as we are in these large ships is Great Britain.

In looking over these figures of the showing of total tonnage, from a compilation secured at the Department, of the navies of the world, I find that to make up this great tonnage of large vessels of other countries there is included a great many vessels that were built before we began to build our new Navy. Many of these large vessels are old; they are set aside; they are found in naval stations and navy-yards, but they help the figures of these large powers. Included in the list of England are 14 battle ships and 2 armored cruisers, ranging from 6,000 tons, with a total tonnage of 76,900 tons, that were ordered before we began to touch our Navy, that is, before 1884. While they are in the figures, they do not, I say, like ours, represent actual offensive strength.

In her total of 755,757 tons, France has 106,000 tons of these ships that were built before 1884, or twenty years ago, and not one of them can be used for offensive purposes. Deducting this 106,000 tons makes her about 33,482 tons ahead of us. This deduction of old and comparatively obsolete ships from France's effective navy, with another table which I shall give, brings us up with our naval programme with France, and with her next to Great Britain, which has got of these old ships, built before 1884, 130,000 tons. Germany has 34,000 tons of what you might call obsolete ships and 25,000 tons of armored cruisers. Russia has 40,000 tons.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. MALLORY. We have some ships which are pretty old, but which are in good condition—for instance, the Atlanta, the Boston, the Chicago, and that class of vessels. They were built before 1884, and yet those vessels are now——

Mr. HALE. No, they were not built before 1884.

Mr. MALLORY. They were finished about 1884.

Mr. HALE. They did not get into the Navy before 1886, or even later.

Mr. MALLORY. Well, 1885 or 1886.

Mr. HALE. I am only taking now the ships not of that kind; I am only taking now the ships of other powers that were built before that time.

Mr. MALLORY. Even conceding that, the point I want to make is this: We have repaired those vessels. The Chicago has been completely transformed and the Atlanta has been recently entirely overhauled; I do not know about the Boston; but those vessels to-day are in first-class condition, though they are comparatively old.

Mr. HALE. They are in our Navy; they are in good condition.

Mr. MALLORY. Can you determine from the fact that a vessel was built before 1884 that she is necessarily out of date?

Mr. HALE. Well, I do. When we come to the number of ships that Great Britian has got in commission, I see where these obsolete ships are accounted for. But I am coming to that.

Mr. MALLORY. Possibly the ships of the countries which the Senator has termed "obsolete" may have been repaired, as we have repaired ours.

Mr. HALE. In addition to that, Mr. President, I have made another table, which shows the tonnage that goes to make up these figures of these other great powers between 1884 and 1894, when we began to introduce the battle ships. Those that I have already given are older than any battle ships, older than any cruisers or any gunboats, or anything we have got.

Again, I have got an additional table of large vessels built between 1884 and 1890. This table shows that Great Britain has an additional 115,600 tons of battle ships that were built before we began to introduce battle ships, and 39,000 tons of armored cruisers, making in all 164,000, which is to be taken from these figures of large ships that Great Britain has, as compared with ours, all of which have been built and taken into the Navy since 1894. France adds to that 31,583 tons. So that in effective large new ships we will be, when this programme is completed, away beyond either Germany or Russia or Japan, alongside of France, and up much nearer to Great Britain than anybody would realize if they did not know what these figures show.

Mr. LODGE. That is assuming that they do not change their present programmes.

Mr. HALE. Well, there is no sign that they will, as I have stated.

Mr. LODGE. I mean is it perfectly fair to take that for granted? Of course, they may change.

Mr. HALE. Well, if they do so, we can. I mean the programme that is now laid out and provided for by law.

Great Britain undoubtedly, as I see from what has taken place in the House of Commons, has a large, but not a detailed, programme this year. Great Britain evidently does not know just how she will want to build ships for the next year.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator in regard to those vessels he was speaking of as built before 1884? Is it not true about every armored ship built and ordered at that time that the armor was iron plate? I do not remember the technical name, but they were plates that were superseded by steel plates.

Mr. HALE. Entirely.

Mr. LODGE. It is armor that no country would think of using now.

Mr. HALE. There may have been some composite armor, but it is only within a very few years, Mr. President, that any nation has begun to use the best modern armor.

Mr. LODGE. They were compound iron plates.

Mr. HALE. Composite iron plates.

Mr. President, I put in here a memorandum from the Bureau of Naval Intelligence:

Memorandum.

FEBRUARY 18, 1904.

By 1906 the following ships should not be counted in the main line of defense, but should be disposed as indicated below:

Battleships: Indiana, Massachusetts, Oregon, Texas; coast-defense squadron.
Monitors: Miantonomoh, Amphitrite, Terror, Puritan; harbor defense only.

So it seems they are already talking in the Navy Department of putting the Oregon, the Massachusetts, and the Indiana onto the retired class for coast defense.

Mr. STEWART. I hope they will keep the Oregon off of it.

Mr. HALE. They ought to. I think the Oregon is one of the best ships that ever was built.

Mr. LODGE. It is a good ship to-day.

Mr. HALE. It is a good ship to-day.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to see another like it built.

Mr. HALE. But it does not fill the fancy of a naval officer. She has not the room on her for staterooms and for comforts and for conveniences and for all the intricate machinery that a 16,000-ton ship has. But she has the same number of 12-inch guns and the same number of turrets and the same efficient force, so far as the great guns go. She is smaller, more easily handled, and when she goes to the bottom, as any battle ship will from the impact of a torpedo, like the jab of a prize fighter's fist, instead of seven or eight million dollars going to the bottom, it is only $5,000,000, for which sum a ship of that kind can be built to-day.

So we have to reckon with this as showing why it is that we are continually asked by the naval officers and the naval boards for the largest programme. They want the biggest ships that ever were built. They do not want any other nation to beat them. There is not to-day, Mr. President, on the waters of the globe a ship of 16,000 tons displacement, and yet we are building these of late years, and all other battle ships are turned down by the naval boards.

Mr. ALLISON. Are there any building now?

Mr. HALE. There are a few building, but very few in addition to what we are building. England has talked about building a vessel even larger than that, but I think it has been abandoned, and most of the building is of the 11,000 and 12,000 ton class and along there, with the same armament of big guns.

Mr. STEWART. I wish we had ten or fifteen like the Oregon.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Maine pardon me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. It is in connection with what the Senator from Maine has just been saying.

The fact is well developed and recognized by all that changed conditions will make a ship which would otherwise be good comparatively worthless. It becomes obsolete. For instance, the matter suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts as to the changed character of the armor. It makes valueless a ship armored with armor which twenty years ago was considered good.

The particular point to which I wish to direct the attention of the Senator from Maine is this: As I understand, the armor which is now placed upon ships is designed as protection against projectiles from other ships. In other words, the armor is not complete protection, at least against torpedoes or other submarine offensive machinery.

Now, if the development of this class of submarine offensive vessels, torpedoes and submarine boats, etc., continues in a very high degree, so that in the possible near future it may be regarded as the most dangerous class of offensive weapons against ships, will it not be true even as to the ships now being constructed—if there is a great revolution in that particular—that they will practically be worthless and become obsolete, even though they may be perfect in their capacity to resist projectiles from other ships?

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator want——

Mr. BACON. I was trying to direct a question to the Senator, but I saw his attention was diverted.

Mr. HALE. I will look straight at the Senator's good face and will look at no other.

Mr. BACON. The point to which I desire to ask the attention of the Senator, and it is rather in furtherance of the suggestion he makes now as to the superiority of the $5,000,000 ship rather than the $8,000,000 ship, is this: Will not the development of submarine weapons of naval architecture, if it continues in the ratio in which it has recently increased, make it possible that in the near future, that being relied on as the principal weapon of offense, these great ships, while they may be perfect in their capacity for resistance to projectiles from other ships, will themselves become almost obsolete, by reason of their inability to defend themselves against torpedoes and other submarine vessels and weapons of that kind?

Mr. HALE. Now, that is a matter which we have considered in committee, and I think the fair way to look at it is that the present war in the East may develop a condition which will show that so large a proportion of the expenditures for naval ships should not be concentrated upon battle ships. But nobody will know what to do—Great Britain, which is watching with eagle eye everything that is taking place there, because her great possessions are there, does not know what to do—until the smoke clears up. Nobody knows now whether a battle ship that costs between seven and eight million dollars, or a torpedo boat that costs $300,000, will be the more effective battle engine in the years to come.

Therefore, as the House bill has put on only one battle ship, where last year we put on five, and has two armored cruisers, which to my mind will be found more valuable than the big battle ships, and then certain small cruisers for speed to accompany the fleet, we did not think it desirable to still more change our programme until—I use my same metaphor—the smoke lifts from the war which is going on in the East, and we see whether such a revolution in naval architecture and naval ships has been wrought in one season as was caused by the advent of the little Monitor, when she steamed into the bay below the mouth of the Potomac and saved Washington and subverted every idea that anybody ever had had of the efficiency of ships.

We are proceeding at an immense expense on some things that may be proved to be valueless in one season. I found in my investigation one thing which I had not known before. It was a startling thing. We are building all our battle ships with revolving turrets. We put in them the big guns, the 12 and 13 inch guns. You have got down to 12-inch guns, and I wish we were down to the 10. We put them all in revolving turrets.

A few years ago the naval board, thinking it was a picturesque innovation, provided for a second story—a second turret—to be put on top of the main turret, and they built two ships, the Kearsarge and the Kentucky, with those turrets. I have a copy of their report. The naval board reported that those were to be the ships of the future. They argued it all out. We built them. We gave them the money to provide for them. One of them went to Germany and received a great ovation, and our officers and men had a very gratifying time. But the German naval officers remarked: "If the United States is going to build that kind of a ship in the future, and put its money into those ships, we will not trouble ourselves much about them, because they are not practicable."

The next year the Board turned around and said they did not want any more of those ships, and we took their word; and we provided these immense ships with one-story revolving turrets for the big guns. My study has been interesting. Looking over this book of the modern battle ships, which is accepted by the different naval establishments of the world as to a degree official, although not gotten up by any department, I did not discover, to my surprise, any British turreted battle ships. I could not find any such turrets for large guns. I said, "It can not be we are going on building revolving-turreted battle ships, and England, which is the great naval power in the world and the authority, is not building them;" and I sent to the Department and asked if that were true, and I got this:

All British first-class battle ships less than 10 years old have their 12-inch guns en barbette.

They will not touch a revolving turret.

Mr. PATTERSON. Just what is that?

Mr. HALE. The revolving turret is a cylinder——

Mr. PATTERSON. I mean en barbette.

Mr. HALE. It is a platform instead of a turret. It is a platform outside upon which the guns are imposed, and sometimes they are hooded, but they are stationary. They are platform guns.

Then I followed this thing up to see why it was that while we are going on, asking no questions, and building nothing but revolving turrets for these guns, England is not building one of them. The reason is that they are afraid of them. They say they are subject to an ordinary accident; that if a revolving turret jams from any cause—the listing of the ship or a single shell hits it—the ship is good for nothing; the big guns can not be used. They say that if an explosion were to take place in a turret—and anybody who has ever been in them can understand that—the results would be horrible. So it is the fact that the great power of Great Britain, which is the great accredited authority on naval structures, is not building a single revolving turret for large guns. We are building all.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I should like, if the Senator will yield to me, to ask him if we have not had an explosion in a turret?

Mr. HALE. We have had accidental explosions.

Mr. TELLER. Accidental explosions.

Mr. HALE. We have had. They are horrible. We have had nothing in battle.

The Senator from Illinois asks me what we are doing now in this bill. We have adhered to the old way because we have only one battle ship in the bill.

Mr. TELLER. There is only one battle ship provided for in this bill?

Mr. HALE. Only one.

Mr. CULLOM. Are we allowing the turrets to remain?

Mr. HALE. I think it is proper that attention should be called to this matter. It is not the Secretary; it is the board of naval officers who decide these matters. Of course, they may be right; it may be we are all right. But if we are all right, Great Britain is all wrong. And if Great Britain is all right, we are all wrong.

We have not had enough discussion of the naval programme heretofore.

Mr. TELLER. How about Germany?

Mr. HALE. I have looked also into the other powers. Germany builds a few, France a few, but generally the ships that are building, those by Great Britain entirely, are barbette ships, although some of the other nations are building turreted ships. But Great Britain is building none of them.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. I understand that all our battle ships now are turreted.

Mr. HALE. Every battle ship has its big guns put into cylinder revolving turrets.

Mr. CARMACK. How about the cruisers?

Mr. HALE. The cruisers do not have the big guns. The question does not arise with the cruisers.

Mr. CLAY. With the Senator's permission, I am frank to confess that I do not understand this matter. The Senator, I am sure, can explain it. He has put on record the enormous tonnage and gun power of the United States ships, by Mr. Weaver. His statement is simply this: The total tonnage of the ships now in the United States is 551,886 tons. The 31 vessels now building have an aggregate tonnage of 349,431 tons. This makes a grand total of all ships in commission, when these in process of construction are completed, of 881,317 tons, and makes the United States the second naval power of the world.

Now, from the Navy Department comes the information, which the Senator has just read, that when the ships now under process of construction are completed the United States will have a tonnage of 616,275, making a difference of over 200,000 tons and making us the third naval power of the world.

Mr. HALE. I have explained that. I am sorry the Senator was not here or that I was dull in explaining it.

What I have taken as the actual basis are the figures they have given for ships over a thousand tons—what is called "sea strength."

Mr. LODGE. The fighting force.

Mr. HALE. The fighting force. The addition is made up not only in our Navy, but in other navies, of smaller vessels which are valuable vessels, but are not of what is called the "fighting force." Therefore I have not considered it a fair comparison to take the figures that are given there, which are correct, as they include everything——

Mr. CLAY. The table that the Senator has inserted in the RECORD embraces all the ships.

Mr. HALE. All of the ships will show in the table to be printed as a public document. This includes Mr. Weaver's tables.

Mr. CLAY. And the report from the Navy Department simply embraces those of a certain size?

Mr. HALE. They will give you just what is in that report. Their attention has been called to this matter, and a reply has been given. We have asked them to give us what is called the "sea power," the "fighting power," and these late figures which I have in the table all cover the fighting power, what is called the "sea power," and do not include the fifty or sixty vessels, as I suppose there are in our Navy, which are below a thousand tons.

Mr. ALLISON. The same rule runs through the entire table?

Mr. HALE. It runs through the entire table, and also runs through the tables of other powers.

Mr. ALLISON. Of all the ships of all the countries?

Mr. HALE. All ships of all countries.

Mr. PROCTOR. Will the Senator from Maine yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I have been very much interested in what the Senator from Maine said about guns being mounted on barbette instead of in revolving turrets, and I entirely agree with his expression of doubt.

Mr. HALE. It applies to the Army just as to the Navy.

Mr. PROCTOR. There is a parallel case in the Army. I have argued here against using the disappearing carriage to the great extent we have, in which respect ours is entirely different from the policy of any other country. The same is true in regard to turrets. The reason is very much stronger in the case of the Army because the barbette gun, being on an elevation, a fort, is very much more protected than it would be on board ship. We have spent many millions for mounting guns in forts; some of them at an elevation of two or three hundred feet, on disappearing carriages, which a single shot might disable, and in my opinion it would be very likely to. Even a shot throwing gravel or the débris of the concrete from the fortification would put the gun out of service. I am very glad to hear this discussion.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator before he sits down whether there has not been a report made on that subject since the last discussion?

Mr. PROCTOR. I am not aware of any. We have gone on. I think the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] can tell us about that.

Mr. PERKINS. I refer the Senator to the report of the Chief of Ordnance, Board of Ordnance and Fortification, commencing at page 67, where the report of the board that was appointed on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont to investigate the practicability and desirability of using the disappearing carriage as against the barbette is given fully. When the fortifications bill is up we will discuss that proposition.

Mr. PROCTOR. I should like to ask the Senator from California if this report indorses a change of the system?

Mr. PERKINS. No; the beard——

Mr. PROCTOR. That is what I supposed.

Mr. PERKINS. They are in favor of disappearing carriages.

Mr. PROCTOR. I wish merely to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that we are in that matter differing from the policy of every other nation, the same as we are in the use of the revolving turret. I think we are making a mistake, surely in the case of the Army.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say that I think the Senator from Vermont is mistaken. The disappearing carriage is used in some countries besides the United States.

Mr. LODGE. Of course it is.

Mr. PROCTOR. Only to a very limited extent, and our disappearing carriage is not used anywhere.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say further that the disappearing carriage is an American invention.

Mr. PROCTOR. So is the turret.

Mr. HALE. Let these army experts fight it out on the army bill. I am dealing with the Navy.

Mr. FORAKER. I should like to inquire if there has been any trouble with the turret of any battle ship? I ask only for information.

Mr. HALE. The fortunate fact is that we have not gotten into war yet. They have not been tried yet. Nobody knows. The British officers and authorities go on the assumption that when you get into conflict the unforeseen things will happen, the turreted ship is subject to a much larger percentage of accidents. We, fortunately, never have tried it in battle. I do not know, and I do not claim——

Mr. FORAKER. The theory is that the turrets are more liable to accident?

Mr. HALE. One can see that where the——

Mr. FORAKER. As a matter of fact, there has not been any?

Mr. HALE. None in war.

Mr. FORAKER. They were used in the Spanish-American war at Santiago.

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. The Indiana and the Oregon were turreted ships.

Mr. HALE. The ships that showed in that fight, the two ships that did most of the fighting, were the Oregon and the Brooklyn.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. HALE. The Oregon is a turreted ship, but there was no ship that she was contending with. She had nothing to contend with in the way of a battle ship.

Mr. LODGE. Was not the Iowa a turreted ship?

Mr. HALE. All our battle ships are turreted.

Mr. LODGE. The Iowa certainly engaged in it.

Mr. HALE. Yes; but the most prominent were the Oregon and the Brooklyn.

Mr. LODGE. The Massachusetts was not there.

Mr. HALE. The Massachusetts was not there; the Texas was.

Mr. FORAKER. I am asking only for information. May I ask the Senator from Maine how does the question arise now? Does the bill provide for ships without turrets?

Mr. HALE. No. We have left that to the Department.

Mr. FORAKER. Oh!

Mr. HALE. I first tried to enlighten myself and then to enlighten the Senate and the country as to what the conditions are and how we are going on as compared to other great naval powers.

Mr. FORAKER. It is not only interesting, but very important.

Mr. HALE. I think it is important as a matter of administration.

Mr. CARMACK. Will the Senator permit me just a moment?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. I understand the drift of the Senator's remarks and those of the Senator from Vermont to mean that there is a very serious doubt as to whether the vast sums of money which we have been expending for military and naval purposes have been intelligently expended.

Mr. HALE. I should not go so far as that. There has been great intelligence. Whether there has also been wisdom—intelligence and wisdom are not the same——

Mr. CARMACK. Wisdom, I meant.

Mr. HALE. Whether everything has been done in the wisest way is a question. I do not mean to censure the naval officers. I do not think any navy in the world has a finer complement of naval officers than we have for intelligence, for courage, of course, for patriotism, and for every quality that goes to make up usefulness in time of war or to make great sailors, great officers, great captains. But the naval officer is a naval officer pure and simple. The one thing that bounds his horizon is the United States Navy. It is the sea. If he is, as nearly all the officers are, graduates of Annapolis, it is the scene of every incident in his eventful life from boyhood until he retires. To him the building of the Navy is the one essential thing over and above all other things.

When he is confronted with the question whether we will appropriate money for a navy or for the dwindling merchant marine, he is for the Navy. That is his profession; that is his business. And the naval boards, I think, have run too much in the direction of building the most enormous ships.

I tried last year to keep the size of the ships down, and instead of building three 16,000-ton ships, at almost $8,000,000 apiece, I would have built five like the Oregon and the Massachusetts; and it was declared that I had lost all sense of patriotism, that I was an impediment and an encumberer of the ground, and had no business to advance any such proposition against the naval programme.

I have not changed my mind. I think instead of three great 16,000-ton battle ships, five like the Oregon, the Massachusetts, and the Indiana, with the same number of guns that the others have, but not the room, not so many small guns, although they have a great many of them, but not the room and not in appearance the wonderfully potential engine of war as the big ships, would have been better. But the naval officers believe in the biggest ships. In some respects they are like the farmer who wants to raise the biggest pumpkin. They do not want to be beaten by their neighbors. They do not want England or Germany to excel us in the size of ships.

As to the relative merits of the larger ships and torpedo boats, in future construction, ex-Secretary Chandler has given a very valuable interview on the subject, which I will incorporate in the Senate document which is to include the tables used in my remarks.

Now, the present year's appropriation, including this bill and the deficiency—there will always be about the same amount of deficiency—will equal in round figures $100,000,000.

The naval programme of the naval boards and naval officers is that, as against twenty-four battle ships which we have built and building, and with this bill twenty-five, and ten armored cruisers, we shall go on and build until we have forty-eight battle ships and twelve armored cruisers—forty-eight battle ships, in round numbers, at $8,000,000 apiece, twenty-three of which will be hereafter authorized, and twenty-four armored cruisers at six millions each, nearly. If we adopt that programme (and it is said we have no business to ask questions, but we must give everything that is asked), we will have a naval appropriation bill next year of $110,000,000 or $120,000,000; and when you get the forty-eight battle ships and twenty-four armored cruisers no appropriation of less than $200,000,000 a year will run the Navy.

Mr. ALLISON rose.

Mr. HALE. And long before that you will have to build to take the place of obsolete ships to keep up the complement of forty-eight battle ships. Great Britain has only thirty-four battle ships in commission to-day, and yet the naval boards and naval officers tell us that we want forty-eight battle ships. They are in earnest; they are honest about it from their standpoint, and think the country can not do better than devote its money to this purpose.

I think that while the committee this year has not thought it wise to interfere with this programme, it is well worth the while for the Senate to consider in the future to what all this will inevitably lead. I am not in favor of stopping the building of ships. I am not in favor of impairing the usefulness of the Navy. I think we ought to have the second or third navy in the world. I think when anyone says we ought to go on and have a navy as big as Great Britain that we are dealing with conditions that are entirely different from those of Great Britain, and that the contemplated force is too large; that it is more than the revenues will sustain.

Does the Senator from Iowa arise to a question?

Mr. ALLISON. I was waiting; I did not know but that the Senator would reach the comparison that I think he ought to make at this stage. I should be glad to know what will be the appropriations necessary for the maintenance of the Navy as it will be when all the present ships are put in commission which are under construction and those authorized heretofore and in this bill. Then I should be glad to know, in comparison, what, under the programme which the Senator has just announced as the programme of the Navy Board, the annual appropriations would be, and what would be relatively the number of sailors.

Mr. HALE. I have given what the annual naval appropriation would ultimately be, $200,000,000 per year. The number of men will be from 80,000 to 90,000.

Mr. SPOONER. As against what?

Mr. HALE. As against 34,000 now.

Mr. ALLISON. I will ask the Senator in the course of his observations to state what the number of men will be when the ships now under construction are completed.

Mr. HALE. It will be 43,000. It would be just about double that under the larger programme, if we carry it out. Now, we are not seeking even any restriction or shrinkage this year, because the conditions are peculiar. We do not know what this first locking of horns between two great powers—and they are both great powers—will demonstrate upon the question of the naval establishment.

The committee did not think it wise, all the more, as I have said, because the House reported only one battle ship, to interfere with their programme. But I will say, in answer to the Senator from Iowa, that if we simply keep a navy of the size which ours will be when the ships provided for in this bill and those now under construction are completed, then we need not have an appropriation much, if any, larger than it is now. I have made these calculations as correctly as I can.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, Mr. President, I know how difficult it is to make accurate estimates, but I should like to have the Senator state, so far as he can, what the annual appropriation will necessarily be when the present construction and authorization is completed and the ships are in commission.

Mr. HALE. That would depend upon whether we go on and add every year a lot of new ships. If we stop, then I can tell; but if we keep adding while this programme is being carried out, then the appropriations will increase all the time. I do not know what we will do; but if we stop and do not do anything more for the present or the near future than what is necessary to keep good our twenty-five battle ships and corresponding cruisers, then we can get along and get along well.

The appropriations for the ships in this bill do not come in until the next year, because they do not get to work this year any more than to be ready to build the ships. The second year is more than the first. The carrying out of the programme of vessels already organized runs through a period of from three to five years. But if we only make good and add only one battle ship a year and some scouts and cruisers, and an armored cruiser, then we can keep the appropriations down to about what they are now.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that this bill carries $31,000,000 for the construction of ships already being constructed and authorized.

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. That is, for construction?

Mr. HALE. Yes; for work on ships already authorized.

Mr. ALLISON. So that if we stop the building of new ships hereafter, allowing the programme to remain as it is under these bills, then the annual appropriation, as I understand the Senator, will not be increased.

Mr. HALE. It will not materially, I think.

Mr. ALLISON. But suppose we also, each year, add to the Navy for the purpose of keeping it in full use, allowing for wear and tear and new ships to take the place of old ones, etc., will there not be a considerable addition thereby every year to the annual appropriation?

Mr. HALE. That is a matter about which one can not tell exactly. When we get through with the appropriation of $31,000,000 to carry out the building programme, that reduces the subsequent appropriation bills so much, so that the current appropriation will be less, and then we will have room for a moderate increase that shall keep the Navy up to the position it will be in when the present building programme is carried out. But I do not claim anyone can make figures exactly. I should think, under those conditions, if we do not go on with the larger programme hereafter and run it up to forty-eight ships, we can get along with about $100,000,000 a year.

Mr. President, I did not intend to consume so much time. Senators will bear me out that on appropriation bills which have been placed in my charge I have not taken any time in making speeches. I have only——

Mr. PROCTOR. We are getting a great deal of very valuable and interesting information, and I should like to ask the Senator from Maine a question on the matter of expense. He has spoken of the programme of the Naval Board as retiring some ships, placing them on the retired list, so to speak—the Oregon, Indiana, and Massachusetts. I should like to ask the Senator what he thinks or what, in the opinion of the Naval Board, would be about the average life of a ship; that is to say, in about how many years would the question come up whether it was worth while to repair the ship, put in all the modern improvements, or relegate her to the scrap heap or to defense purposes?

Mr. HALE. I do not know. One of the communications I had from the Department, which I have already quoted, singled out the Oregon, Massachusetts, and Indiana as not being in the first line of offensive warfare and as being relegated to coast defense. They are none of them yet 10 years old. They were launched, I think, in 1895 or 1896. That is the only answer I can give.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I will state——

Mr. PROCTOR. The point I wish to bring out is whether, with this large number of battle ships—forty-eight—supposing their life for offensive purposes is an average of ten years, whether the expense of renewal would not be very great?

Mr. HALE. If they would last only ten years we should have to build four battle ships every year to keep it good.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. I think I can answer the question of the Senator from Vermont in a certain way. On page 516 of the House hearings Admiral Dewey says:

> The battle ships, you know, cost too much money to be cruising about in uncharted waters. These ships ought to last one hundred years.

It is the largest-sized battle ship which Admiral Dewey advocates as the principal ship for use in our Navy.

Mr. HALE. The German authorities say twenty years.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I was about to say in answer to the Senator from Vermont that a rule prevails in the merchant marine by which they write off 5 per cent of the valuation every year. If the vessel is kept in ordinary repair, that makes the life of an iron or steel vessel about twenty years. I think that our battle ships are good for thirty years, because they are kept in excellent condition, corrosion is not permitted to take place, and they have an ample crew, both in the engineering and deck department, to keep them in good order. I think, therefore, we can safely say that the life of a battle ship is thirty years.

But constantly we are making improvements. As has been stated by the Senator from Maine, our ships to-day are far more effective than many of those which belong to the great navies of the world, because we have profited by their mistakes. We have improved upon their improvements, and to-day our officers can handle our ships more expeditiously, our guns and our parapets and our turrets are all, notwithstanding the criticism, better equipped to-day, and they have given evidence of it wherever they have been in any contest, although the great contest has yet to come, as the Senator from Maine says, and it is experimental in a great measure.

I think that instead of censuring or adversely criticising our officers of the Navy and the boards they are entitled to great credit for what they have accomplished. We as citizens of this great Republic, those of us who have had experience in the maritime service of the country, look at our vessels afloat with admiration, and we will compare them most favorably to our advantage against the ships of any other nationality.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I detract nothing from the merit of the naval officer. When you come to war he will take care of the glory and honor of the American Navy as no other sailor and officer will. They are entitled to our thanks for the labor that they have bestowed, but I have thought it desirable, not in any way unduly finding fault, to bring out actual conditions now and in the future.

We have some responsibility, Mr. President, in the Senate and in the House. We have to raise the money and we have to appropriate it. We have a right to know how it is going, whether it is in the best ways, and whether we will be called upon for larger appropriations with diminishing revenues relatively.

Whether I am charged with factious opposition because I choose in a fair and open way to express my opinion, I am not to be deterred from it by the fact that I may be myself criticised. I am in favor of a great, efficient, powerful navy, and there are certain conditions that oblige us to have a larger navy than we would have otherwise. We have got the Philippines on our hands, 7,000 miles away, and they are our vulnerable point. We have now twenty-four naval ships keeping the peace out there.

Some distinguished officer I saw quoted the other day, who said if the Navy were not there we could not hold the Philippines three months. We have got to have ships there; we have got to have a navy commensurate for that purpose; and it is different from what it would be if we were at home, as the Japanese are, and did our fighting here. If we ever get into war, the first thing we will have to do will be to spend hundreds of millions of dollars in protecting the Philippines.

Therefore I am in favor of keeping up a large navy. But England has only thirty-four battle ships in commission, and with fifty times the colonial possessions we have, over all the globe everywhere, and taking into account the necessity of so large a naval force always in the oriental waters, still I believe that we do not need to keep up such an enormous programme as we carried out last year or as we are doing this year.

Mr. PATTERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine this question: Did he understand from the gentleman to whom he referred why it was that if our Navy were not maintained in the Philippines we would not hold that country three months?

Mr. HALE. No. I only referred to that incidentally. I saw it in some newspaper. I do not quote it as authority, and quite likely it will be denied, although there is great force in the statement——

Mr. CARMACK. I do not understand that remark. I did not hear the Senator's statement.

Mr. HALE. I simply referred to some newspaper item that I saw, that a distinguished military officer, whether in the Army or Navy, had said that without our Navy there we could not hold the Philippines for three months. Now, I do not know who it was, and that is not of the slightest consequence.

Mr. CLAY. I desire to ask the Senator if it is not true that Admiral Dewey, in his testimony before the House committee, testified that without our Navy we could not support the army in the Philippines three months?

Mr. HALE. I do not know whether he went in that testimony so far as that, but he did say pretty nearly that, applying it to a condition of war. Of course, everybody understands that we need and must have, while we hold the Philippines, a large fleet there for any emergency.

Mr. BACON. I should like to get the opinion of the Senator on one point. He is chairman of the committee, and doubtless has given it very considerable thought. I ask it for information, which I am sure the Senator will be glad to give. What is the opinion of the Senator as to the magnitude of the fleet which he has just alluded to, which the retention of the Philippine Islands will make necessary? I am speaking about the part of it that will be necessary for the retention of the Philippine Islands.

Mr. HALE. Now, that I do not know, because I have no expert knowledge as to the adaptation of the naval force to a colonial possession. I sent to the Department this morning and asked them what is the size of our fleet in and about the Philippines and in the Chinese and Japanese seas, and the answer is: "Twenty-four ships in Eastern waters."

Mr. BACON. Without any special information as to their size or character?

Mr. HALE. No, that is not given; but that can be easily obtained.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine another question before he sits down. When we have this large number of ships, whether on the present plan under our appropriations or under a more enlarged plan, will not the ships in time of peace be largely laid up in fresh water somewhere, or will they be required, practically all of them, to be in commission?

Mr. HALE. I am glad the Senator asked that question. It is one consideration that slipped my mind when I was talking. We have, owned by the Government, and only needing to be properly dredged and walled, the best place for a fresh-water naval lake in which to lay up ships that the world has ever seen, and that is League Island. When we took that property, we luckily took a very large extent—five or six hundred acres. It is not like the other navy yards in New York, Norfolk, and Boston, consisting of a comparatively small tract, but it is a great tract. I went there the other day with the Secretary and some of the Pennsylvania delegation, the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], and there is the best place in the world. But the hearings that were taken on the bill for this year showed, as the naval officers said, that they did not want ships put in there; they thought they ought to be kept out, and ought to be around in different parts of the world; that they ought to be protecting our commerce.

If I were the Secretary of the Navy, I will say to the Senator, I should certainly put, just as soon as that place is made available, a considerable portion of the battle ships in there, and they would be where in a few weeks or months they could be put into fighting condition if war blackened on our horizon. But nothing of that kind is contemplated at present. How much the Secretary of the Navy will do in overruling the desire to keep all these ships out I do not know. Of course he can do it.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator stated, I believe, that there are 254 ships now, in the aggregate. Are any of them now laid up?

Mr. HALE. Some of the little yachts, which do not figure much.

Mr. ALLISON. But as a general rule they are all in commission?

Mr. HALE. There are some that are being temporarily laid aside, and perhaps some under repair, and all that; but none of them is in such place as League Island; there are none of the modern ships there.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question? The Senator has given us some very interesting information as to the relative strength of our Navy compared with the navies of other large powers. I confess that the question which I am about to propound to the Senator is one which gives me a great deal of trouble, and which I am not able satisfactorily to answer for myself, or at least I can not answer it satisfactorily to myself.

Is it the Senator's idea that the Navy of the United States should be enlarged with reference to the needs for the protection of our harbors and for the protection of commerce in proportion to the size thereof, or that the size of that Navy should be regulated according to the size of the navies of other nations on the earth? What is the view of the Senator with reference to that? In order that we may have some opportunity to estimate for the future, are we simply to provide a navy to protect our coast efficiently in time of war for our defense, and such additional navy as may be necessary for representatives in different parts of the world for the protection of commercial interests, etc.? Shall that be the basis of limitation, or, on the other hand, shall we go on and regulate our conduct in the enlargement of our Navy in proportion as other nations may see fit to enlarge theirs? What is the view of the Senator with reference to the particular controlling interest which shall be our guide in the future?

Mr. HALE. Well, Mr. President, that is an entirely pertinent question. I do not know how I would answer it. I certainly do not think that we need to be put into any such attitude as Great Britain takes boldly and avowedly, and that is that she will, no matter how much it costs, have a navy bigger than any other two powers. Great Britain does not deny that; it was brought out in the debate the other day on the naval budget. Great Britain made that an essential postulate of her whole doctrine about a navy.

Now, I do not think that we need that, because our situation is entirely different. If we had not any foreign possessions and were at home, as the Japanese are, we have all the Navy now that we would need for any purpose. But we have got these possessions. I shall be glad for one to get rid of them, if we can; but as long as we have them we must have a navy commensurate with protecting them if trouble arises.

Mr. BACON. The Senator, then, as I understand it, gives it as his opinion that the enlargement of the Navy beyond its present proportions is made necessary only by the fact that our jurisdiction has been enlarged by what is popularly known as our "new possessions."

Mr. HALE. I think that is the great factor. When you come to the last additions to the Navy and make it a very large one, that undoubtedly is the largest factor.

Mr. BACON. Now, if the Senator will pardon me, I want to ask him another question. Of course it is recognized, when we speak about a navy that is sufficient for the protection of our commerce, we do not in that contemplate that we shall at each place have a naval force which will be sufficient to meet any naval force which might be brought against it. That is not what we have in view. It simply means that we shall have in different sections the ships which will be necessary to support the authority of the Navy in the protection of its citizens in case of an emergency.

Mr. HALE. We are very differently situated from England in that regard. We have not very much foreign shipping.

Mr. BACON. I am glad the Senator states that as his opinion. That is a pertinent consideration in the question I am about to ask, which is this: Taking that as the particular function and office of our ships in foreign waters, and then considering the needs we have for a navy for the defense of our harbors and coasts, is it or is it not the opinion of the Senator that, those two things considered, the present size of the Navy is ample for the needs of the Government?

Mr. HALE. I will say we have not, unluckily, much merchant marine engaged in foreign trade; and it is growing smaller at that. Great Britain's foreign trade is enormous, increasing all the time all over the globe. We have not that consideration.

We have these possessions, which we have got to protect, and we have this new enterprise, for which everybody has guaranteed us as sponsor—the great isthmian canal. We must have a military force sufficient for that purpose. I say a military force—it is all military, Army and Navy. We have got to have a navy that is ample, if any trouble arises there, to protect that canal, and we will always have. Great Britain has had great pride in her Mediterranean fleet, and, as the years goes by, our main fleet will be in southern waters. That is one of the things which adds to the necessity of a great deal larger navy than we had ten years ago, when we neither had the Philippines, nor Guam, nor Porto Rico, nor Hawaii, nor the isthmian canal on our hands. But without all of those possessions, we need a comparatively small navy.

Mr. BACON. The isthmian canal is, of course, nearer to us and will not be a matter which will require so large an increase of the Navy as is required by those far-distant possessions. Am I correct in that suggestion?

Mr. HALE. No: I think, on the other hand, if any trouble arose, if we had any war with any great European power, we would require a larger fleet of fighting vessels down there than we would in the Philippines.

Mr. BACON. Yes; but I am speaking now of the fact that they are near to us and that the same ships we have at home are available.

Mr. HALE. Yes; we do not need many ships for mere home protection. Our home-port cities are largely protected by fortifications, and with the modern guns and fortifications which have been built and are now building it is supposed that no hostile fleet will ever be able to destroy our cities; and with the line of harbor-defense vessels we have got we are pretty well equipped in that regard.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me for asking one other question, I was very much struck with the statement of the Senator as to the desirability of the ship of the pattern of the Oregon rather than the ship of 16,000 tons burden. I understand, from the statement of the Senator, that he regards the smaller type as fully as efficient as a fighting machine as the larger ship. If I am correct in my understanding, this bill carries a provision for the construction of 16,000-ton ships.

Mr. HALE. For one.

Mr. BACON. For one. That involves a difference of some $3,000,000 in cost, if I understand correctly the opinion of the Senator, without being any more efficient as a fighting vessel. Now, of course, the Senator has a good reason for it, I know, and I simply desire to ascertain what that reason is. Why is it, with the views the Senator has in that matter, that he retains the provision for the 16,000-ton ship rather than substitute a provision for a ship of the pattern of the Oregon?

Mr. HALE. I offered that last year and could not succeed; and as the programme has been cut down from five battle ships to one and we inserted "not more than 16,000 tons," I am willing to leave it to the Secretary of the Navy to determine that.

Mr. BACON. It is not required that this vessel shall be 16,000 tons, but that is the limitation.

Mr. HALE. Yes; that it shall not be more than that.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, on that point just a word. While as a member of the Naval Committee I have been interested in the position which the chairman of the committee has taken in reference to this matter as to the relative value of large ships and the smaller types, such as the Oregon, yet it is but fair to state that on that point there is a very marked difference of opinion. I think perhaps the weight of naval opinion the world over, as well as in our own Department, would be in favor of the large type. I think the chairman of the committee would admit that. I have been necessarily very strongly impressed with the position the chairman of the committee has taken, that the smaller type might become a more effective fighting force than these enormous battle ships; and yet, as I have stated, it is due that it should go in the RECORD that there is a marked difference of opinion on that point among those who are ordinarily recognized as authorities on questions of that kind.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator from New Hampshire permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. MALLORY. As a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, can the Senator tell us whether we have in the Navy to-day any ships of the size of that 13,000-ton battle ship we are now building under the last appropriation act?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think so.

Mr. MALLORY. Have we to-day in commission any battle ship of the type of 13,000 tons?

Mr. HALE. I do not think we have in commission any battle ship larger than 13,000 tons.

Mr. MALLORY. I do not think any of them will reach quite that. I think their tonnage is 12,500 tons.

Mr. HALE. The Kearsarge, the Kentucky, and the Iowa are smaller.

Mr. MALLORY. And those vessels are nearly 2,000 tons larger than the Oregon.

Mr. HALE. Yes; they are larger than the Oregon.

Mr. MALLORY. The vessel provided for in this bill is 2,000 tons larger than they are.

Mr. GALLINGER. Three thousand tons larger than any vessel we now have.

Mr. HALE. Yes; about 3,000 tons.

Mr. President, that is all I have to say.

Mr. PATTERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine a question.

Mr. HALE. Very well. I ask the permission of the Senate to incorporate with my remarks the tables I have given. I also ask that when I have the tables properly arranged they may be printed as a Senate document for the benefit of Congress.

Mr. ALLISON. And in the RECORD?

Mr. HALE. They will be printed in the RECORD with the speech.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the tables presented by him be printed as a Senate document. The Chair hears no objection, and that order is made. The Chair hears no objection to the request that they be printed as a part of his speech.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, I have listened with great interest to the very valuable speech which has been made by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. It has conveyed information which is necessary for our proper consideration of this bill and which is important to the country. The Senator is the greatest authority we have upon naval matters, outside of the experts and professionals, and any remarks he may make in regard to the Navy, its location, or any purposes for which it is to be used will be taken by the country very seriously. He made one observation the effect of which, without explanation, seems to me will be greater than was intended.

The Senator said, as I understood him, that we had twenty-four ships in Eastern waters, and that they were all necessary, according to the report, for the preservation under our flag of the Philippine Islands, and that this authority had stated that the Government of the United States could not hold the islands for three months unless it had a fleet of that size there.

Mr. HALE. No. I simply said that I had telegraphed to the Department to know what was the extent of the fleet in those waters; and that is all I got from the Department. The Department gives no reasons. Then I quoted what I had seen in a newspaper that a distinguished military officer had said we could not hold the Philippine Islands for three months without our Navy there; but I did not claim or assert that the Department had taken that ground.

Another Senator said that Admiral Dewey testified pretty much to that effect before the House Committee on Naval Affairs. I did not intend to say—and nothing that I said would bear the construction—that the Department stated to me that such a fleet was necessary in the Orient for that purpose. I only stated that the fleet is there.

Mr. DEPEW. I understood that the Senator from Maine did not state that the Department had so said; but I did understand him to say that a distinguished officer had made that remark, and I did not understand the Senator to disapprove of the statement. That being the case, it occurred to me that the statement, under such circumstances, virtually had the approval of the Senator from Maine; and if so, it was a very important one, and should be met at once either by a reply from the War and Navy Departments or here.

We have now twenty-four ships in eastern waters, but "eastern waters" are not the Philippines alone. They comprise the whole coast of the Orient. It means that the presence of our fleet in eastern waters is necessary owing to the difficulties which may arise because of the war between Japan and Russia. It means that we are alive to the duties imposed upon us and mean to show our interest in reference to the partition of China, and that we do not mean that any such event shall take place without a serious protest on our part.

If this statement were true, then the War Department or the President has made a great mistake in reducing the army in the Philippines. We began in the Philippines with an army of 70,000 men, and we have reduced it to 15,000, because of the statement which has been made by Governor Taft and the Commission and army officers of the United States in the Philippines that the conditions in the islands are so peaceful that we can maintain order, respect for law, and enforce it and maintain the authority of the United States with these 15,000 men, which have been reduced to 10,000, with the native constabulary. That there are twenty-four ships in the eastern waters, even if difficulties did not exist which now prevail there, would not be surprising when our Navy has become as large as it is. So long as it is in commission and is afloat it must be somewhere. There is a fleet in the Mediterranean, a fleet in the Atlantic, a fleet in the Caribbean Sea, a fleet in the Gulf of Mexico, and a fleet in the Pacific Ocean, and at the present time I should think it eminently wise that the greater part of that fleet is concentrated at a place where it is necessary to protect the interests of the United States, and that is in eastern waters; but I do not at all assent, nor do I believe, that any conditions exist in the Philippines by which we would lose them in three months if we did not have twenty-four of our best ships there for the purpose of maintaining our authority.

Mr. BACON. I should like, with his permission, to ask the Senator from New York a question for information. He says he does not recognize the fact that, in case of war, we would lose the Philippine Islands in three months. Possibly that is not the exact way to put it. But does the Senator conceive that it would be possible for us to hold the Philippine Islands without a fleet that would be sufficient to keep up communication between this country and the Philippine Islands as against any fleet which might seek to interrupt it?

Mr. DEPEW. I will say to the Senator that, in case of war, we would need our fleet there to meet any fleet which was of equal strength belonging to other nations; but, as I understand——

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator please repeat his statement, as, owing to the conversation around me, I was unable to hear it.

Mr. DEPEW. I say that, in case of war, we will probably want a larger fleet there than the twenty-four ships. We would then need a fleet as large as that which would be brought there by the nation with which we were at war. But the point I was addressing myself to was as to a misunderstanding which I thought existed, that, without war, the internal conditions of those islands were such that it would require a fleet to maintain our authority and the internal commerce between the different islands of the archipelago. That condition, however, does not exist.

Mr. BACON. I did not so understand. I supposed the inquiry was directed as to what was necessary in order to protect the islands against a foreign power.

Mr. DEPEW. No; there was no mention or suggestion, I will say to the Senator from Georgia, of a condition of war in the colloquy that was going on between the Senator from Maine and myself.

Mr. BACON. Then I misunderstood the Senator. I understood him to mean—and I was impressed by the fact that he did mean it—that in case of war we could hold the Philippine Islands with twenty-four ships. I think the Senator correctly stated the proposition when he said that in case of war we would require a fleet for the purpose of keeping up communication between the United States and the Philippine Islands which would be sufficient to cope with any fleet that an adverse power might send against it. I think that is a correct proposition. I did not know that the Senator referred simply to the internal conditions.

Mr. DEPEW. I would say, Mr. President, that in case of war the Philippine Islands would be the most valuable possession the United States has to defend, and the most valuable possession we have for the purpose of attack. The great powers of Europe, if they were in trouble with us, would not want to attack us because of our possessions, nor because of our relations with the islands in the Caribbean Sea, or the Gulf of Mexico, or South America, or with Canada. Their assault upon us would be for the purpose of driving us out of the competing trade in the Orient for the purpose of preventing us from competing with them in that market, which is the only one now open to competition to the great producing and manufacturing nations of the world. In case war occurred the first effort would be to take away from us the Philippines, in order that we might not have coaling stations and might not have the ability with which to maintain and to protect whatever commerce we have for the present and might have for the future in the Far East.

The Philippine Islands are proventially and commercially and in every way a most valuable possession for the growing commerce and expanding trade of the United States. They are the place which all the European nations regard as the port from which the United States is to be able to maintain and protect trade with the Orient, because it is nearer than they can be.

Mr. PATTERSON. I want to suggest to the Senator from New York that he apparently disagrees with another distinguished citizen of New York, the late Secretary of War. The theory of the Senator from New York seems to be that the Philippines are a permanent possession, providentially given to us as a means of extending and making permanent our commerce with eastern countries. The late Secretary of War, in what appears to be an authentic interview published in the New York World, which doubtless the Senator from New York has read, gave the country distinctly to understand that the Philippine Islands were being held temporarily only, until such time as they would be fitted for self-government, when the United States would extend to them the same rights and privileges that were extended to the people of Cuba to form and maintain a government of their own, and to live in practical independence.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, I have the greatest respect for my lifelong friend and now constituent, the late Secretary of War, and have the profoundest respect for his opinions on all questions; but if he has given as his judgment that the United States would at some time surrender and give up the Philippine Islands to an independent nation, in the line with Cuba, I do not believe that that condition will ever come about.

I will go one step further. If it does come about, it will be because the United States has educated those people up to a point of self-government where the judgment of the majority here is that they are capable of maintaining that government against the tremendous pressure which would be brought against islands, situated as they are, by all the great powers of Europe to gain possession of them; and if we did give them up, Mr. President, under such circumstances, it occurs to me that we would be compelled to assume obligations infinitely greater than we do while they are colonies of the United States.

While they are colonies of the United States no foreign nation is going to touch them, or going to assail them, or going to undertake to take them from us; but when they become independent, unless we guarantee by our Army and Navy to maintain their independence, in three months there would be a foreign fleet around their coast and a foreign army on their shores. If we do give them up it will only be when we are situated as we are with Cuba, where we have a naval station on one side and a naval station on the other, and she is so surrounded that no foreign nation could approach her under any circumstances.

Mr. PATTERSON. The only thing I desire to bring out is that, at least in the opinion of the distinguished Senator from New York, all propositions for the ultimate independence of the Philippine Islands are arguments of the imagination so far as the party with which he is connected is concerned.

Mr. DEPEW. I want to say to the Senator from Colorado that the opinions which I have expressed are my own.

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. DEPEW. And the party is not responsible for them, nor is the Administration.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desire to make a short reply to what the Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] has said with reference to the probability of war, and the Philippine Islands in such a contingency being the theater of war. I quite agree with the Senator that if we should have a war with a foreign power the Philippine Islands would be the theater of that war, but not for the reason mentioned by the honorable Senator—not because the Philippine Islands are so great a prize that in the event of war there would be an eager effort to secure them by the power with which we might be at war—not for that reason; but it would be the theater of war because every country at war naturally seeks to strike its enemy at its weakest point. For that reason the Philippine Islands would be the theater of war, just as we in our Spanish war did not send our Army to Spain. Even if the island of Cuba had not been involved in the controversy, the island of Cuba would not have been the theater of war between Spain and the United States, because we would naturally seek to strike her in her weakest point, which was in a country 3,000 miles away from Spain's base of supplies.

In case of war, if our enemies sought to make the Philippine Islands the theater of war, we would have to transport not only supplies, but all of our armies across the broad Pacific Ocean; we would have to have every transport convoyed by a fleet of war ships sufficient to meet the combined fleet of the enemy; we would have to have there an army sufficient to meet whatever army might be brought there by a European power, and we would have to supply that army by provisions sent from this country, and the ships carrying the provisions would also have to be convoyed by men-of-war sufficient to meet the combined fleet of the enemy.

I will not elaborate that, Mr. President—we have talked about that a good deal here—but I want to read, in connection with my former inquiry, to the Senator from New York what Admiral Dewey said on the very point which the Senator said was in controversy between himself and the Senator from Maine. I had not seen this document. It is headed, "Statement of Admiral Dewey on Philippine Islands station and naval programme," delivered by him before the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives on the 4th of February of this year. I call the attention of the Senator from New York to the statement of Admiral Dewey. I read from the second page of the document.

Mr. COUSINS asked the Admiral this question:

Admiral, you think the city of Manila could not be defended against battle ships?

Admiral DEWEY. No, sir. I asked General Young the other day, when we were on the joint board, "In case we should have a war—which God forbid!—how long could the Army stay in the Philippines after the Navy left?" He said, "Six weeks; possibly two months." They could get nothing in the islands. We must keep our Navy there, I think, and the Navy must have a protected base.

Of course, by that Admiral Dewey meant that the Navy was absolutely necessary to keep the American Army provisioned in the islands, and that without a navy to keep it provisioned the Army could not stay there six weeks, because it would starve for the lack of provisions; and that would be the case whether it was an internal war or a foreign war.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] said something a while ago about the Panama Canal making it necessary to increase the Navy. I do not exactly agree with the Senator about that, for two reasons: In the first place, under the Hay-Pauncefote treaty we seem to be denied the right to blockade the canal in case of war. Then, again, with that canal built, the speed and facility with which war ships could be transferred from one coast to the other would rather have the contrary effect, it seems to me. It would have the effect of making each battle ship and each coast a defender of the other coast; to make every battle-ship much more effective; so that it would be less necessary to have a large navy after we construct the Panama Canal than it was before. So this immense increase in the Navy that is projected is solely and entirely due to our possession of the Philippines.

Now, Mr. President, with all due respect, I think there is a great deal of wild imagination in what the Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] said about our great and growing trade in the Orient, and the necessity of holding the Philippine Islands for that purpose. I think my distinguished friend from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] absolutely shattered that argument in a speech made here several years ago, when the treaty with Spain was pending, and I should like to hear him and the Senator from New York debate that question between them. I do not think the Senator from Wisconsin left any ground for any probable contention upon that question.

Mr. SPOONER. Has the Senator the utterances to which he refers?

Mr. CARMACK. I quoted them yesterday. I have not got them to-day.

Mr. SPOONER. I was not here then, but I will look in the RECORD.

Mr. CARMACK. They are in the RECORD of this morning, and I should like to have the Senator read them.

Mr. SPOONER. I remember them.

Mr. CARMACK. And especially to have the Senator from New York read them. That will dispose of him without any further argument from me. [Laughter.]

As a matter of fact, Mr. President, the Philippines, with their immense coast line, would be peculiarly subject to attack. I believe to defend the Philippine Islands in case of a foreign war would require a navy as large as or larger than would be required to defend the coast of the United States. It would be necessary also to fortify all the various islands of that archipelago, so that we should have to spend many million dollars every year, hundreds of millions of dollars every year, even in time of peace, preparing for a possible condition of war with a view to this immense trade in the Orient of which the Senator from New York speaks so feelingly. A single war, Mr. President, and the increased expenditures in time of peace, made necessary by our holding the Philippines, will be greater than the profits of all the trade we will ever get in the Orient.

In addition to the statement read by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] from Admiral Dewey, I call attention to a statement made by Admiral Sampson. I quoted it here once before in the Senate. It is published in Mr. Reed's book of Modern Eloquence. It is a speech delivered by Admiral Sampson, in which he said our possession of the Philippines would increase by 100 per cent the danger of a foreign war. So that the danger of our getting into a foreign war is greatly increased by our holding the Philippines, and our defensive strength is immensely weakened by our possession of the Philippine Islands. We are in greater danger of getting into a war and we would be a great deal weaker after we got into the war by reason of holding the Philippines.

The Senator from Georgia called attention a while ago to the fact that we defeated Spain in her island possessions. I think the Senator from Georgia would agree with me that it would have taken ten times as long and would have required ten times the expenditure of blood and treasure to defeat Spain in the Spanish Peninsula that it did to defeat her in Cuba and the Philippine Islands.

Mr. BACON. Undoubtedly; more than that.

Mr. CARMACK. If any other nation in the world could seize and hold a single island in the Philippine Archipelago against the United States, it would be a defeat for the United States. It would require us to bring our fleet and our men and soldiers and transport them 7,000 miles to meet the enemy there, when there is not a nation of Europe that could land a single regiment upon the soil of the United States.

Mr. DEPEW. Will the Senator from Tennessee allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

Mr. DEPEW. How would the foreign nations get their troops there?

Mr. CARMACK. They could get them there a great deal more easily than they could get them here. As the Senator from Wisconsin said in that great speech to which I have just referred—and I am going to let him continue the debate with the Senator from New York—the most distant point would be the point of first attack. There would be the great point of weakness. The Senator from New York and the Senator from Wisconsin can now have it out.

Mr. DEPEW. The Senator from Tennessee bases an argument as to the difficulties of defending the Philippine Islands upon conditions which do not exist. His argument would be all right if Great Britain, Russia, Germany, or France, which are the only nations that could be expected to take any part in a controversy of that sort, had contiguous territory. But those nations would have to mobilize their armies. They would have to carry them through the Suez Canal in order to get them there. They would have as much trouble to take troops there for offense as we would have to take troops there for defense. In the meantime we have a navy upon the sea which would take care of those vast transports which would be necessary to convoy an army that would be efficient for any purpose in the Philippine Islands; and our Navy would make it utterly impossible for such an army to be carried to the Philippine Islands for offensive purposes.

Mr. CARMACK. The Senator is assuming, of course, that we have as great a navy as these other nations.

Mr. DEPEW. I am assuming that we shall have such a navy as is contemplated in this programme, which will make us the second naval power in the world.

Mr. CARMACK. I should like to know what the Senator from Wisconsin has to say in reply to that.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, before the debate is turned over to the Senator from Wisconsin, which I anticipate with very much interest and pleasure, I wish to say something in reply to the Senator from New York about the difficulty that European nations will have in case of war with the United States to transport their troops and supplies and munitions of war to the Philippine Islands. It is a mistake on the part of the Senator from New York that they would have as far to traverse the seas between their bases and the Philippines.

From the Straits of Gibraltar to Singapore is an unbroken chain of British fortresses. Aside from her fleet, every one of them is a base for the collection of supplies and for the massing of troops, and they would have no 7,000 miles to traverse between Singapore, which is one of her possessions, or from Colombo, which is a thousand or fifteen hundred miles farther, or even from any point in India or from Aden, in Arabia, or from the island of Perim, in the lower part of the Red Sea, which is another fortress of Great Britain, or from the island of Cyprus, or from Suez or Port Said or Malta, up to Gibraltar, which all together make a continuous chain of fortresses. It is called "the King's Highway."

It is an easy matter, two or three days' sail only, from Singapore to the Philippine Islands, and not nearly that far. This is to Manila. It is scarcely more than a days' sail from Singapore, one of the British possessions, to a part of the Philippine Islands.

What is true of Great Britain is also true in a less degree of other European nations. Several of them have colonies and dependencies in Asia which serve for military bases, and even from Europe they can transport their troops and supplies through the Red Sea and other southern seas more expeditiously and safely than we can transport a great army and its supplies across the Pacific.

Mr. DEPEW. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia a question.

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. DEPEW. The Senator has been all over that country traveling?

Mr. BACON. It is not necessary to go there to know that. Those are matters of common knowledge.

Mr. DEPEW. The question I would ask him is this: Of course we know the tremendous land forces in numbers and equipment of Russia, Germany, France, and Austria, but how many troops has Great Britain available for foreign invasion? My impression is that that is her weak point, and that she does not possess any number of troops for a foreign invasion which would make her likely to attack for the purpose of conquest any country except a country like——

Mr. BACON. I think the British army is undoubtedly larger than ours, very much larger, to say nothing of the Indian army.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. Do you think Great Britain would attack us anywhere in the world while we have Canada here?

Mr. BACON. That is another matter altogether. We might invade Canada, and we might take Canada——

Mr. STEWART. Would not that be an equivalent?

Mr. BACON. At the same time it would not be defending the Philippine Islands.

Mr. STEWART. Let us take Canada and let her take the Philippines.

Mr. BACON. I am willing to let her take the Philippine Islands and we get nothing in return. I think it is a very great burden upon us, with no compensation.

Mr. STEWART. I think the fact that we could take Canada is the best fortification we have against Great Britain taking the Philippines.

Mr. BACON. I would be glad to make an exchange on very much more favorable terms to Great Britain than those. But we are speaking of the question, in case of foreign war, of the influence upon the war of the possession of the Philippine Islands. Our contention is that it would be the theater of war, 7,000 miles away, with which we must keep up communication, that it would be our weak point, and necessarily add very much——

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me for a moment?

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator was picturing the great danger we were in from Great Britain; that she has a line of forts all along the way. That is all true.

Mr. BACON. I will state to the Senator that I will change it, and instead of Great Britain I will take the little country of Japan.

Mr. STEWART. I think you had better dodge that question. Talk about one at a time. The Senator made his speech on Great Britain. While Canada lies by our side the Philippine Islands are sufficiently protected without a navy. They are sufficiently protected with one boat as against Great Britain. There is no doubt about that. She is not going to get into any fuss with us as long as we are capable of taking Canada. It is all right so far as Great Britain is concerned. As to any others going there and driving us away, I do not apprehend any danger from that source. They do not want the archipelago. They will not fight for it.

Mr. BACON. They do not want the Philippines. None of them want them. They are glad for us to have them.

Mr. STEWART. Yes; I do not think there is any danger of their being taken away from us.

Mr. BACON. Nobody regards them as worth having.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I entirely agree with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] that there is no reason that this country should have a navy as large as that of Great Britain, and when he stated that what he wished us to have was the second navy of the world he went as far, I think, as any sensible man, no matter how enthusiastic for the Navy, desires to go. But the second navy of the world in power and tonnage we ought most certainly to possess. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words on the subject of the expense of such, and it is for this purpose that I have risen to speak.

The Senator from Maine pictured the large expense which the Navy now involves, and said it would probably involve a continued and increasing expenditure. There can be no doubt of that fact, Mr. President. The Navy is a large expense. It is not going to cost any less in the future. It probably will cost more. In my belief there is no money so well expended as that which we spend upon the Navy of the United States.

It was well said in the House not long ago that the Monroe doctrine "is as big as the United States Navy, and no bigger." It might also be said with equal truth that the Navy represents the peace of the United States. Whether we own the Philippine Islands or not, the Navy of the United States is not yet sufficient to guarantee and put above question the peace of this country. There is nothing that would involve this country in war so quickly as the abandonment of the upbuilding of the Navy or ceasing to maintain it at the highest point of efficiency and power.

No position could be worse than that of a nation which, like ours, is rich and aggressive if it is left unarmed and undefended. So long as we have a powerful navy the Monroe doctrine will stand and no one will venture to attack us. The decline of the Navy would mean war. The increase of the Navy means peace and power. The Navy, in a word, is the protection of the country. If we were to abandon the Philippine Islands to-morrow, we should still be obliged to have a naval station in Asiatic waters and maintain there, as we have always maintained, an Asiatic fleet. We should always need chiefly and before everything else a navy amply sufficient to protect our coasts, to uphold the Monroe doctrine, to guard the canal, to maintain our supremacy on the North American continent.

We do not need a navy so large as that of Great Britain. England requires a navy more than equal to the combined navies of any two countries, and if it were not for the navy of England, England's possessions would be torn from her and she would be ruined. She realizes that her defense and her strength rest on her navy, and for us it is just as important that we should have a navy so powerful that nobody will be tempted to attack us.

At this moment we stand fifth in the tonnage of fighting ships. If the present programme is carried out and there is no increase in foreign programmes, we shall soon stand third. But there ought to be no relaxation in the programme upon which we have entered. I do not mean to say that it is necessary to go as far as the naval board very possibly desires, but a steady building of the Navy is essential, in my opinion, to the safety and the peace of the United States.

Criticisms have been made to-day upon the attitude of our naval officers. Mr. President, a naval officer who does not believe that the Navy is the one essential thing and that all his efforts should be directed toward its upbuilding and development is not an officer whom we would desire to have. They, of course, if they have proper professional pride, are looking to the building and efficiency of the Navy and nothing else. They may ask what seems to us extravagant, but let us never forget that in time of stress the officers and sailors of our Navy have never failed. Their record is one of victory always and everywhere.

I do not pretend to pass upon the question of guns within revolving turrets or in barbette. Still less do I pretend to pass upon the question of disappearing gun carriages. We all have the utmost confidence in the judgment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], and yet I think, as laymen, we must be guided by the report of our military officers and not by his opinion. In the Navy, in the same way, we must depend ultimately upon professional judgment. Has that professional judgment misled or misled us in the past? The reply of history is an absolute negative. I think it is certainly a matter of great importance, as the Senator from Maine pointed out, that England has rejected the revolving turret and confines her armament to the barbette. But it does not follow that because we adhere to the revolving turret, which we invented when we put the Monitor afloat, we are necessarily making a mistake. Our officers are fallible; they may be wrong; it may not be the best system; but it is a little hasty to conclude that because other nations have not adopted it therefore it must be a mistake.

Everyone who is familiar with the history of the war of 1812 is aware that in that war we had a type of frigate and a type of armament entirely new to the world, and we won in eleven frigate actions out of thirteen. In that same war we introduced the practice of firing on the descending wave. Up to that time the practice had been to fire on the ascending wave. The system was entirely new when we introduced it, and yet that was one reason why we shot so much better than our opponents did. We revolutionized in that war the method of firing in the old frigates when engaged in action. Anyone who will turn to the book of Sir Howard Douglass, who was the great authority on naval actions, on gunnery, and all questions connected with the navy, will find that all his examples as to single frigate actions are drawn from the war of 1812, and that he admits in that book, which for many, many years was the standard book of the English navy, that the American practice, then introduced, of firing on the descending wave was the true practice and that we had revolutionized naval gunnery to that extent.

I merely cite this to show that it does not follow that because we are the only nation which adheres entirely to the system of revolving turrets we are therefore in error. It may or it may not be so. It is a serious matter that England is so confident that this system is a mistake that she has no ships with revolving turrets, but we, in the long run, must depend upon the opinion of our naval officers who study carefully all that is done by foreign navies.

Mr. President, the question has been raised here as to torpedo boats, and it has been suggested that in a very short time we may not need battle ships because they will be superseded by torpedo boats and destroyers; battle ships should not be built. Torpedo boats and submarine boats have a place, but they can never take the place of fighting ships, because they can not keep to the sea. We must always and first of all have the fighting seagoing fleet. As to the value of torpedo boats, we have seen in the last few years the pendulum swing from one extreme to the other. In our war with Spain much was expected from torpedo boats, but in that war the torpedo boat was a failure, or rather something instead nothing.

Our vessels blockading outside the port of Santiago were in a position most open to a torpedo attack. They were not attacked, and there was, therefore, no evidence in that war that a torpedo boat was particularly useful. Thereupon many persons drew the immediate and hasty conclusion that we did not need torpedo boats at all, and the result may be seen in the fact that we are far behind all other nations in that single branch of the Navy.

Now, there has been a night attack by the Japanese—a very successful one—in which torpedo boats were used upon the Russian fleet at Port Arthur. Apparently they attacked by surprise. The Russian fleet, instead of having searchlights, which would have made the whole bay as light as day, as we illuminated the entrance to Santiago Harbor during the blockade, apparently did not have their searchlights out at all. A fleet of Japanese torpedo boats came in in the darkness. Some of them succeeded in getting home. It is not apparent, moreover, that one of those Russian ships lying there at anchor had out a torpedo net. It is not apparent that their gunnery was sufficiently good to hit the torpedo boats when they saw them.

In our war there was a torpedo-boat attack upon the St. Paul, which was being used as an auxiliary cruiser. The Spanish torpedo boat Terror came out of San Juan and pursued her. When she got within 3 miles—a long distance—the gunner of the St. Paul, with the 5-inch gun, the only heavy gun they had, struck her and sent her to the shore in a sinking condition. If there had been a complete illumination at Port Arthur, if Russian gunnery had been as good as we believe our gunnery to be, and with good reason, it is very probable that the Japanese torpedo attack would have had quite a different result.

Mr. President, neither the extreme opinion that torpedo boats were forever discredited by the results of our war or the opinion which seems to be forming that they are the only kind of vessel now needed, in view of the battle at Port Arthur, is correct. There is no doubt that torpedo boats and submarine boats have their most important uses, but they do not solve the problem. They can not constitute a navy; they are only one necessary part of it. We ought to have more torpedo boats. I have no question about that. It is a branch of our defense in which we are very weak. But it is impossible to substitute for the seagoing fighting fleet torpedo boats and submarine boats.

A word now, Mr. President, about the matter of expense. I have already said that the expense of the Navy is great. The absolute expenditure is very large. I have also stated that, in my judgment, it is likely to continue to increase if we keep the Navy where it ought to be kept. But it has been said here in previous debates that we were not following the practices of the fathers; that we ought to return to their policy and not waste these enormous amounts of money on the military branches of the Government.

There was an important statement made as to that question of present expenditure as compared with our practice in the past in the report of the Secretary of the Navy, and which led me to go into the matter with greater fullness in order to see what the general policy of the United States had been. There is only one way of testing the expenditure on any branch of the Government service, and that is to compare that particular expenditure with all the other expenditures of the Government. To say that we should spend on the Navy what was spent a hundred years ago would be absurd. There is no more relation between that obsolete expenditure and the expenditure to-day than there is between the little population of 5,000,000 and the population of 80,000,000, with the vast extensions of territory that we have made. The only way to arrive at any proper decision as to the amount of naval expenditure and whether it is excessive in comparison with the needs of the country is to take the proportion it bears to the other expenditures of the Government. In that way we can decide what the general policy of the United States has been.

The percentage of naval expenditure to the total expenditures of the Government last year was 17.3 per cent. Taking it by decennial periods, I find that in 1800 it was 46.5 per cent. So whatever the fathers may have done, there is not much doubt about what the grandfathers did. In 1810 it was 31.1; in 1820, 33.4; in 1830, 24.4; in 1840, 25.3; in 1850, 21.2; in 1860, 19.1; in 1870, 13.2 of the total of Government expenditures.

During the last period, from 1860 to 1870, is included all the enormous naval expenditures of the war, and yet the naval percentage has greatly declined—that is, the naval expenditures had risen absolutely very much; but the military expenditures and the other expenditures had risen so much more that the percentage of naval expenditures, instead of advancing, actually fell off.

In 1880 it was 8 per cent; in 1890, 8.4; in 1900, 12.5; in 1901, 12.6 per cent; in 1902, 15.3 per cent, and in 1903 it was 17.3 per cent, as I have stated. I have the table which I have in the kindness of the Secretary of the Navy put out by six or seven years, and I ask to insert it at the end of my remarks. (See Appendix.)

The average annual percentage of naval expenditures from 1800 to 1903 inclusive, has been 22.4 per cent, and the percentage of naval expenditures for 1903 was 17.3 per cent. If last year the average appropriation had been made, it would have been $123,000,000, instead of $[illegible].

In other words, after all the great absolute increases in the Navy of late years, we are still 5 per cent below the average expenditure of this Government on the Navy throughout its history as compared with other expenditures.

In time of war, as I have pointed out in regard to the civil war, the naval expenditures do not increase proportionately. In the time of the Spanish war there was an absolute increase in the Navy, but relatively the naval expenditures were very much smaller than the average of our history. The percentage from previous years fell off. The great relative as well as absolute increase was in the military expenditures. In other words, the naval expenditures are distributed over the years of peace. The expenditure for the Army rises by leaps and bounds to enormous amounts in time of war. A naval vessel must always be prepared for war. The Navy must always be on a war footing. There is no possibility of sending a vessel to sea in any other condition. Hence the peace expenditures for the Navy seem large and the war expenditures, comparatively speaking, seem small.

I think I have shown that our naval expenditures, instead of being excessive, are to-day less—much less—than they were in the first decade of the century, or in any decade down to the period of the war. After the war the Navy fell into a condition of utter neglect. It was a discredit that it should have done so—a discredit to the Government, a discredit to the American people. It was neglected. No money was spent upon it. It fell to a point where it had to be built up from the very beginning. Since 1883 we have been building it up. We have now got a navy which is fifth in tonnage of the fighting force in the world. If the present programmes are continued, in a few years it will be third. I agree with the Senator from Maine that it ought to be second; that it ought to be maintained at the highest efficiency; that we ought to have the best ships. I for one do not grudge the expenditure of a dollar upon the American Navy; I rejoice in all we spend upon it, for behind the American Navy lies the peace of the United States.

APPENDIX.

The following is a comparison of the net ordinary expenditures of the Government with the expenditures for the Navy. The net ordinary expenditures include expenditures for war, Navy, Indians, pensions, and miscellaneous, constituting what may be termed current expenses, and not including payments for interest, premiums, or principal of public debt, or expenditures for postal service.

JULIETTE WESTBROOK.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 5611) granting a pension to Juliette Westbrook, returned by the House in compliance with the request of the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. While the bill was pending in the Senate the beneficiary died. The bill has passed both Houses. The gentleman in the House who had charge of it desired us to bring about its recall in order that it might be disposed of in the Senate. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the vote by which it was passed here be reconsidered and that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being no objection, the vote by which the bill was passed will be reconsidered, and it will be indefinitely postponed.

SHIPPING BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent that there be a reprint of the Philippine shipping bill with amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that there be a reprint of the Philippine shipping bill with amendments. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I desire to present a conference report, in order that it may get to the House to-night.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine presents a conference report.

Mr. HALE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11287) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 7, 8, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 20, 21, 43 and 44.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 19, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, and 42, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by said amendment, and on page 15 of the bill, between lines 16 and 17, insert as a paragraph the following:

"Loanda, Mananjez, Africa."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$496,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

EUGENE HALE,
S. M. CULLOM,
H. M. TELLER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

ROBERT R. HITT,
ROBERT ADAMS, JR.,
HUGH A. DINSMORE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Maine kindly state whether there are any amendments of any importance involved? We hear only the numbers read, and of course know nothing about the items.

Mr. HALE. No: there are none.

Mr. BACON. They are mere matters of detail, small matters?

Mr. HALE. All small.

The report was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12220) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes.

[Mr. MONEY addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, there are several Senators who have said to me that they desire to discuss the bill generally, but prefer to do so to-morrow. If we can go on now with the reading of the bill and dispose of the committee amendments, after that has been done I will ask that the bill go over until to-morrow, so that Senators who desire to speak may have an opportunity to be heard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was under the subhead "Pay of the Navy," on page 2, line 6, after the word "constructors," to insert:

And civil engineers, assistant civil engineers, and professors of mathematics; and that after the passage of this act the pay and allowances of civil engineers and professors of mathematics shall be the same as are or may hereafter be provided for naval constructors, and for assistant civil engineers the same as for assistant naval constructors.

And in line 18, after the word "men," to insert:

And as many warrant machinists as the President may from time to time deem necessary to appoint, not to exceed twenty in any one year.

So as to make the clause read:

Pay and allowances prescribed by law of officers on sea duty; officers on shore and other duty; officers on waiting orders; officers on the retired list; clerks to commandants of yards and stations; clerks to paymasters at yards and stations; general storekeeper; messenger; engineers and other vessels; commutation of quarters for officers on shore not occupying public quarters including heatswains, gunners, carpenters, sailmakers, warrant machinists, boatswains, and mates, and naval constructors and assistant naval constructors and civil engineers, assistant civil engineers, and professors of mathematics; and that after the passage of this act the pay and allowances of civil engineers and professors of mathematics shall be the same as are or may hereafter be provided for naval constructors, and for assistant civil engineers the same as for assistant naval constructors; commutation of quarters for officers on the retired list; pay of retired officers on the retired list; extra pay to men receiving under honorable discharge; interest on deposits by men; pay of petty officers, seamen, landsmen, and apprentices, including men in training camps; marine corps; pay of officers; pay of clerks to officers; pay of professors at Naval Academy; pay of the Marine Corps; 50 men and as many warrant machinists as the President may from time to time deem necessary to appoint, not to exceed 20 in any one year.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 19, on page 26.

Mr. HALE. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 26, after line 19, it is proposed to insert:

Navy-yard, Charleston, S. C.: One clerk, civil engineer's office, $1,400; one [illegible], $1,[illegible]; one draftsman in charge, $1,[illegible]; one storekeeper and typewriter, at $2 per diem, $[illegible]; one mail messenger, at $2 per diem, including holidays, $[illegible]; one messenger and janitor, at $1.50 per diem, including Sundays, $[illegible]; one boilerman and inspector, at $[illegible] per diem, $[illegible]; one hunter of traps, $1,[illegible]; one messenger to commandant, at $2 per diem, $[illegible]; in all $9,093.65.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Also on page 26 the total should be changed to include these figures.

The SECRETARY. On page 26, line 25, it is proposed to strike out the words "one hundred and forty-eight thousand seven hundred and ninety dollars and ninety-two cents" and to insert in lieu thereof "one hundred and fifty-seven thousand eight hundred and eighty-four dollars and fifty-seven cents."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 29, line 14, after the word "dollars," to insert "for the erection of barracks, $200,000," and in line 18, before the word "dollars," to strike out "five hundred and twelve thousand nine hundred and seventy" and insert "seven hundred and twelve thousand nine hundred and seventy;" so as to make the clause read:

Navy-yard, League Island, Pa.: To continue retaining wall about reserve basin, $80,000; grading and paving, to continue, $[illegible]; sewer system, extensions, $[illegible]; electric plant, extensions, $[illegible]; railroad system, extensions, $[illegible]; dredging and filling in Delaware water front, to continue, $[illegible]; water system, extension, $[illegible]; underground conduit system, $[illegible]; fire protection system, extensions, $[illegible]; sea wall extension, $[illegible]; officers' quarters, $[illegible]; extension of reserve basin, to continue dredging, $[illegible]; locomotive crane track, extension, $[illegible]; alterations for naval supply [illegible] to complete, $80,000; for the erection of barracks, $200,000; in all, navy-yard, League Island, $712,950.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 15, to insert the heading, "Navy-yard, Charleston, S. C."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 2 on page 31.

Mr. HALE. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 30, strike out all after the word "dollars," in line 24, down to the end of line 2 on page 31, and insert:

Quay wall, $50,000; dredging, $20,000; locomotive and power house, $5,000; railroad scales, $[illegible]; sewers, $[illegible]; telephone system, $[illegible]; entrance gate and police station, $[illegible]; grading and drainage, $[illegible]; storehouse and storekeepers' offices, to extend, $[illegible]; barracks, $[illegible]; railroad system, extension, $[illegible]; railroad equipment, $[illegible]; tools and machinery for yard and docks workshop, $[illegible]; one officers' quarters, $8,000; in all, navy-yard, Charleston, S. C., $[illegible].

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 31, line 19, after the word "dollars," to insert "for the erection of barracks, $200,000;" and in line 22, before the word "dollars," to strike out "nine hundred and fifty-nine thousand" and insert "one million one hundred and fifty-nine thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

Navy-yard, Norfolk, Va.: Purchase of land, $400,000; * * * improvement to 40-ton locomotive crane, $1,000; for the erection of barracks, $200,000; in all, navy-yard, Norfolk, Va., $1,159,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 11, after the word "dollars," to insert "for improving and enlarging naval prison, $10,000;" and in line 13, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seven hundred and twenty-five" and insert "seven hundred and thirty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

Naval station, Cavite, P. I: Floating steel dry dock, to continue, $725,000; for improving and enlarging naval prison, $10,000; in all, $735,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 7 on page 37.

Mr. HALE. What I send to the desk is a substitute for the part that has just been read.

The SECRETARY. On page 36 it is proposed to strike out all after line 18, down to and including line 7 on page 37, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to construct the several power plants in any or all of the several navy yards and stations, in each navy yard and station, for the generation and distribution of light, heat, and power, for all the purposes of the Navy. The [illegible] such electric light plants now in existence under the control of the several bureaus may be reassigned or transferred to the control of [illegible] of such bureaus or bureaus as may in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy [illegible], having in view the various kinds of power required, as may [illegible] the necessity for the most efficient and economical work in connection with [illegible] the fleet, and the avoidance of duplicate [illegible] and all appropriations [illegible] for power [illegible] and power plants for the various bureaus are hereby [illegible] under the Secretary of the Navy, for the purposes [illegible] provided for; and to further carry out the purposes of this provision there is hereby appropriated the sum of $[illegible].

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 37, line 17, to increase the total appropriation for public works from $6,565,574 to $7,632,071.

Mr. HALE. The total should be changed so as to read "$7,856,000.71."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 21, after the word "construction," to insert "and furnishing;" so as to make the clause read:

Buildings and grounds, Naval Academy: Toward the construction and furnishing of buildings, and for other necessary improvements, at the Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., as authorized by the acts of Congress approved June 7, 1900, and March 3, 1903, $3,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, after line 22, to insert:

Naval training station, Great Lakes: The purchase of land and the establishment of a naval training station on the shore of Lake Michigan, south of latitude 42° 20′, $[illegible].

Mr. FORAKER. I have just come into the Chamber. Do I understand that the Secretary is reading at the foot of page 38?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At the foot of page 38.

Mr. HALE. There is an amendment at the bottom of the page to which an amendment will be offered. I shall ask that the matter go over until to-morrow.

Mr. FORAKER. May I ask what is the amendment to the amendment?

Mr. HALE. I do not know.

Mr. FORAKER. I am very much interested in it. There has been quite a desire on the part of many people in my State to have this naval training school or station located at Put in Bay, and I see by the language of the amendment that the Secretary of the Navy would have no discretion. Is it intrusted to the Secretary of the Navy? Under this provision it could not be located there.

Mr. HALE. It could not, undoubtedly. All of that will come up in the morning, however, and the Senator can offer any amendment he pleases. Undoubtedly some Senator will move to strike it out of the bill entirely. I do not wish to have it disposed of in this then Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. The reason I break in now and want to have some understanding about it is that I am engaged in committee in the investigation of the Smoot case and may not be here. We are very much occupied by that case, and I would be very glad to know what is the amendment to the amendment which will be offered?

Mr. HOPKINS. Perhaps the Senator from Wisconsin can enlighten both the Senator from Ohio and myself on that subject.

Mr. QUARLES. I am entirely willing to discuss the amendment which I propose to offer to the amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well. I shall be glad to have it read. Under the circumstances I hope the Senator from Maine——

Mr. HOPKINS. Let it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HALE. Yes; let it be read and printed.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. QUARLES. I offer it as an amendment to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin wishes to have read an amendment, which he will propose at the proper time.

The SECRETARY. On page 39, in line 2, after the word "dollars," in committee amendments, it is proposed to insert the following:

That the President be authorized and commanded to appoint a board consisting of [illegible] of any State [illegible] Michigan, engineer officer [illegible] and having selected suitable [illegible] report its proceedings and the information [illegible] to be necessary for [illegible] ties; and to make [illegible] their findings and recommendations to the President, to be transmitted by [illegible] and such sum or sums, not exceeding $[illegible] as may be necessary, to be immediately available, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HALE. That is offered as a substitute for the clause?

Mr. QUARLES. It follows the clause; it comes at the end of the clause.

Mr. FORAKER. It would be a substitute for what is in the bill?

Mr. QUARLES. I do not so understand it. It is in addition to what is there.

Mr. FORAKER. Oh! I noticed that it came in after the word "dollars," but I see that the word "dollars" ends the committee amendment.

Mr. QUARLES. It is in the second line on page 39.

Mr. FORAKER. I will say right now that if it comes in there I can not be satisfied with it, because it requires the station to be located on the shore of Lake Michigan.

Mr. SPOONER. But the act which this amendment was intended to carry out referred solely to Lake Michigan. If the Senator wants one on Lake Erie, that is another thing.

Mr. FORAKER. That may be; but we want this naval training station located at Put in Bay, if we can secure it.

Mr. SPOONER. This particular one?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; this particular one. It is the only one which we expect will be established in the near future, and we want it. At any rate, we do not want its location confined to Lake Michigan. I do not know whether or not we would have any chance to get it there, but we ought to have at least a chance to present that site, which is a very good one. The officials of the Navy Department told me it was the best one they had found anywhere, measured by the requirements of such a station, and certainly we ought not to be excluded from consideration.

Mr. HOPKINS. Senators will have an opportunity, as the matter is to go over, to offer in the morning amendments to suit their own localities.

Mr. FORAKER. It seems to me it might very well be agreed that this board should have power within its discretion to locate the station anywhere on the lakes.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the fact that a board has been appointed and has investigated this matter, and has made certain recommendations. Put in Bay, I understand, has received entire and adequate consideration, and there are objections to the location which will influence the Senator himself, I think, when he comes to consider it, to abandon his idea.

Mr. HALE. The amendment is going over. Nothing will be done to-night. I wish Senators would let me go on and finish the reading of the bill.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will bear with me a moment further—I understand his impatience, and I do not wish to try him unduly—because of what the Senator from [illegible] seems to me it is not asking any too much that we may be allowed to present the claims of Put in Bay.

The Senator from Illinois says those claims have been presented and have been considered and have been passed on in comparison with others. All we ask is that we shall not be excluded. If a board are to be appointed, they ought to be free to consider all locations that may be offered. It may be that we may have no chance whatever. I know something about Put in Bay. I do not know any thing about any of the others. It may be that the others are far preferable.

Mr. HOPKINS. I see no reason for the adoption of the amendment proposed to be offered by the Senator from Wisconsin. In my judgment, it would be a very great mistake on the part of the Senate to adopt the amendment, as I shall endeavor to show if the Senators from Wisconsin persist in their efforts to have it adopted as a part of the amendment that is now proposed by the Naval Committee.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Wisconsin does not propose the amendment. He simply asks that it be printed and go over until to-morrow.

Mr. FORAKER. I know, but it will be presented as an amendment which he proposes to offer to the bill at the proper time, and I am taking as much time about it as I can simply because I am afraid I can not be here when the amendment is presented for action.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to state to the Senator from Ohio that in Senate Document No. [illegible] he will find the full report of the naval board with a consideration of the claims of Put in Bay. I am in hearty accord with the amendment of the Senate Naval Committee and opposed to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

If every Senator from a State bordering on the Great Lakes is coming here with his claims, I shall have to be heard in behalf of the City of Erie; but I am willing to yield the claims of that locality in view of the overwhelming verdict of the naval board appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, who gave the matter careful consideration, and whose findings, in Senate Document No. 45, ought to be acceptable to every Senator.

Mr. SPOONER. We ought to be permitted to support the amendment before it is antagonized by the committee, I think.

Mr. FORAKER. I wish to say to the Senator from Pennsylvania, in answer to his remarks, that the reason why I insist upon having the amendment so framed as to give us a chance to be heard is that if the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin should be adopted there is to be a new board appointed. That board is to take everything into consideration, and it ought to be allowed to act de novo. I will not delay longer, because I recognize the desire of the Senator from Maine to proceed with the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be passed over for the present.

Mr. HALE. Let the reading of the bill be proceeded with.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 39, line 11, to increase the total appropriation for public works, Bureau of Navigation, from $41,125 to $[illegible],125.

Mr. HALE. That is the total. It will go over with the other amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 12, to insert:

Naval magazine, New England: For the purchase of land for a site for a naval magazine [illegible] New England [illegible] and [illegible] of the necessary buildings, of repairing and [illegible] of the necessary wharves and cranes, of railroad tracks and rolling stock for local service, of fire and water service, and of the equipment of the establishment, $70,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, and the Secretary of the Navy may employ, and pay out of the appropriation hereby authorized, such additional expert aids, surveyors, architects, superintendents of construction, or draftsmen as may be necessary for the preparation of the plans and specifications and prosecution of the work authorized, to an amount not to exceed $15,000: Provided, That the total cost of the establishment, complete in all respects, shall not exceed the sum of $[illegible]: And provided further, That should the Secretary of the Navy be unable to purchase the land for the site from the owners thereof at a fair and reasonable valuation, he is hereby authorized and directed to institute proceedings for the condemnation of such part or parts thereof as may be necessary: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to discontinue the magazine now in the city of Chelsea not later than the time when the new magazine for the New England coast is ready to be occupied.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, line 8, to increase the total appropriation for public works, Bureau of Ordnance, from $248,900 to $318,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to page 45, line 2.

Mr. HALE. On page 45, after line 2, I move to insert:

Naval hospital, Canacao, Philippine Islands: Naval hospital at Canacao, Philippine Islands, to complete, $70,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was under the subhead "Supplies and accounts," page 45, line 22, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That pay department stores may be sold to civilian employees at naval stations beyond the continental limits of the United States and in Alaska, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 24, page 51.

Mr. HALE. I move, on page 51, after line 24, to insert:

To place the frigate Constitution, as near as may be, in the same condition as regards hull and rigging as she was when in actual service, for use as practice, training, or receiving ship, $400,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment was under the subhead "Naval Academy," on page 58, line 2, after the word "Academy," to strike out the following:

One professor as head of department of physics, $3,000.

One professor as head of department of modern languages, to be appointed with the rank and pay of a professor of mathematics of the rank of commander, and to be carried as an extra number in the list of professors of mathematics in the Navy.

One professor of mathematics, one of chemistry, and one of English, at $2,500 each; four professors, namely, one of English, one of French and Spanish, one of French, and one of drawing, at $2,200 each; one assistant professor of Spanish, at $1,800; ten instructors, at $1,500 each.

And to insert:

One professor as head of the department of physics, $3,000.

That the President be authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint a professor of mathematics of the rank of commander, to rank after Aaron Nichols Skinner and to be an extra number in the list of professors of mathematics in the Navy.

One professor of mathematics, one of chemistry, one of English, one of French and one of Spanish, at $2,500 each.

Four professors, namely, one of English, one of French, one of drawing, and one of Spanish, at $2,200 each.

Three instructors, at $1,800 each.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask the Senator from Maine why this radical change is made in the organization of the academy? I observe that it is a very radical change.

Mr. HALE. Yes; but not so rapid as the increase down there, where we used to have 340 students, and in another year we shall have 900. It becomes essentially necessary. It is a very conservative programme, and it is absolutely necessary by reason of the increase of the academy.

Mr. GORMAN. There is an actual decrease, for instance, in the instructors. There is a reduction from ten to three.

Mr. HALE. I have an amendment from the Department which cures that.

Mr. GORMAN. Very well.

Mr. HALE. I will send the amendment to the amendment to the desk. It is to come in after line 6 on page 59.

The SECRETARY. On page 59, after line 6, insert:

Four instructors, at $1,800 each; ten instructors, at $1,500 each.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 19, page 60.

Mr. HALE. The total should be changed. On page 60, line 18, after the word "all," I move to strike out "$78,922.52" and insert in lieu thereof "$95,322.52."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 24, page 62, in the items for the Naval Academy.

Mr. HALE. I move to change the total. On page 62, line 22, I move to strike out "$311,708.46" and to insert in lieu thereof "$[illegible],108.46."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, after line 24, to insert:

That, subject to the restrictions imposed by existing law, boatswains, gunners, and warrant machinists shall be eligible for appointment to the grade of ensign after two years' service as warrant officers, and boatswains, gunners, carpenters, and sailmakers shall be eligible for appointment as chief boatswains, chief gunners, chief carpenters, and chief sailmakers after six years from date of warrant.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Marine Corps," on page 63, line 22, after the word "orders," to strike out "including additional compensation for enlisted men of the Marine Corps regularly detailed as gun pointers, $8,000, $1,378,628" and insert "including additional compensation for enlisted men of the Marine Corps regularly detailed as gun pointers, messmen, signalmen, or holding good-conduct medals, pins or bars, $15,000; $1,380,628;" so as to make the clause read:

Pay of noncommissioned officers, musicians, and privates, as prescribed by law, and the number of enlisted men shall be exclusive of those undergoing imprisonment with sentence of dishonorable discharge from the service, at expiration of such confinement, and for the expenses of clerks of the United States Marine Corps traveling under orders, including additional compensation for enlisted men of the Marine Corps regularly detailed as gun pointers, messmen, signalmen, or holding good-conduct medals, pins, or bars, $15,000; $1,380,628.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, line 23, to increase the appropriation for the salary of one clerk in the assistant quartermaster's office, Philadelphia, Pa., from $1,400 to $1,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 1, page 66, in the clause for "pay of civil force."

Mr. HALE. On page 66, line 1, I move to strike out "$28,711.28" and insert in lieu thereof "$28,911.28." It is an increase in the total made necessary by the last amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, after line 8, to insert:

That officers of the Marine Corps with creditable records who served during the civil war shall, when retired, be retired in like manner and under the same conditions as provided for officers of the Navy who served during the civil war.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Increase of the Navy," on page 73, line 13, after the word "each," to strike out "But the appropriations provided for said colliers shall not be used unless one of said colliers be built in a navy-yard of the United States" and insert "Said colliers shall be built in navy-yards, one on the Pacific and the other on the Atlantic coast, the same to be designated by the Secretary of the Navy;" so as to make the clause read:

Two colliers, to be capable of accompanying the battle fleet; to carry 5,000 tons of cargo coal, loaded, and to have a trial speed of not less than 16 knots, to cost not exceeding $1,250,000 each. Said colliers shall be built in navy-yards, one on the Pacific and the other on the Atlantic coast, the same to be designated by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. HALE. Let that amendment go over until to-morrow at the request of other Senators.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was continued to page 75, line 15.

Mr. HALE. In line 15, on page 75, before the word "submarine," I move to insert "torpedo or."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 75, line 15, before the word "submarine," it is proposed to insert "torpedo or;" so as to read:

The Secretary of the Navy, who may purchase or contract for subsurface or submarine torpedo boats in a manner that will best advance the interests of the United States in torpedo or submarine warfare.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 75, line 16, after the word "further," to strike out:

That before any subsurface or submarine torpedo boat is purchased or contracted for it shall be accepted by the Navy Department as fulfilling all reasonable requirements for submarine warfare and shall have been fully tested to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy.

And insert:

That before any subsurface or submarine torpedo boat or boats are purchased or accepted by the Navy Department they shall have been fully tested to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy and shall fulfill all reasonable requirements for submarine warfare: Provided also, That the boats contracted for under this act shall be constructed in accordance with the plans and specifications of the contractor.

So as to make the proviso read:

And provided further, That before any subsurface or submarine torpedo boat or boats are purchased or accepted by the Navy Department they shall have been fully tested to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy and shall fulfill all reasonable requirements for submarine warfare: Provided also, That the boats contracted for under this act shall be constructed in accordance with the plans and specifications of the contractor. To carry out the purpose aforesaid the sum of $[illegible] is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; and to make up said sum of [illegible] the sum of $500,000 carried, or such parts thereof as may remain [illegible] in the naval appropriation act approved March [illegible] reappropriated.

Mr. HALE. In line 24, on page 75, after the word "for," at the end of the line, I move to amend the amendment by inserting the words "torpedo or;" so as to read, "for torpedo or submarine [illegible]."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I shall ask that the bill be taken up to-morrow morning after the routine morning business. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator withhold that motion for a moment to enable the Chair to lay before the Senate a message from the President of the United States?

Mr. HALE. I withdraw the motion for that purpose.

FORT HALL INDIAN RESERVATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate:

In compliance with the resolution of the Senate of the 1st instant, [illegible]

[illegible]

WASHINGTON, MARCH 3, 1904.

Mr. BURNS submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

[illegible] That the Senate, the House of Representatives concurring, that the action of the Senate in the amendment to the bill (H. R. 12383) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes, be, and the same is hereby, [illegible] in the bill.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HALE. I now renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and at (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, March 4, 1904, at 12 o'clock m.

CONFIRMATIONS.

THURSDAY, March 3, 1904.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PIPE LINES THROUGH INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. CURTIS submitted the following conference report and statement [illegible] in the RECORD under the rule:

[illegible] of the House.

That the Senate recede from its [illegible] and conditions as he may deem [illegible]

CHARLES CURTIS,
[illegible],
[illegible],
Managers on the part of the Senate.

[illegible],
Managers on the part of the House.

[illegible] 14 and 15, on page [illegible] the words "the act approved January [illegible] and insert in lieu thereof the words "existing law."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

[illegible] of the peace: For ten justices of the peace, at $2,000 each, and the [illegible] sum of $300 each for rent, stationery, and other expenses; in all, $[illegible].

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question about these justices of the peace. Do they receive fees in addition to these salaries?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. They do not, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. CLARK. What becomes of the fees that are charged?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. They are covered into the Treasury.

Mr. PUJO. I should like to ask a question of the chairman of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. PUJO. Are justices of the peace in the District of Columbia required to be lawyers? Are they qualified lawyers or not?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. The law requires that they shall have been admitted to the bar.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTEREST AND SINKING FUND.

For interest and sinking fund on the funded debt, $975,408.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I rise for the purpose of answering the remarks made here some days ago in the debate on another section of this bill.

Long [illegible] the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT] made the following statement, which I will read from the RECORD:

Mr. SCOTT. The reply of the gentleman from Kentucky to the last question which I asked him was a good illustration of what I think the lawyers call [illegible] a good plea in any court.

[illegible] I have fresh in my memory, however, and I have asked [illegible] in order to give some information to gentlemen on the other side of the House who will no doubt be interested in it.

And we were, Mr. Chairman, interested in what he was about to say.

During the first Administration—

of Mr. Cleveland a negro from Kansas was brought to Washington, taken to the White House, introduced to the President, and by him invited to remain and sit at the table at luncheon, an invitation which I need not say was promptly accepted.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman state who it was that introduced the negro, and upon whose authority the gentleman is making this statement?

Mr. SCOTT. I make the statement on my own authority.

Mr. COCHRAN. Were you present?

Mr. SCOTT. I was not present, but one of my colleagues will corroborate me as to the fact.

Mr. COCHRAN. Who was this negro?

Mr. SCOTT. It was C. H. J. Taylor, afterwards appointed register of deeds for this District by President Cleveland. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, in one sense this is new legislation, but I hope the gentleman from Indiana will reserve his point of order instead of making it now, so that a few words of explanation may be made.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I reserve it.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, undoubtedly this paragraph is subject to a point of order if the gentleman insists upon it, but I trust he will not insist upon it, for this reason: The marshal of the District and the clerk of the court of appeals of the District are subject to this same kind of a provision, and this provision was always in the laws applying to the District until the recent Revised Code struck out that provision, which is simply an enumeration of the number of things that the Code did which ought not to have been done. The gentleman whom [illegible] is allowed fees not to exceed $[illegible], but the fees actually received in his office far exceed that sum. Of course, it is always easy for him to employ enough people to use up all the fees beyond the $6,000. It is felt by the Committee on Appropriations that the District of Columbia ought not to be required to pay these fees, because these fees are not at all necessary to make up the legitimate fees of the office, and the officer and necessary assistants would be well paid without them.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist on the point of order?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph against which this point is raised proposes clearly to enact new legislation—a change of existing law—and is subject to the application of Rule XXI. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I ask unanimous consent to return to the paragraph last read for the purpose of offering a [illegible]

There was no objection; and the proposed amendment of Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota was read, as follows:

[illegible] 14 and 15, on page [illegible] the words "the act approved January [illegible] and insert in lieu thereof the words "existing law."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. They are covered into the Treasury.

Mr. PUJO. I should like to ask a question of the chairman of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. PUJO. Are justices of the peace in the District of Columbia required to be lawyers? Are they qualified lawyers or not?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. The law requires that they shall have been admitted to the bar.

The Clerk read as follows:

During the first Administration—

of Mr. Cleveland a negro from Kansas was brought to Washington, taken to the White House, introduced to the President, and by him invited to remain and sit at the table at luncheon, an invitation which I need not say was promptly accepted.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman state who it was that introduced the negro, and upon whose authority the gentleman is making this statement?

Mr. SCOTT. I make the statement on my own authority.

Mr. COCHRAN. Were you present?

Mr. SCOTT. I was not present, but one of my colleagues will corroborate me as to the fact.

Mr. COCHRAN. Who was this negro?

Mr. SCOTT. It was C. H. J. Taylor, afterwards appointed register of deeds for this District by President Cleveland. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

I wish to call the attention of the House one moment to the difference in the character of these two men. Commenting Booker Washington, the least that can be said of him is that he is a good man. But I think it is believed he said that if he had a white skin it would be considered an honor by any gentleman to know him; that he is a gentleman and a scholar. So much of a scholar that he has been given an honorary degree of master of arts by Harvard University; so much of a gentleman that he was invited by the president of Harvard University to sit at his table to lunch with Gen. Nelson A. Miles, who received the same honorary degree from the same university at the same time; so much of a gentleman that he has been entertained by Queen Victoria at Windsor Castle; so much of a scholar that a medal of a college faculty of one of the southern colleges recently conferred upon the foremost living American, for which utterance he was promptly called to task by his associates. But, I am glad to say, that it was declared by the authorities of the college that they held free speech.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. I have only five minutes, and I decline to yield. I have alluded to the character of Booker Washington not because he needs any praise from me, but because I want to call attention—

Mr. MADDOX. I want to say to the gentleman from Kansas that the designation was that he was second to Robert E. Lee.

Mr. SCOTT. I am not quite the designation exactly, for I do not remember it. Probably the gentleman is correct. But from his standpoint I suppose I would be considered quite a compliment to be named as second to Robert E. Lee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. BURKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana asks that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I will yield the gentleman five minutes of time.

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to the gentleman [illegible] that the faculty did rebuke this professor for making that utterance, but did say that he had a right to it as enjoying the liberty of speech.

Mr. SCOTT. They rebuked him for making the utterance, but they did not attempt to say that the utterance was not true. They rebuked him because they were forced to do so by the public sentiment of their constituents.

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. The gentleman was interest[illegible] utterance expressed [illegible] he did not mean it. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SCOTT. I did not question for the gentleman and his friends on that side [illegible]

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. He said he did not mean to say that he was the greatest [illegible] but the greatest [illegible]

Mr. SCOTT. A fact [illegible] by every Member on this floor [illegible] that if Booker Washington had a white skin, any one of us would [illegible] on terms of equality.

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. Why does not the gentleman receive him, having a black skin?

Mr. SCOTT. We do receive him in every proper way.

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. Does the gentleman mean to say that he receives him as his equal?

Mr. SCOTT. Not as my social equal—

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. The black skin is the cause of it, is it not?

Mr. SCOTT. The black skin, and the prejudice, and all that. I recognize that as fully as the gentleman does. I am not standing here if the gentleman will allow me—

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. We are alike, then. The gentleman has the same prejudice that we have—on account of the skin. There is no difference between us on that.

Mr. SCOTT. I am not standing here to make a plea for social equality. We all know that is impossible. I do not stand for that any more than Theodore Roosevelt did when he invited Booker T. Washington to his luncheon, and any more than President Eliot did when he invited Booker T. Washington to his luncheon, any more than Grover Cleveland did when he invited C. H. J. Taylor to his luncheon. I have alluded to the character of Mr. Washington, which everybody in the country recognizes, because I wanted to point a contrast between the man whom the Republican President of the United States invited at his table and the man whom the Democratic President of the United States received at his table. Who was C. H. J. Taylor? He was a black negro, as black as you ever saw. He had been a ward heeler, and working there in Minnie of Kansas City, Kans. He had no great amount of talent to his credit. He had no education to speak of; he had nothing to recommend him to any man's consideration, particularly nothing to commend him to the consideration of any Democrat, except the presumption that he commanded some negro votes in his vest pocket and could deliver them to the Democratic party.

For that reason, and for that reason only—for the reason that he had promised that if he were given this position here in Washington he would turn the negro vote in Kansas from the Republican party to the Democratic party—he was brought here to Washington by some Democratic members of Kansas, taken to the White House, introduced to the President, sat at the table, and afterwards paid the price by receiving the appointment of register of deeds of this District.

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. Does the gentleman approve of Grover Cleveland asking that negro to dine with him and dining with him? Does the gentleman approve of that?

Mr. SCOTT. I do not approve of it, because I know the character of the man. I would not invite to him to my house if he were a white man.

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. Because he is a Democratic negro—is not that it?

Mr. SCOTT. That is not the reason. It is because the man is utterly without character, without education, without culture, or anything to commend him to the consideration of a good man.

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. Who introduced that negro to the President? The gentleman said his colleague was present when it was done.

Mr. SCOTT. I did not say that. I simply said my colleague was cognizant of the fact.

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. Did not a Republican from Kansas introduce him to the President?

Mr. SCOTT. Oh, no; by no means. I have already said he was introduced by a Democrat.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have alluded to this matter, not to apologize for President Roosevelt, who needs no apologies, but merely to call attention to the glaring inconsistency which goes into hysterics over a courtesy paid to a man of admitted high character and who has done and is doing a splendid and noble work, while utterly ignoring a similar attention paid to a man without standing, or character, or accomplishment, and whose only claim to consideration was the presumption that he could swing a certain number of votes. [Applause on the Republican side.]

At three separate and distinct places in this RECORD, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT] says that Mr.

Cleveland during his first term invited this negro, whom he calls a very black negro, to dine with him, and states emphatically that the negro did so.

It often happens, Mr. Chairman, that a man in trouble hopes to get out by trying to pull others in, and that seems to have been the predicament of the gentleman from Kansas when he deliberately stated to this House "on his own authority," on his own responsibility, that Mr. Cleveland had invited a negro by the name of C. H. J. Taylor to dine with him, and that the negro accepted the invitation and did dine with him.

As soon as the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD reached me on the next morning after this debate, containing the gentleman's assertions, I wrote to Mr. Cleveland and asked him if it were true that he had thus dined Taylor, and told him if it were not true I wanted to deny it on the floor of this House. I cut out the part of the RECORD in which Mr. SCOTT's statement appeared and sent it to the distinguished ex-President. This morning I received from him the following letter, written and signed in his own hand:

PRINCETON, March 2, 1904.

Hon. E. Y. WEBB, House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: It is a matter of small concern to me that a Mr. SCOTT has seen fit to use my name in a display of his evil propensities on the floor of the House of Representatives.

[Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

In answer to your inquiry, however, I have to say of his statement that the colored man, C. H. J. Taylor, took lunch with me at the White House that it is a deliberate fabrication out of the whole cloth.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

As far as Mr. Taylor is concerned, I understand, prior to his appointment as register of deeds at Washington, that he had served as an assistant in the office of the city attorney at Kansas City.

Mr. COWHERD. Kansas City, Kans.

Mr. WEBB. Yes, not Missouri. [Reading:]

His nomination as register was confirmed by the Senate, and he served in that place with intelligence and efficiency. He has since died. Some people restrain themselves from abusing the dead.

My impression concerning Mr. Taylor had no his appointment, my observations of him during his incumbency, and the little I have known of Representative SCOTT's character is very unjustly [illegible] in the instance of Mr. SCOTT.

One charge is made against Mr. Taylor by Mr. SCOTT which he doubly charges with truth when he declares, "He was a black negro." I am led, however, to doubt his fastidiousness with respect when he adds, "as black as you ever saw."

Yours, very truly, GROVER CLEVELAND.

This is Mr. Cleveland's statement, and I presume it will be accepted as conclusive by the gentleman from Kansas and by every American citizen. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, it does seem that the statement of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT] is a fabrication, not only so far as the dining is concerned, but even as to the color of the negro himself. I understand from the gentleman from Missouri that he was a ginger-cake negro, and that the "black as you ever saw" statement is a fabrication out of the whole cloth also, as the distinguished ex-President writes.

It is said, Mr. Chairman, that a falsehood travels around the earth while truth is putting on its boots. If that is true, I wish the truth stated in the letter of Mr. Cleveland be put in the same channels, as far as possible, that the falsehood has traveled, in order that it may possibly overtake that falsehood in the minds of some men and eradicate and destroy it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WEBB. I ask for two minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to continue his remarks for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Cleveland was a friend of the negro, but not a "fool friend," and that term has a well-defined meaning among people who understand the negro race. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Never by a word or act, so far as I know, did he encourage the dream of social equality in the breast of the black man. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He was a friend of the colored race in America, but he was a friend of the Southern white man as well. He always sympathized with the Southern white man in his race troubles, his race problems, and his race burdens; and that, sir, I regret to say, is more than Mr. Roosevelt seems ever to have done. I am obliged to the committee for this opportunity of correcting the falsehood. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, there never sat in the White House a man whose word, speaking about anything of which he professed to have personal knowledge, I would not at once accept. I therefore accept the statement made by ex-President Cleveland that I was in error when I stated here on the floor the other day that he had entertained at luncheon in the White House a negro from Kansas; and I tender my apology to the ex-President of the United States.

I feel as if it were due myself, however, to say to this House that until this letter was read I have never heard the fact or the allegation to which I alluded denied.

Mr. THAYER. Did you ever hear it made publicly before?

Mr. SCOTT. I am just going to state what I have heard.

Mr. THAYER. There was no occasion to deny it, when it had never been made.

Mr. SCOTT. I remember distinctly that when Mr. Taylor came back from Washington, preceded by the announcement that he had been appointed to the office of recorder of deeds in the District of Columbia by President Cleveland, his friends met him at the Union Depot, Kansas City, with a carriage to which were attached four white horses. A committee was with the carriage, and he was escorted to a public hall, where a reception was tendered him, and according to the newspaper reports of the event, he there boasted that——

Mr. COCHRAN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SCOTT. Let me finish this sentence.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. SCOTT. At the reception he boasted, as reported in the papers, that, notwithstanding the professions of good will to the negro always heretofore made by the Republicans, it remained for a Democratic President to entertain at his table in the White House for the first time a negro. That matter was published very broadly and so generally throughout the State of Kansas that it was impressed upon my memory, and I never, as I have said, heard it denied before.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. What evidence have you that he ever made that boast?

Mr. SCOTT. No evidence but newspaper reports.

Mr. THAYER. Have you got any clippings of newspapers?

Mr. SWANSON. Will the gentleman permit me?

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen desiring to interrupt must address the Chair.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. SCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. Will the gentleman be kind enough to get a single paper containing that and produce it here? I suppose they keep files of the papers in Kansas, where that statement was published, and the gentleman can get a copy of such paper and present it to the House.

Mr. SCOTT. Well, that is a matter of twenty years ago. I do not know whether I could obtain one or not, but I am going there shortly and I shall certainly investigate the matter.

Mr. MADDOX. Eighteen hundred and eighty-two.

Mr. SWANSON. If a newspaper statement exists, and if the gentleman wants to be fair and just and accurate, he has every opportunity to examine the records, and if it is true, as asserted, I would like him to bring to this House one paper from Kansas that made that statement.

Mr. SCOTT. I have not had any opportunity thus far. The gentleman from Virginia will admit that I have had no opportunity in the last two minutes to search the records. I am simply giving my recollection about this matter. I have made what I consider an ample apology to Mr. Cleveland for any misrepresentation I may have inadvertently made. And I have done this because I want this House to understand that it is never my intention to make a statement here that I do not believe to be the truth.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. SCOTT. I do.

Mr. HARDWICK. I want to say that I do not believe the gentleman from Kansas would willfully misrepresent anything.

Mr. SCOTT. That is kind of you.

Mr. HARDWICK. But does not the gentleman agree that it would be improper and a lack of dignity for the President of the United States or an ex-President to rush into print and deny every newspaper statement that might be put out, and does he not admit in reference to this he had not even made up a prima facie case?

Mr. SCOTT. Why, I was not criticising the former President of the United States for having heretofore made no denial. I was giving him full credit for the denial he now makes. But I wish to say at the same time that the friends of Mr. Cleveland should be very much gratified over this incident, because it has been the occasion of bringing to that gentleman for the first time in four years some applause from the Democratic side of this Chamber. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, this whole incident is a telling blow at the abstract theory of the general equality of the featherless biped. It discovers or uncovers the underlying hypocrisy of the contention that all men ought to be politically or socially equal, regardless of their color, race, traits, and tendencies.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. In one moment I will. The other day some gentlemen upon this side charged home as a disgrace, mark you, that a President of the United States had lunched with a negro, and there came from the other side of the House a charge against an ex-President as a disgrace that he had done exactly the same thing, showing that in every man's real heart the contention is deep seated that race traits and tendencies are equally as ineradicable as the colored man's skin and the kink of his hair. [Applause.] I yield to the gentleman now.

Mr. SCOTT. The question I desired to ask was whether the gentleman will not state who had been asserting social equality or making a fight along that line?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Why, Mr. Chairman, I have understood the political theory of your household of political faith for the last twenty years as asserting against the white people South, at any rate, the doctrine that men, regardless of color, race, traits, tendencies, characteristics, capabilities, or what not, ought to be strictly equal politically; and everybody with common sense knows that, political equality having once perfect recognition and practice, social equality must in a measure follow. But that is not all; the head of your party set an example of social equality in the only manner in which it can be set by inviting a black man to a table. Now, understand me——

Mr. SCOTT. One more question.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. One moment until I finish that for fear somebody may misunderstand me. Mr. Roosevelt as an individual has the right or the liberty, at any rate, that any other citizen of America has, to eat with whomsoever he pleases—black, red, yellow, white, or what not; educated, ignorant, or what not. I have nothing to do with it. Nobody else has anything to do with it. But when you make it an official question, when your President does that as President of the United States which he might without right of complaint have done as an individual, it was done for one purpose, and for one purpose only, and that was to "carry the light of example" to "the benighted South," that does not believe in social equality between the negro and the white man.

If it was not done for that, then it was done for no purpose at all. It was, in that event, an unconscious exhibition of the magnificent arrogance that teaches men, now and then, the "duty and the mission" to shed "the light of example" upon "the benighted" white population of the South, that never, in their opinion, mounted to the highest rank of civilization and seized hold, in its full measure, of the everlasting truth of the "equality between featherless bipeds."

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. SCOTT. I should like to inquire whether the gentleman holds as his social equal everybody in this country who is his political equal, reverting to the statement made a while ago?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Certainly not; but I can tell the gentleman this, that when I invite a man to my table I mean by that that he is my social equal or he would never be there.

Mr. SCOTT. That is a very cunning evasion of the question, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. No; I do not evade the question at all. I beg your pardon, I replied to it that socially I did not think that every man who is my political equal or armed with the statutory privilege of casting a vote was socially my equal; but let me follow that for just one moment. Now, this is a matter of common sense. When men go around as candidates for office, cultivating votes, thereby they necessarily put themselves upon a plane of equality while they are cultivating the votes. Now, it is true, and perfectly true, that while I might invite the gentleman from Kansas to my table because he is socially my equal in every respect, there might be another man politically the statutory equal of both of us whom I would not invite. When negroes rule politically, or hold the balance of power politically, this follows as we found in carpetbag days, that the white man who eats with negroes, sleeps with negroes, or marries a negro woman gets all the negro votes; the man who does neither gets none, if the other sort of man is a candidate.

But the question of the gentleman from Kansas is an evasion of the question that we are discussing, because this is not a question where because of political equality I have assumed that the President of the United States had recognized social equality. It is a case where all the world knows he recognized and emphasized social equality in and of itself. Nor am I quarreling with him as Mr Roosevelt, as an individual, nor have I quarreled with him at all. He has a perfect right to invite to his private table whom he chooses, but as far as I know he waited until he was President of the United States, so that the act could bear an official stamp before he ever did it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, in order that I may answer the questions of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. SCOTT. I understood the gentleman from Mississippi to say that when we insist upon the political equality of certain persons the necessary corollary of that is social equality, and when I asked him if he regarded as his social equal everybody whom he admitted to be his political equal, he answered that he did not. I would like to have him reconcile those statements, which seem contradictory.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. They do not seem contradictory to me, and I have done my best to reconcile them as far as I could. Now, I want to ask the gentleman a question. Why was it, if the gentleman believes in the "featherless-biped-equality" theory—I do not know whether he does or not—but if he does believe in it, why was it that he charged ex-President Cleveland, as a fault, with the fact that he was supposed to have lunched with a colored man?

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I did not charge the allegation which I made to Mr. Cleveland as a fault. I pointed to it simply as an illustration of the inconsistency, as it seemed to me, of the Democratic party, which was going into hysterics because one man invited a certain individual of the colored race to his table while making no criticism of another man who had done the same thing. I made no imputation of fault against ex-President Cleveland.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. All right; I am glad to hear that, because I thought the gentleman had a sharp stick and was after my very dear and much-adored old friend Grover Cleveland. [Laughter.] It looked to me so at that time.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this question is rather amusing than serious in some respects. It has disclosed what I wanted to call attention to, and that is that under this entire featherless-biped-equality theory there is very much hypocrisy; and one of the curious things about it is this: You go up to the White House, or go to a Department here, and ask them please not to appoint a man as postmaster down South because he is a "colored man," and they will "swell up" and tell you that they can not make a discrimination "on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude!" And yet the present incumbent of the White House would not appoint a Chinaman as postmaster upon the Pacific slope if that Chinaman were as able and well capable of attending to the duties of the office as Li Hung Chang himself; and there are hundreds of them—natural-born citizens of the United States. And why? Simply because he was a Chinaman. Simply because the white people of the Pacific slope do not want a Chinaman to be postmaster on the Pacific slope; because the appointment would be offensive to the white people. He might be a Chinaman infinitely better equipped and smarter than I am; he might be infinitely better equipped and smarter than the occupant of the chair, and a smarter man than the President himself; and yet he would not appoint him; he never would think of doing it.

When New England was settled long years ago, no New Englander ever recognized the political or social equality of the Indian race, although the red man is very far superior to the black man in some respects.

Now, this is not a question of instinct or prejudice. It is not a question of instinct, because little children do not realize it. It is not a question of prejudice, because, until you have thrown two races, the white race and another race, into juxtaposition with one another in sufficient quantities of each race, the feeling is not evident. But wherever you throw the white race in juxtaposition with the Chinaman, with the red man, with the black man in sufficient numbers, so that he has occasion to investigate the race question at all, then this feeling arises. How, then, does it come about if it is neither a prejudice—that is, a prejudgment—nor an instinct born in you? It comes about as reason, or a conclusion after experience. It comes about because race traits and contingencies, moral aptitude, merit, and demerit are found by historic experience and legislative experiment to be just as ineradicable as the color of the skin. God made both, and you can not do away with either by legislation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The Clerk read as follows:

EMERGENCY FUND.

To be expended only in case of emergency, such as riot, pestilence, public insanitary conditions, calamity by flood or fire, and of like character, and in all cases of emergency not otherwise sufficiently provided for, $[illegible]: Provided, That in the purchase of all articles provided for in this act no more than the market price shall be paid for any such articles, and all bids for any of such articles above the market price shall be rejected.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. One would assume from the lengthy discourse of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT] that there was no controversy among Republicans at all as to the propriety of intercourse in social life on terms of equality between the black man and the white man.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota rose.

Mr. COCHRAN. Oh, I expect a point of order will be made now. This is about the time to expect it.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. This discussion is not germane to the bill. It would seem that this matter has been discussed enough this morning.

Mr. COCHRAN. I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I object.

Mr. DALZELL. I call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. It must be clearly understood by Members that after the reading of the bill by paragraph begins all debate must be pertinent to the preceding paragraph.

Mr. COCHRAN. But how can the gentleman arrive at the conclusion that my remarks would not be pertinent. I have not stated what I was going to speak about.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman states that he proposes to confine his remarks to the subject embraced by the paragraph, he may proceed.

Mr. COCHRAN. I will state, Mr. Chairman, that I fully believed when I took the floor that a point of order would be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will resume the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

CHARITIES AND CORRECTIONS.

Board of charities: For secretary, $3,000; clerk, $1,000; stenographer, $840; messenger, $900; four inspectors, at $720 each; traveling expenses, $400; four drivers, at $300 each; in all, $11,120.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I would inquire of the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill if this is an increase over the amount appropriated a year ago?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, there has been so much confusion that I do not understand to what paragraph the gentleman refers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the pending paragraph is the paragraph on page 54, beginning with line 15 and ending with line 21.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I will state that in the paragraph referred to there is one additional inspector provided for at $720 a year.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, we might have anticipated that something additional was provided for.

Now, will the gentleman tell me why this additional inspector is needed?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. The gentleman has asked a question that has real point to it, and I am glad to answer it.

These inspectors are for this purpose: This capital city becomes the rendezvous of many people from the several States who are in trouble. Sometimes they come here hoping that their Congressman will be able to help them. Some of them fall sick. Some, brooding over their troubles, become insane. And so they get into the hospitals or into the almshouses or into the insane asylums. Their support is, of course, not a proper charge on this District. We have for several years been endeavoring to limit these improper charges upon this District. In order to do it we need some competent and trustworthy men to go around and make the necessary investigations.

Again, a great many people, bona fide residents of this city, apply for help from the public funds who ought not to have it. It may be a harm to them to receive it. It may not be a proper charge upon the District. When help is applied for from public funds, it should not be given out without investigation. Hence it is found necessary to have inspectors to do this work. In order to give full investigation along this line an additional inspector is required. Hence the increase inquired about.

Mr. COCHRAN. Germane to this discussion is the question as to the manner in which these places are continually made more numerous and more lucrative. Is it true that the Government of the United States in its several Departments and in the District government is conducted upon business principles? Go to one of these Departments and ask the Secretary or the under Secretary why it is that so numerous a clerical force is there employed, and not one will fail to tell you, if he makes answer at all, "We would like to get rid of many of these people, who are notoriously incompetent. We would like to weed out this force and make it more effective for the public service; but we are powerless to do it. If we should omit one of these men from the pay roll, down would come a Congressman or a Senator from the State from which the man came, and he would demand his immediate reinstatement, and down would come an order from above to reinstate him."

It is notorious that when we make appropriations for the maintenance of the different Departments and of the District of Columbia we know we are providing salaries for sinecures, the henchmen and dependents of great statesmen, who regard the securement of employment for these dependents as getting something for their districts.

There is not a Department in this Government where the officials in charge would not gladly weed out the undesirable and superfluous employees but for the fact that Congressmen and Senators are continually place hunting, and then we are compelled to raid the Treasury to pay the salaries of these favorites.

I believe this vice prevails in the District of Columbia to a larger extent than anywhere else. I acquit the gentleman in charge of this bill from responsibility. The wretched system is chargeable not upon the individual but upon the pernicious system followed by the Government's representatives collectively. The people's representatives should not insist upon padding the pay rolls, for by so doing they do not spend public money to the end that the public service may be made better but with the certainty that it will be made infinitely worse. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The Clerk read as follows:

CHARITIES AND CORRECTIONS.

Board of charities: For secretary, $3,000; clerk, $1,000; stenographer, $840; messenger, $900; four inspectors, at $720 each; traveling expenses, $400; four drivers, at $300 each; in all, $11,120.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I want to say here something that I have long wanted to say in regard to the charitable appropriations carried in the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

I took occasion once several years ago to make a suggestion along this line. I did not think then that anything would come of it. I have a little more hope now, because the board of charities and corrections, as I find by a report submitted this year, have taken the same position.

We appropriate in this bill nearly $1,000,000 for different charitable associations in the District of Columbia. I am afraid to say just what per cent, but a very large per cent of that appropriation, in my opinion, is not for the indigent poor, but for the energetic office seeker.

I am not criticising the Committee on Appropriations nor the subcommittee in charge of this bill. I know too well how difficult it is to get any kind of reform in measures of this character, where a thing has gone on for years, and especially where it comes before a body like this not elected by the particular people whose money is spent, and in the community that spends it, and not responsible to the public opinion of the community where these institutions are located; but, Mr. Chairman, there is provided for in this bill charity after charity for which we appropriate from one thousand to fifty thousand dollars. Now, these appropriations have arisen in this way: Some good people—and they are always good people who originate these charitable institutions—the good ladies of some church, for example, get together and say, "Here is a particular work that needs to be done."

They raise a few thousand dollars in the church or among their friends for the purpose of charity, and they start the work, and that work grows, as charitable work always does, and they say, "It has got to be a burden, and we will go and get help from Congress." The very moment Congress begins to appropriate that moment individual effort ceases, or at least grows less, and year after year private contributions fall off and the public appropriations grow, until in a few years you have an institution owned by private parties, managed by private parties, the Government having no control over it, and yet the Government of the United States and the District of Columbia appropriating practically the entire sum that is spent for it.

Why, Mr. Chairman, in this bill we have institutions here—I notice one for which we appropriate here $9,000. The total sum raised outside is $1,000, and with a total fund of $10,000, $4,000 of it is spent for salaries. We call that a charitable appropriation. We have here institution after institution for which we make appropriations of $3,000 or $4,000, and the good people behind it, the trustees who are managing it, raise $1,000 or $2,000 more; and in nearly every instance from 20 to 50 per cent of it goes for salaries.

Now, as I say, the great difficulty in charitable work is the continued desire on the part of the individual to start a new charity—a good purpose behind it always, started from the best impulses; but the result is the duplication and reduplication of this charitable society and that charitable institution and the continued increase of the proportionate part of your charitable money going to pay the salaries of matrons and clerks of each one of these institutions.

Why, one of the Commissioners here, in the hearings before this committee, has suggested in regard to these appropriations:

If we were to undertake to change that, so as to give the Commissioners the control of this public money, we would arouse the greatest opposition.

I would like, Mr. Chairman, if this sentence only could be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has just expired.

Mr. COWHERD. I ask unanimous consent to have five minutes more.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I hope that will be granted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that his time may be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COWHERD. If the House will listen to this sentence, I will be content to talk to the RECORD for the rest. Here is what the Commissioner himself said in relation to the proposition as to whether we could do away with this distribution of this fund to all these different charities in small amounts. The Commissioner says:

If we did it, we would arouse the greatest opposition, for the reason that such action would legislate out of office several secretaries and disbursing clerks in these various institutions, all of whom are deriving salaries out of the public money.

Mr. Chairman, it is bad enough to provide for clerks unneeded in any of the Departments of the Government and take the people's money to pay for it; but it is doubly and damnably bad that we do it under the guise of a charitable appropriation. [General applause.] I had no idea of proposing any suggestion to this House other than is carried in the suggestion of the board of charities. And while approving their conclusions I want to criticise those two bodies before I pass from it.

My friend from Missouri has just offered some criticism of this Board of Charities and Children's Guardians. Now, I find here we are carrying for administration purposes of these two boards practically over $20,000 and approaching nearly $25,000 in this bill. These boards are made up from the best people of the District of Columbia—give their work without pay; but I have always found it to be true when you have a "high-toned" board that works without pay that they usually require a double amount of clerical work with pay in order to carry on the business. It looks to me as though these boards were following the well-established custom in that particular.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to call especial attention to a few of these items of appropriation——

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him. I think he is right; but let me suggest to the gentleman that the Committee on the District of Columbia, on which he has the honor to serve, created these "high-toned" boards he speaks of, and that the Committee on Appropriations had nothing to do with the creation of these boards.

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman is entirely right. They were created there; and I shall not attempt to shield the Committee on the District of Columbia. That committee may be in part responsible for the condition of which I complain. As I have already said, I am not criticising the Committee on Appropriations, though they are even more responsible for the continuation of these conditions. I remember when the bill was before the Committee on the District of Columbia for the creation of this Board of Children's Guardians.

I remember that it was distinctly stated at the time, because we made some inquiry, not fully understanding the work, that this was to be a board of charitable ladies and gentlemen of the District of Columbia, who were asking only the power of visiting the institutions that have intrusted to them these indigent and delinquent children, with the power to examine into them and see that the children were properly treated, and, as I remember, we provided in that bill for a salary list of only twenty-four hundred dollars. Am I not right?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I think the gentleman is right, and the gentleman is right in the other statement, that every time you create a board of that kind it means that clerical help is to be supplied to a greater extent than if you appointed one man to take charge of this, as you could have done in your bill.

Mr. COWHERD. But, Mr. Chairman, that board has not the right to create a single solitary office. The gentleman was right when he said it was the business of the District Committee to create officers, and that committee limited the expense to $2,400, but the committee of which the distinguished gentleman from Indiana is the chairman has brought in a bill carrying $10,000 in salaries.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I am sure the gentleman desires to be right.

Mr. COWHERD. Certainly.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. This $2,400 is for agents only, and that is precisely the sum carried in the bill now for that purpose.

Mr. COWHERD. Here is for administration——

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. You can not administer with agents alone. The gentleman knows that.

Mr. COWHERD. My understanding when that board was created was that the only salaried officials were to be the two agents.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me? Does the gentleman suggest that the business of this board can be carried on without any officers except merely the two agents?

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I will answer that I do not know, but I believe it can be carried on for much less than $10,000.

Mr. LIND. Will the gentleman yield to me for a statement? In the State of Minnesota we have for years had a board of corrections and charities. It has charge of all the jails, all the charitable institutions, and all the paupers and pauperism in the State, and the business has been effectively and diligently conducted by one general agent and two clerks and two traveling assistants for the entire State, and the entire expense of that is $6,500.

Mr. HEMENWAY. We have a similar board in Indiana. But when the gentleman speaks about his State and my State and the other States, we all know that the business here can not be conducted for the same amount of money as there. Gentlemen can not live here as cheaply as they can in Minneapolis. A man goes to one of the hotels and he pays three times as much for the same quarters he could get in one of the hotels in the different States.

Mr. MADDOX. They would not charge that much to an agent; that is only to you and myself.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield further?

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to yielding to any gentleman if I may be allowed as much time as has been consumed for the conclusion of my remarks.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not agree with the gentleman from Indiana that we must pay somebody in the District of Columbia for this class of work more than we pay them in the States. I think if this matter were carefully looked into, it can be done as economically in the District as elsewhere. I was not criticising the committee so much, although I confess it seems to me they are subject to some criticism in not cutting down the salary lists of these charitable associations, but the point I am criticising is the entire system of the Government of the United States going into partnership with all these private charities in the District of Columbia, not only to the great detriment of the Treasury of the United States and of the District, but to the absolute detriment of the administration of the charitable fund itself.

The moment you start in to assist some children's home or some foundling hospital or something else carried on by private means, that moment you take away all the incentive on the part of private individuals to carry on the charitable work and you throw the whole thing on the Treasury of the United States. The Government ought to provide its asylum as the States do. This District ought to have its own almshouse as other cities do, and ought to have its own hospitals——

Mr. LIND. There is an appropriation——

Mr. COWHERD. I know there is. As I was saying, as the cities and States have such eleemosynary institutions, so should the District have them, and then it might help some one individual charity that takes care of emergency cases, of the stranger that is thrown on the street, or the poor man out of employment, who must be carried through a few cold days of winter or of sudden sickness in the family, and such emergency cases.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, the most of my time was taken up by other gentlemen, and I am going to ask the House to indulge me once more with five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COWHERD. But, as I was saying, aside from the appropriations of that kind, the Government of the United States ought to keep its hands off the private charities, and when the good people get up a "day nursery" or a "children's home" or an "old people's home," let the good people support it, and you will find that the charitable people of this community will do like the charitable people of your community and of mine—they will take care of the institutions of that kind without Government aid, and take care of them better than you will with Government aid and without Government control.

Why, Mr. Chairman, we have appropriated here within the last three years $750,000 to aid private charities in building hospitals and additions to them. I say "private" because the grounds are not owned by the Government. The buildings that we build are not owned by us. We absolutely can not dictate the admission of patients to these hospitals nor how they shall be treated after they get in there. We have, of course, the right to examine them by the District Commissioners, and some they have examined and reported adversely upon. But we have not the right to go in and control and regulate the management of some of these great hospitals for which we appropriate [illegible] per year.

Now, let me call your attention to the extravagances of this system of having half a dozen or a dozen men, excellent people of the District, but people interested in other matters, acting as trustees for these institutions. There is a Reform School for Boys, and it carries in all an appropriation of nearly $[illegible]. Do you know how many boys they have there? As I remember it, they have about [illegible] or 260 boys.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. That is right.

Mr. COWHERD. A large percentage are colored boys, but you have 40 employees on a salary in that Reform School taking care of 250 boys. Do you suppose for a moment if that was either under private control, where they had to raise the funds out of their pockets, or under Government control, where there would be an official responsible for it, you would have such a salary list for that same board?

There is a reform school for girls which carries an appropriation of $[illegible]. They have got in that school, as I remember it, an average of seventy girls. Two hundred and fifty dollars per year for every one of them.

Mr. HEMENWAY. What school is the gentleman referring to?

Mr. COWHERD. The Reform School for Girls. I think there are about seventy girls, two or three of them white and the rest colored girls who have been committed, I suppose, for some minor [illegible] offense. You have got fourteen employees to take care of them. I admit that schools have got to have teachers, of course, but children are sent there to be taught how to work and earn their own living. In the Reform School for Boys they appropriate here dining-room servants. What are they doing with the boys who ought to be taught that sort of a thing, so that when they come out they can go to work for you or for me?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I would like to ask the gentleman if he refers to the reform school where they are committed for crime?

Mr. COWHERD. Yes.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman from Missouri does not undertake to say that a school of that kind can be controlled with the same number of employees as a school of good boys?

Mr. COWHERD. Certainly not.

Mr. HEMENWAY. You have got to have guards and all the surroundings of a prison.

Mr. COWHERD. Oh, no; the modern reform school is not surrounded with guards like a prison; exactly the contrary system is the modern system.

Mr. HEMENWAY. One moment; they do not put them in cells, and that requires more employees to take care of them for that reason.

Mr. COWHERD. I admit that, but I ask the gentleman if he does not believe that forty employees there is excessive?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I believe that in all the departments of the Government in Washington, we have more employees than are necessary. But what are you going to do when they come down here and say they can not conduct the institution in a suitable manner unless they have them? You have to take somebody's word for it, and the gentleman's committee reported the bill that created this home.

Mr. COWHERD. And probably very properly reported it.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman's committee suggested that a board should be put in charge of it, and that board comes down here and says, "We can not conduct the institution without this number of employees." Will the gentleman from Missouri say that his judgment and mine, when we can not go out there and investigate it, is better than the judgment of the men who are in charge?

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I would say that the judgment of any man who said that forty salaried employees were needed to take care of a school having 250 boys in it was bad and not to be relied on by the gentleman's committee or any other.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. COWHERD. Permit me, Mr. Chairman, to say in conclusion again that I am not criticising the committee so much as I am criticising the system.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be permitted to continue.

Mr. COWHERD. Oh, no; I thank the gentleman from Indiana, but I do not want to use any more time.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad, indeed, that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] has discussed this question, because any question which he discusses he illuminates. And he has spoken in his usual good spirit.

The gentleman began and concluded with the statement that in what he had to say it was not his purpose to criticise the Appropriations Committee. What he said was largely a confession of work undone by his own committee, because the legislation relating to these things belongs not to us, but to the committee of which the gentleman is a distinguished member.

Mr. COWHERD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. COWHERD. Is it not a fact that this reform school for boys, for which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] says the District Committee provided, has been in operation here in the District of Columbia for many generations, and in fact is an old, old school, that has grown up and has not been legislated on?

Mr. HEMENWAY. The reform school for girls has not.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. The reform school for boys is an old institution, but the reform school for girls is one recently created by the gentleman's committee.

Mr. COWHERD. Did that committee provide for any salary list in that school? Does not the growth of that list rest entirely with the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I think that the gentleman is in error as to the number of the employees and teachers in the Boys' Reform School. But why did not the gentleman's committee specify how many employees there should be in the Girls' Reform School, for whose establishment it provided?

Mr. COWHERD. Because it is a matter that can not be specified. Creating the school, there was not needed a single employee until somebody had been sent to the school. The only thing that was necessary was a board of management until the school itself had built up, but as it has built up and the salary list grows, it rests with the Appropriations Committee to say how many.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Has the gentleman any knowledge of anyone employed there who should not be employed?

Mr. COWHERD. Why, Mr. Chairman, how could the gentleman have any knowledge of that fact? When I find so many employees taking care of so few pupils I have sufficient general information to draw an inference that there are too many employees there.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Let me recur to what the gentleman himself was a party to. He created a board to have charge of this institution. Now, if he were a member of the Committee on Appropriations, where would he look for information? Would he undertake to visit all of these institutions and spend his vacations in the city of Washington personally examining these things, or where would he look for information?

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I will say very frankly—I said before that I did not want to criticise the gentleman's committee—but if that committee relies in toto upon recommendations of these boards of management of these charitable institutions, or the Commissioners of the District either, and makes appropriations entirely upon their recommendation without further investigation, then that committee is subject to criticism and I would criticise it.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Well, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has stated a purely hypothetical case, because he knows that the committee does not do any such thing. But it must get its first information from them. It then uses its judgment as to whether the recommendations are well founded.

But that is not what I started out to say. The gentleman has touched a great question when he brings up the question of employing public money for the support of institutions that are largely private in character, and the gentleman is emphatically right in all that he has said in that connection. The committee is gradually becoming stronger in that opinion. We have been studying this question for more than two years. We have encountered difficulties which the gentleman will readily understand; difficulties which arise out of the fact that these institutions are, many of them, of long standing.

They are reputable and useful, and they have their friends in Congress in both Houses. We must be sure we are right before we can go ahead. At present we are simply marking time. We have that subject under consideration, and before much more time has passed we will reach a conclusion. My judgment is that it will be along the line that the gentleman has indicated, and for indicating it so well the committee is grateful to him. It will look to him for valiant and valuable support when the time for action comes.

Mr. BENTON. Mr. Chairman, I have not any speech prepared on this subject. I want to say a few things, however, in defense of the subcommittee of which I am a member.

There is a large measure of sound truth in the criticism of my colleague from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] on this budget, but I want to correct just here a wrong impression of his. He takes this Committee of the Whole into his confidence and gives it the benefit of the recommendation of the board of charities for the gradual abolition of some of these boards. He does the board of charities too much honor. They have not any desire whatever to decrease the number of offices or the amount of the appropriations; they want to abolish a few of these little concerns, so they may take charge of all of them and have the control of them themselves in other institutions now in their charge. That is the cold-blooded truth about the board of charities. They are a very eminent set of gentlemen, serving without individual pay; but I have never heard, since I have been on this subcommittee, of a member of the board of charities suggesting that the salaries be reduced. On the contrary, each of the budgets presented to us has suggestions for the increase of salaries by this board.

Now, a word in our own defense. My colleague is mistaken when he thinks we do everything that the board of charities or even the Board of Commissioners suggests. If he will look at their recommendations to us and then look at this bill he will find that, large as it is, it is $2,000,000 less than the recommendations of the Board of Commissioners. It would have been more than $3,000,000 less except for the necessities of the situation.

As has been stated by my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Minnesota, more than a million dollars of this large budget that we presented to the House comes from the necessity of finishing the filtration plant and the sewage-disposal system. If somebody on this committee does not make some statement in defense of the committee we are chargeable with the animadversions that may come from any gentleman on the floor.

Take for instance the board of charities created by act of Congress. I do not know, perhaps my colleagues on the committee from Nebraska or from Minnesota did not know, the full necessity for this board of charity; but we took the word of the District of Columbia legislative committee. It was created. They come before the District Appropriation Committee with their recommendations. They make statements presumably correct as they understand the facts, and as far as we are convinced we follow their suggestions. We examine and cross-examine them, sometimes to the point of being disagreeable. After they are gone we exercise our best judgment and keep the appropriations down as low as we think we dare do without being criticised for parsimony.

I am sure in my own mind, though I have not the clear proof of it, that we are paying out several hundred thousand dollars in salaries in the District of Columbia that we might avoid. But I do not know of any way to get at the facts except by the appointment of a commission by and under an act of Congress that will put men upon oath—make them inform us what the actual necessities are—get persons and papers, and then let Congress begin at the bottom and go up again.

Mr. HEPBURN and Mr. COWHERD rose.

Mr. HEPBURN. If the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] prefers to go on now——

Mr. COWHERD. If the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] will permit, I would like a moment just now to answer the remarks that have been made in regard to the District Committee and to statements of my own.

Mr. HEPBURN. All right.

Mr. COWHERD. I endeavored particularly to state that I was not criticising the committee that brought in this bill for these items, because the system has grown up in the course of years and they seem in the main to be following precedents.

Mr. BENTON. I so understood; I thought I stated that to my colleague.

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman from Indiana by his question very plainly suggested that the subcommittee on the District of Columbia appropriation bill was relying upon these boards of managers and trustees, and so if anything I said was in the way of criticism upon them I was entitled to criticise them if they did rely upon these estimates. I do not believe they should take the estimates of these boards of trustees, none of whom are public officials, and rely upon them entirely in making appropriations. The gentleman says he does not do so. Then, if they have any different and better information, they either ought to strike out the surplus employees or they ought to sustain them.

Now, the gentleman criticises the Committee on the District of Columbia. He says they start this business and the Committee on Appropriations simply has to provide the appropriations. Is that committee subject to such criticism?

Let us see what are the facts: Here is the National Association for the Relief of Destitute Colored Women and Children. They come here to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ask for authority to incorporate. Would you refuse it? They are not asking for any appropriation, but simply ask the right that all other charitable organizations have; they simply ask an incorporation as an eleemosynary institution. We give them the right to incorporate, with a board of visitors to manage the institution. Then they go to your committee, and you give them the appropriation that carries here $9,000 out of the $10,000 that they receive, with a salary list of $3,900. Are we to blame for that? We never suggested to your committee any appropriation.

Here is the Newsboys and Children's Aid Society. Why should not that society have articles of incorporation as an eleemosynary institution, a private charitable institution in the District of Columbia? Are we to blame if they go to your committee and get an appropriation and spend it for salaries rather than for charities? And so on all down the list. The Committee on the District of Columbia simply provides the machinery. It does not provide the appropriations, and as to these private institutions it does not know and has no way of knowing how many of them, or whether any of them, will be recognized by the Committee on Appropriations afterward in the way of public funds.

Now, as to the Board of Children's Guardians and the Board of Charities, I have explained, and they are very well understood. They were provided, and the machinery by which they operate was provided, and we limit as far as we can in our committee the number of employees that they shall have; but in a large portion of these charities and in a large portion of the money carried in this bill the Committee on the District of Columbia never had a word to say as to when or where there should be any appropriation.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I want in the outstart to disclaim any purpose of criticising either the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee on the District of Columbia, but I do want to call attention to this very remarkable fact, that between the general headings "Charities and corrections" and "Militia of the District of Columbia," following the subheads of this first general head "Charities and corrections," there are appropriations aggregating $889,000 for charities and corrections in the District of Columbia. Two hundred thousand dollars of that, I am frank to admit, consists of appropriations for public buildings, in connection, however, with these charities. I think it is safe to say that that character and amount of appropriation, however, accompanies every bill of this description, so that it is safe to say that this is about an average appropriation, $889,000 for charities and corrections in a city of a little more than 250,000 people. That is more than equal to $3 a head for charitable purposes for all of the citizens of the District of Columbia.

I do not know whether there are too many officers or not, but I do know that to my mind there is an extraordinary number. Whether we could dispense with any of them is a question that I am not now prepared to solve. I do know, however, that as compared with expenses of similar character in some of the States—in one, at least—this sum seems to be enormous. In the State of Iowa, for example, for purposes of this character the appropriations are about 50 cents per head. The appropriation to carry on all of the great institutions—three penitentiaries, four hospitals for the insane, and all of the eleemosynary institutions of the State of Iowa—amount to little more than $1,000,000 for a population of two and a half million people. I am not sure that a just comparisom can be made, but it does appear to me that some method ought to be taken of ascertaining, more accurately than the committee in the very nature of things can ascertain, the necessity for these appropriations.

It is a truth, I think, that all gentlemen will recognize, that the chief source of their information, that upon which they must rely under our system, is tainted with interest. While these boards serve, perhaps, without pay, every member of them has an interest in the institution he is helping to fondle. All of the officers charged with the conduct of these establishments have an interest in securing the largest appropriation. Why, you see it in the Book of Estimates. What member of the Committee on Appropriations is willing to be guided by the estimates made by the nine Secretaries? Not one of you. After you have received your estimates and such detailed information as they see fit to give you, you call them before you, you interrogate them, and then you refuse to be guided by their estimates; and in almost every instance the gentleman who has charge of a bill suggests to the House with some measure of proper pride, "We have cut down the estimate so many thousand dollars or so many million dollars."

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes.

Mr. HEMENWAY. That is true in this instance.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have no doubt about it. I am not criticising the committee. I have not a particle of doubt that they have done the very best they could under the circumstances. I am criticising the system under which we operate in making appropriations of this kind. I do not believe that there is scrutiny enough. I am not here to say that it is the duty of the committee to give more of scrutiny to the subject than they do give. Their time is necessarily limited. They have a great variety of duties. There are no men more hard worked in this body than the members of the Committee on Appropriations. I am not criticising them, but I am trying to say something that will find a lodgment in the mind of some man who knows how to suggest the proper remedy. There ought to be a remedy. Three dollars per capita to be spent in charities, so called, or in institutions of correction in this city is, in my judgment, an enormous sum. It would be equal to seven and a half million dollars in the State of Iowa, more than three times the total expenditures of that State, nearly three times the total appropriation of the State for carrying on the government of Iowa.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Does the gentleman want more time?

Mr. HEPBURN. No.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, a tax of $40 per capita is imposed by this bill for the government of the District of Columbia. I do not believe there is a Congressional district in the United States that does not expect its Congressman to go a long way in appropriating money from the public funds for the purpose of beautifying the American capital. I believe it is the consensus of public opinion throughout the country that we ought to have the finest capital city in the world; and whenever an appropriation is brought before this body, reasonable in amount, looking to that purpose, it will not only have my support, but I believe it will have the support of an overwhelming majority of this body.

I do not believe the people of this country expect the appropriations carried in this bill every year shall stand out conspicuously as evidences that a very wretched system of municipal government has been allowed to grow and grow without any effort to prune it; or, worse, that the utter recklessness of place hunters has fastened on the public in the administration of the Government in all its departments an army of sinecures.

I live in a State of near 4,000,000 people. It is a rich State, with a penitentiary, a reform school for girls, a reform school for boys, a university that ranks well with the best institutions in the world, a school of mines, five normal schools, three hospitals for the insane, asylums and schools for the blind and the deaf and dumb, with every possible provision in the way of eleemosynary establishments for the cure of the unfortunates, and yet the appropriations carried in this bill for one year's expense in the District of Columbia is two and one-half times as much as the gross expense of the State of Missouri for the administration of the State government in all its departments.

It is true some part of these appropriations made by this are for public buildings. It is also true that at every session of the legislature of Missouri we make appropriations for public buildings. The public institutions I speak of have been built without going into debt for the money with which the State built them. To institute another comparison: While I have no figures by me, I will venture the assertion that you can not find on the face of the earth a city where the expenses of municipal administration are in any way to be compared with the expenses of this city.

Now, somebody is responsible for this. If the American Congress is to admit that such proceedings afford an exhibition of its capacity for municipal government let the country so understand the matter. We are sitting here to-day as a board of aldermen pure and simple. As individuals we have no private interests at stake; therefore no selfish motive actuates us. We are in a position to enact laws for the government of the city of Washington untrammeled by considerations which probably embarrass city governments generally. We certainly should be able to safeguard the public against a waste of public money and establish a system which will give the taxpayers something for the dollars they expend.

The gentleman from Minnesota tells us the committee has done its best; that it has endeavored to go to the bottom of all questions involved; and yet the result is a bill whereby out of $[illegible] appropriated for a private eleemosynary institution $[illegible] of the appropriation is devoted to payment of the salaries of those in charge of the expenditure of the money. Think of it! Out of gross receipts of only $9,000 or $10,000 for charity all told, nearly $[illegible] per cent of it—is devoted to paying the men who expend it! Now, I believe that here we find the key to the whole situation.

I recollect that during the Spanish-American war a report was put in circulation to the effect that an attempt had been made to dynamite some of the public buildings. The result was the appointment of a large number of extra policemen. This was regarded as a temporary increase in the police force. Have they been relieved yet? The Spanish war is over. Everyone connected with the government of the city of Washington tells us that the city can not possibly get on without them—that they are absolutely indispensable. Everybody knows that an unexpected emergency caused the increase in the police force. The emergency seen disappeared, but the policemen called into service by it are still on the pay roll.

Mr. Chairman, when, how, and where are we going to commence pruning these rank growths? Are we to go on obeying the superintendents, secretaries, assistants, and typewriters, who, we are told, would bitterly resent any effort to dispossess them of the places? Is it not true that these appointees, clerks, and employees have powerful friends at court, who would, in the way of reform, and who, were we to undertake a [illegible], would surround the heads of the departments, each demanding to know why his appointee was left out, why was my constituent left out, why [illegible]?

The result of this pernicious system is seen in the [illegible] indefensible misappropriation of public funds. It is this that compels the employment of men and the retention of clerks at unnecessarily outrageous salaries, and until we [illegible] our minds to destroy this system the Congress will remain powerless to correct the evil. There is only one way to correct it. The Appropriation Committee alone can do it. We should make appropriation ample for carrying on the business of these various public bodies and no more, and under the conditions of the present [illegible] compel the abandonment of this extravagant and ridiculous system of municipal control. [Applause.]

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, much that has been said is a valuable contribution to the subject we have been considering. The committee welcomes it and expresses its thanks to the gentlemen who have given us the benefit of this thought.

Several references have been made, however, to the expenses of State governments as compared with those of the District of Columbia. Of course gentlemen, when they stop to think of this, will recollect that this entity we are appropriating for is unique in that in its necessary expenditures it is both a State and a city. It has most of the expenses of a State and all the expenses of a city.

Now, I do not propose to go over the whole subject. I will simply say that the Committee on Appropriations, the subcommittee having charge of this bill, cut down the estimates which were submitted to them something like [illegible]. We tried to do that cutting down prudently and [illegible] our eyes and shaving. We believed that we [illegible] such a thing as that. But where we saw an opportunity of saving the public money without doing harm we used that opportunity.

In the case of the board of charities of the District, about which so much has been said, we cut down the estimates half a million dollars from the estimates which were made. Here are the figures: The estimates of the board amounted to $[illegible]. The appropriations recommended in this bill amount to $[illegible]. It seems to me that is [illegible] the whole amount estimated. In order to determine what might to be reached in that reduction, we spent hours and days with the gentlemen in charge of the [illegible], to tell us and we endeavoring squarely to ascertain the real situation.

Let me remind the committee of the fact that some years ago the appropriation for the board was [illegible] the sum of [illegible] of the District [illegible] of money. It was an unusual and apparently [illegible] sum of money. It was believed that charities had [illegible] into existence and the burdens of taxation assessed by the [illegible] without [illegible].

In order to correct that condition this House, under the leadership of the committee of which my friend from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] is a distinguished member, the Committee on the District of Columbia [illegible] for what is known as the "Board of Charities." That board was to take into consideration this whole question of the charities of the District.

Let us see who constitute the personnel of that board. I find the list here in the report: George W. Cook, a professor in Howard University, a colored [illegible] man and very able and very honorable [illegible] to be from our [illegible]. There was Paul Clarke, [illegible] a prominent business man of the city. Then we find John Joy Edson, president of the Washington National [illegible], and S. W. Woodward, the [illegible] of Washington [illegible]. It would be very hard [illegible] of other committees of [illegible].

These gentlemen have devoted a great deal of time and a great deal of intelligent thought to the subject [illegible] for which they receive no compensation except that of a good conscience.

These gentlemen have for the last two years made recommendations to us along the line of the speech of my friend from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] and my other friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], whom I regard as a friend notwithstanding the little spat we had a little earlier this morning. Mr. Chairman, those gentlemen whose names I have given to you are among the most able and public-spirited citizens of this community. They have spent, as I say, weeks of time, every hour of which had a money value to them, in this public service. They impressed us with their sincerity and their desire to put these charities upon a proper basis. It is due to these gentlemen that we say we did not down the [illegible] as follows, as in full [illegible] which they made. Their recommendations look toward the gradual [illegible] of all appropriations for these institutions that are [illegible] and which are now supported in large part at [illegible].

[illegible] the committee feels decidedly disposed; but [illegible] to it. We have several times [illegible]. Last year we [illegible] some reductions, but [illegible] of the usual amounts. We do not want to cut off any of them with harsh precipitancy, because that would [illegible] the District of Columbia [illegible] of our charitable institutions [illegible] stroy good work, and no one [illegible] done.

Mr. LIND. Will the [illegible] yield for a question?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. [illegible]

Mr. LIND. [illegible] do the same work that is done by the private eleemosynary institutions now? Pretty generally.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. The charities of the District are largely of the kind I have described, [illegible] institutions to do the same kind of work?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. To a very small extent.

Mr. LIND. I notice that the bill carries an appropriation of $[illegible] almshouse.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. That is wholly public.

Mr. LIND. Is that new?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. It is to enlarge the present almshouse.

Mr. LIND. Could not that almshouse do a great deal of the work here that is committed to private care?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. The almshouse is now in very limited quarters in close conjunction to the jail. With this appropriation which the gentleman refers to we propose to construct a new almshouse in a healthful place in the country, down near Alexandria, within the District, bought for the purpose a short time ago.

We are simply marking time on this problem until we ourselves can get full information on the matter, to the end that we may not do wrong in our effort to do right. We hope to move forward within the next few years along the general lines suggested by the gentleman from Missouri.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we hope that when we do move forward we shall have the support of this House, even if we touch upon something that some Member believes ought not to be touched at the time.

Mr. LIND. Mr. Chairman, I want to submit one observation in answer to what the gentleman has said. He suggested that the management of these institutions afforded no guide in the matter of appropriations for the District of Columbia. I can not conceive that to be possible. I can not understand why the administration of institutions of like character, like the insurance commissioner's, should cost any more here than in the State of Minnesota. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. McCLEARY] said a few moments ago that this is in part a State administration and in part a municipal administration. Granting that, let me call the gentleman's attention to this fact: The entire cost of the State administration of the State of Minnesota, with its nearly 2,000,000 people, the State University with a student body of 4,000, and a great number of normal schools, is, in round numbers, only $7,000,000.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. LIND. Certainly.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Does that $7,000,000 include the local institutions—the schools in the various communities?

Mr. LIND. It includes all the State schools, normal schools, and schools for defectives, and in addition we are building a magnificent State capitol. I may give another illustration of city government—the city of Minneapolis in which I reside, which is very nearly as large as the city of Washington——

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Oh, Mr. Chairman, not even the pride of a Minneapolitan can make that true. [Laughter.]

Mr. LIND. Well, if the gentleman takes exception, I will suggest facts that will put my comparison beyond criticism. I say very nearly as large, and we have not been accused of economy of late. In fact, it has been the common complaint of our citizens that our administration has been extravagant, and we have spent in round numbers only $3,800,000.

Now, take the city of St. Paul, and my colleague will concede that Minneapolis and St. Paul together are vastly greater and do an immensely larger business than the city of Washington, that they have greater interests every way, and the municipal expense of the city of St. Paul is less than $1,000,000.

Mr. BURKETT. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. LIND. If the gentleman will wait until I conclude. So that the expense of the administration of the city of Washington is greater than that of the entire State of Minnesota with its capital city added. The gentleman asked me whether the statement I made a moment ago included the expense of the schools throughout the State. The entire amount collected in the State of Minnesota for all purposes—schools and municipal government and [illegible] of all kinds—is only $[illegible].

This is in excess of the average in the States. For the administration of all the affairs of the great State of Minnesota—State, municipal, educational, and [illegible]—we expend less than $18,[illegible] and here we are [illegible] $11,000,000 for the city of Washington. Now, I say that under these circumstances [illegible].

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, right here will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. LIND. Yes.

Mr. HEMENWAY. He does not want to be unfair. In his figures he does not include the amount of money expended by the [illegible] for charities [illegible].

Mr. LIND. I do.

Mr. HEMENWAY. In the counties for charities?

Mr. LIND. I do.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Does the gentleman say that $18,000,000 is the total amount of taxes collected for township, county, State, and city purposes in the State of Minnesota?

Mr. LIND. In the State of Minnesota; yes.

Mr. BURKETT. In the municipal estimate the gentleman does not include the cost of paving?

Mr. LIND. I do.

Mr. BURKETT. That is done by a separate estimate charged against the property, is it not?

Mr. LIND. Yes; it is in a measure. But let me say in that connection——

Mr. BURKETT. They do not build their sidewalks there out of city funds?

Mr. LIND. They do not here; they do not pretend to; but let me call the attention of the gentleman to what your committee has done. You appropriate some $12,000 for the administration of a sidewalk fund of $160,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LIND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more. It does not take an expert to know that it is ridiculous on its face to appropriate $12,000 for the administration of a fund of $160,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BENTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LIND. Now, when you appropriate $2,500 for a superintendent of street sweepers and give him, say, eighteen or twenty assistants—that may be more than the bill shows, but it is a large number—and salaries running from twelve to fifteen hundred dollars, I think I am justified in saying that the committee is somewhat extravagant, and that would appear so to a man who has only had experience in Minneapolis, or St. Paul, or Chicago, or any other city, I venture to say.

How can you justify paying the principal of a school, a college graduate, only $1,500—and that is in harmony with the salaries of teachers all over the country—and then appropriate in the same bill and pay the superintendent of street sweepers $2,500? How can you justify paying the teacher who teaches your children and my children only $720 and pay an assistant superintendent of street sweepers $1,500? I would like to have these anomalies reconciled. I say under these circumstances that the members of the committee ought to be willing to hear a little comment and possibly a little criticism on this bill.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen of the committee are not only willing but anxious to hear all the criticism that is directed toward the public good, and so far as this criticism ministers to the public good the committee will listen to it and heed it and try to act upon it the next time it handles a bill. That is the disposition of the committee, and gentlemen generally ought not to misunderstand it.

Mr. LIND. Mr. Chairman, let me call attention to one other thing. Here you have an excise board. What do excise officers do in this city? Exactly what they do in Minneapolis or St. Paul or Chicago—look after the liquor licenses. We have in Minneapolis one officer who gets, I think, $1,500 a year. Here you have a chief clerk at $2,000, one clerk at $1,200, one clerk at $1,000, and a messenger at $900—in all, $4,900. Just think of that, for looking after the liquor licenses in this city! It is absurd. Then take your office for collecting the personal-property tax here. We have appropriated for a collector $4,000, a deputy collector $1,800, and so on—I will not read it all—a total of $19,400, twice the amount that the administration of the State treasury costs the State of Minnesota.

Mr. DUNWELL. May I ask the gentleman one question?

Mr. LIND. Certainly.

Mr. DUNWELL. Does not the gentleman consider that it would be fairer to line up the expenses of a great city like Washington with the expenses of some other great city, rather than the governmental expenses of a State?

Mr. LIND. I did that.

Mr. DUNWELL. The gentleman will allow me to inform him that the city of New York raises every year for the purposes of its government $100,000,000, while the government of the great State of New York does not cost one-fifth of that sum.

Mr. LIND. New York City is in a class by itself: I concede that. I am not here to discuss New York: but I venture to say to members of this committee that if you take the budget of any city in the country of the size of Washington, or approximately its size, you will find that that other city does not appropriate half the money that this city is spending.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LIND] has expired.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I should like to ask my colleague just one more question, and then I will yield to him my time for an answer. Does my friend undertake to say that the cost of collecting the State taxes in the State of Minnesota bears any comparison to the expense of such collection in this city?

Mr. LIND. I do mean to say that I have a right to compare the expenses in the city of Minneapolis with the expenses in Washington City, and to say that in the city of Minneapolis we do not spend one-quarter of the amount that is spent here in the same way. In Minneapolis the collections are made by the treasurer and his deputies without any other expense to the city, and the cost there is not one-fourth of what it is here.

You have no treasurer here in the sense that we have in Minneapolis. I realize that perfectly. But take the city comptroller's office of any city in our State—an office which I judge is substantially the same as your auditor's office here—and you will find that the administration of your auditor's office here costs six times as much as the administration of the corresponding office in Minneapolis. It seems to me that such a condition of things is absolutely indefensible.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last word. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LIND] has been comparing the expenditures for the District of Columbia with the expenditures for the State of Minnesota—a very unfair comparison. The gentleman must understand that in one institution over here which is provided for in this bill there are over 100 people that come from different States of the Union.

Mr. LIND. I understand perfectly well—and I do not want my language to be otherwise construed—that it does cost more in Washington for many of these items of expenditure; and we are all willing that the appropriation shall be liberal, but nevertheless there ought to be a limit even to liberality and generosity.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes: but the gentleman comes now with this explanation, when his speech was along the other line—making comparison of expenditures here with expenditures of the State of Minnesota. And, as I started out to say, he forgets in one institution over here there are more than 100 people who come from different States of the Union and who are taken care of upon this bill. All along through this bill you will find not only expenses of the District of Columbia taken care of, but expenses of people that come from the different States who are here, and provision for their care is made in this bill.

The gentleman said a while ago in his explanation that he realizes that it costs more here than in some other places to provide for these different items of expenditure. The gentleman comes here upon a salary of $5,000. I do not suppose he speculates upon it. Yet if he could have $5,000 in the city of Minneapolis as a member of the State legislature of Minnesota, it would be a magnificent salary, and he could save out of it considerable money.

Take the whole public service for the District of Columbia and it is necessarily more expensive than that of any other city in the United States. Why? This is the capital city of the United States. We maintain more parks here all over this city than there are in other cities of the Union. For these numerous parks here watchmen must be provided. Do you find this extensive park system in Minneapolis? How many cities have parks that compare with the parks of Washington?

The parks in other cities are but as a drop in the bucket compared with those of Washington.

Mr. LIND. We have 40 miles of parks in the city of Minneapolis.

Mr. HEMENWAY. All these parks here in the city of Washington must be provided for. All along the line there are marked differences between this city and most other cities. The conditions in a State are wholly different, and it is unfair for any gentleman on this floor to compare the expenses for the District of Columbia with the expenditures for a State, because as everyone must realize, it must be much more expensive to care for this capital city of the United States, which is being made the most beautiful city of the world, than to pay the expenses of maintaining some other city of the Union.

Now, as to these charities.

The Committee on Appropriations does not legislate. It reports appropriations in compliance with law; and if we place upon this bill a single item that is not authorized by law, any Member of the House may take the provision out of the bill by a point of order. We do not make the law. It was made by Congress at the suggestion of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Now, as to the charities, we all agree that it seems as though there was too much money paid out here for charities. We have been trying to solve the problem. The Committee on the District of Columbia have been trying to solve the problem, and some two or three years ago they worked out this legislation for a board of charities. Upon that board they placed these distinguished gentlemen, George W. Cook, Charles C. Neill, Simon Wolf, John Joy Edson, S. W. Woodward, conceded, I believe, to be some of the most distinguished citizens not only of the District of Columbia, but of the United States, and said to them: "Gentlemen, here is a serious problem. You are paying too much of your money out for charities. Here is the District of Columbia paying one half of this money and the Government of the United States paying the other half by way of a tax upon our great public business here. Figure this out and see if you can not save some money for the people."

This board of charities have gone to work. They are men of high character. They say they are working it out, but yet the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD], who helped inaugurate this legislation, comes in and says that the board are not working it out to his satisfaction. They are not working it out to my satisfaction. But naturally we come back——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEMENWAY. We come back, naturally, and ask the question, "What are we going to do about it?" The Committee on the District of Columbia has performed. Congress has performed. This board has been created. They say they are doing the best they can. It is easy to criticise. Some one gets up and criticises and says they are not doing it. Gentlemen, suggest a remedy! Your committee will legislate. Your committee has the power to bring to Congress some bill to remedy this defect. Come along with it. We want it. The subcommittee in charge of this bill for three or four days worked with this board of charities——

Mr. COWHERD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Certainly.

Mr. COWHERD. I think the gentleman is mistaken in saying that I do not approve the report of the board of charities on the question of the Government ceasing to go into partnership with these charities.

Mr. HEMENWAY. But the gentleman says we are spending large sums of money to carry into effect their work. The board of charities recommended the expenditure of every dollar carried in this bill and more. The Committee on Appropriations cut down their recommendation.

Mr. COWHERD. That is a question of the pay roll: but on the question of their recommendation as to the way that the charitable appropriations should be expended I want to say that I do not agree with them; and I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the board of charities recommended striking out these appropriations for a lot of these small charities with which you are in partnership, and you refused to accept their recommendations, but appropriated for them.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Will the gentleman, for instance, move upon the floor to strike from this bill the appropriation of a thousand dollars for the Newsboys' and Children's Aid Society? And does he believe for a minute that if the Committee on Appropriations had stricken from this bill this item some Member would not have got up on this floor to move to put it back so quickly that you could not have had time to think about it? And nearly every Member would have been scrambling to his feet to vote to put it back. Take any one of these items, and let the Committee on Appropriations strike it out, as they have tried to do in the past, and see how quickly the Members of this House would get to their feet to vote to put each item back in again. Why, I see sitting all around me Members who, if you touch any one of these little items here, will rally their friends around them and put them back into this bill so quickly you would hardly know what had happened, if the Committee on Appropriations undertook to strike them out.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to his colleague?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I think instead of retarding reform it is the duty of the gentleman to promote it.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman will please put his question, if he has one. I have only five minutes, and I can not yield for a speech.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The House has courteously extended the gentleman's time and I will get my own time. How does the gentleman explain the fact that it costs for the support of an inmate of an eleemosynary institution in the city of Washington one-half more than it costs in the State of Indiana? And that is the system that the gentleman is defending.

Mr. HEMENWAY. How can the gentleman explain that it costs twice as much for him to board in a hotel in Washington as it would to board in a hotel in Fort Wayne?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. There is a difference entirely in that.

Mr. HEMENWAY. There is absolutely no difference in the principle. I did not yield to the gentleman to make a speech. How does he explain that he pays at his hotel more than twice as much for his living as he would at Fort Wayne, Ind?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That would have no application.

Mr. HEMENWAY. It necessarily costs more here, and the Committee on Appropriations can not regulate the cost; and it is therefore for this board to regulate the cost. And the distinguished gentlemen I have mentioned as being in charge of this board of charities do that.

The Committee on Appropriations cut down their recommendations until they insist that it would not be possible to properly take care of the charities of the District of Columbia. They come back and say, "You are putting the knife in here so deep that people are going to suffer in this District; that people are going to go without coal or without food when they want it, because the Committee on Appropriations is cutting down our estimates." Yet we have the criticism, and what does it amount to? The gentlemen who criticise do not get up and move to reduce these appropriations. They do not want to take the responsibility that some one who deserves charity shall not get it.

Mr. LIND. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I am glad to do so.

Mr. LIND. For one who is not on the committee it is not practicable to move amendments. But, for instance, take this provision on page 7, lines 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, where you appropriate $6,008 for the sealer of weights and measures.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes.

Mr. LIND. It is ridiculous on its face.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Does the gentleman know what his duties are?

Mr. LIND. Yes.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman has not investigated to learn what the sealer of weights and measures does, or he can not say that.

Mr. LIND. I know what they do elsewhere.

Mr. HEMENWAY. But the gentleman does not know what they do here. Now, let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. LIND. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks that his time may be extended for five minutes. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Minnesota and other persons have criticised the appropriations for charities?

Mr. LIND. I have not.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman has compared the appropriation here with the statement of what is done in his own State.

Mr. LIND. Now, Mr. Chairman, I criticised no portion of this appropriation for the schools nor charities, under the circumstances. I agree with the gentleman from Missouri and the chairman of the subcommittee that it is a proper subject for reform.

Mr. HEMENWAY. And the gentleman compares the expenditures here with those of his own State, and by that very comparison intimates that extravagant appropriations are made. Now, I want to ask him this question.

Mr. LIND. Well.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The board of charities, composed of these distinguished gentlemen whose names I have given, recommended to the Committee on Appropriations that we appropriate $1,265,000, in round figures, for charities. The Committee on Appropriations only appropriates $785,000 for charities, or nearly $500,000 less than their recommendation. Now, these gentlemen say, "Your cut will result in some body suffering." Now, will the gentleman suggest that we cut the appropriation?

Mr. LIND. Not at all. The gentleman entirely misapprehended my remarks. These things I would not cut: but it was on the administrative features, where you have too many officers drawing extravagant salaries; it is that portion that I would get at.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Which one of the salaries?

Mr. LIND. I have not studied them in detail.

Mr. HEMENWAY. That is it, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LIND. I will mention some.

Mr. HEMENWAY. When we get back to the details of the question they never answer.

Mr. LIND. I will answer.

Mr. HEMENWAY. They make comparisons with the expenditures for the charities of their States and expenditures for charities of the District of Columbia, and when we get back to the merits of the question, and say, "Will you take the responsibility of making the appropriation and cutting the appropriation as you think it should be?" they say "No." Yet the criticism comes by way of comparison.

Mr. LIND. Now, I want to ask the gentleman a question, if he will yield to me.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Certainly.

Mr. LIND. Here you appropriate $1,600 for superintendent of electric work. He is probably a college man, a man of scientific attainment. Do you think that is too much?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I think not.

Mr. LIND. Do you think it is enough?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I do not know whether it is or not. I should think it is.

Mr. LIND. I should think it is.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Is it not a good service?

Mr. LIND. Yes. Now, how can you justify an appropriation of a like amount of salary to the assistant superintendent of street sweepers?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Well, the gentleman hangs onto the street-sweeping business as if it were honey.

Mr. LIND. No.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The city of Washington boasts that it has the cleanest streets——

Mr. LIND. A gentleman here suggests that it is "pie," not "honey."

Mr. HEMENWAY. Well, he hangs onto it as if it were honey on buckwheat cakes.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Will the gentleman permit me? The salary to which the gentleman from Minnesota refers was fixed in a Democratic Administration, and we have simply repeated it.

Mr. LIND. Does that justify it?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I do not say it is justified on that ground. In reply to the criticism the gentleman has made, which I think is made purely to go to the public, I will state that this salary has not only run for years, but the duties of the superintendent of street sweeping is not such an insignificant duty.

Mr. LIND. No; this is the assistant.

Mr. HEMENWAY. He is the man in charge of a whole lot of men. He is a man who must have the ability to see that these men perform their work and perform it properly and keep the streets in good order. Now, you can not find that kind of a man for less than $1,500 a year.

Mr. LIND. You give him $2,500.

Mr. HEMENWAY. No; that is the salary of the chief.

Mr. LIND. Yes.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Does the gentleman think that a laboring man who is competent to superintend a gang of street sweepers, covering a large section of territory, is too well paid when he gets $1,500 a year?

Mr. LIND. No; but very few of them get it.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Is the gentleman complaining that labor is being too well paid?

Mr. LIND. Labor is not getting too much; that is the misfortune; it is the superintendents here who are getting too much.

Mr. HEMENWAY. What is the gentleman's criticism, then, if labor is not too well paid? Does the gentleman say that the superintendent does not have to labor; a man who has to move around from one crowd of street sweepers to another, does he not have to labor?

Mr. LIND. Yes; but any laborer would be glad to exchange jobs with him every day in the year, and the laborer is paid $1.50 per day.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes; but, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, I want to say that I am tired of these gentlemen dealing in generalities, saying that as compared with the States our charities here are paid too much, yet when you get down to break sticks with them and ask them whether or not they are willing to take the responsibility of making a deeper cut than the Committee on Appropriations made they say "No." Then meet the question fairly. If the Committee on Appropriations does not cut this item enough when they cut off $500,000, be kind enough to say so, and do not by comparison undertake to state that this committee has been extravagant in its appropriations.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes, if I may have a minute or two later, I will yield.

Mr. COWHERD. Does the gentleman believe that his defense here—does the gentleman wish to put the defense for his committee upon the ground that some Member not familiar with the items of the bill ought to offer here on the hasty reading of it a substitute, and that if he does not do that therefore he does not do his duty?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I am not offering a defense; I am asking gentlemen when they attack to say why they attack.

Mr. COWHERD. Does the gentleman not know that no man except the members on the committee who sat at the hearings and heard the evidence is prepared to offer a substitute to these items and say just what clerks should be taken off and what should be left on?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I suggest that any man who does not understand the question he is discussing ought not to attempt to criticise.

Mr. COWHERD. But the gentleman admits the justice of the criticism.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I do not admit the justice of the criticism.

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman in charge of the bill admitted it.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I simply say here that gentlemen who have been trying to criticise these appropriations for charities have not the courage to stand up and say that the Committee on Appropriations did not cut deep enough—and possibly too deep—when they cut these estimates.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in his capacity as watchdog of the Treasury would not be found in this Congress obstructing reform in the interest of the Treasury, which, he stated in a former speech, was threatened with a deficit of forty-two millions; but he complains of criticism not specifying, and seeks to charge on the Members of this House not on the Appropriations Committee the duty incumbent upon the Appropriations Committee of saving us the very fear that he has already referred to in the matter of a deficiency. Now, if the gentleman wants a specific illustration, I will give it to him, and it is with reference to the cost of maintaining the insane at the insane asylum of the District and of the United States, where it cost $220 per capita—which will be a surprise to Members on this floor to know—when in their own States and in my State it costs less than $150 per capita, and in the estimate in my State is included improvements of a minor nature.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Let me ask the gentleman if the cost which he mentions of $220 per capita has not been materially reduced by Republican administration?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The gentleman will inject politics into this nonpartisan question of reform and economy, showing the animus that inspires him in criticising us for insisting, in line with his original suggestion that we should have the probe put into the District of Columbia, where he knows the greatest evils prevail. Has he not read the public press? Will he stand up in defense of institutions by private parties coming to the public Treasury for their support, as they have done this morning, and say he is oblivious to the recommendation that these should be cut down? And yet he essays that rôle as chairman of appropriations, charged with economy in the administration of the Government. This bill to-day provides for the support of the department in the District of Columbia that has in one of its offices a $300 imported rug upon which they wipe their feet when they enter.

The gentleman stands up for this system which charges $220 per capita for care of the insane when he knows that the State charges less that $150 for the same support, and he justifies it on the ground that the exorbitant hotel keepers regard Members of Congress as legitimate prey, and he fails to state that we are in the city of Washington but six months in the year and must pay double the price for hotel accommodations. The gentleman from Indiana says that the Republicans of the State of Indiana have done something, and that the criticism of the Appropriations Committee is unjust because some Member not connected with that committee should do this or that to correct these evils and secure reforms. In face of this declaration of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, who stands, like Dame Partington, with a mop to keep back the ocean, do you expect the Democratic party to be here, with the chairman of the Appropriations Committee representing the extravagance and evils, to present measures to the Republican side of the House? Are we not justified in relying upon the statement that you are threatened with a deficit of $42,000,000? Are we justified in asking the Appropriations Committee of the House to perform this duty? No more fertile field has ever been presented in any portion of our country than is here offered—this splendid field for reform which is presented by the District of Columbia—and the gentleman himself knows it. Therefore our presentation of these matters, as we go along, in opposition to the gentleman and his colleagues, who wince under presentation of extravagance, will not be criticised by the country when we come to find the amount of the appropriations at the end of the session. [Applause.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, when the chairman of the Appropriations Committee attempted to reply to the criticisms leveled at this bill, he carefully shunned details. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LIND] called his attention to the appropriation of $6,000 for the sealer of weights and measures. Did the chairman of the committee discuss it candidly? No. He turned upon the gentleman from Minnesota and inquired: "Can you tell me what this officer does in the District of Columbia?" He did not take us into his confidence and tell us what showing was made before the Appropriations Committee to warrant this outrageous appropriation. Washington is not a great commercial city. It is a capital city. In point of commerce it is not nearly as important as cities of a hundred or a hundred and fifty thousand inhabitants elsewhere? What does the sealer of weights and measures do in other cities? He verifies the accuracy of the weights and measures used in commerce. Does he do anything else here? If the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations knows that some extraordinary duty devolves upon him, the sealer of weights and measures in the capital city, it would afford us much pleasure for him to rise and state what that duty is. When my colleague from Missouri directed attention to the employment of 40 officials at comfortable salaries for taking care of 250 boys in the Reform School, the gentleman from Minnesota disregarded the question raised and scolded critics who complain of such appropriations.

It is not true that in all respects the expenses of the municipal government in Washington differs in its responsibilities and necessities from municipal governments elsewhere. For instance, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MCCLEARY] says that there are a hundred men in public institutions here who came from the States of the Union. Why, if he is informed on this subject—and I doubt not that he is—he knows that this complaint is universal. All other cities suffer the same misfortune. The subject has been discussed by economists in the magazines. Inevitably the unfit drift to the cities. In proportion to the importance of the commercial city this drift is large or small. The result is that in cities like St. Louis and Chicago, and even Kansas City, St. Joseph, St. Paul, and Minneapolis, in the West, this drift of the criminals and degenerates is very large and is constantly increasing. Recently I saw in a newspaper a statement to the effect that in the city of St. Louis over 70 per cent of the persons confined in the different eleemosynary and charitable institutions of that city came from neighboring counties and States.

I know that in my own city they drift in upon us from Iowa, a neighboring State, from Kansas, and from Nebraska, and from the adjacent counties of my own State. Why, if this great city escapes with only 100 nonresident inmates of its charitable and eleemosynary institutions, it is very fortunate, for I will venture the assertion that a similar showing can not be made by any other city on the continent. Furthermore, in proportion to the congestion of the population, in proportion to the hard conditions of human life, in proportion to the insanitary conditions of the people's houses, you will find disease, deterioration, and a failure of self-support prevalent among the weaker classes.

Other cities suffer far more than Washington from these conditions.

Mr. Chairman, it may be said that this is mere cheese paring; that only a few items in this bill are open to these criticisms. These items are manifestly open to criticism. Their absurdity is disclosed by a mere glance at the bill. What, then, shall we say as to those items not self-explanatory and concerning which information is not forthcoming? Eight hundred thousand dollars for charity in a city like this, every paragraph punctuated with an extravagant salary list, is not a fair appropriation. If so large a sum were needed for charitable purposes, there is not a Member on this floor who would withhold one dollar or one cent essential to the discharge of all the duties of humanity imposed upon us by modern notions of municipal duty. We would vote more than that if it were necessary; but when in every page and every line of it there is manifest extravagance and misappropriation of the money of the taxpayers, it will take something more than the generalization of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to justify its passage.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I think few of the Members of this House are familiar with these organizations in the city of Washington, organizations for the care of the unfortunate people of this city. We have here a cosmopolitan population. Men come here from all over the United States. I have examined this part of the bill pretty carefully, and the only fault that I have to find with the committee is that their appropriations are below what they ought to be. Now, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] a few moments ago opposed some of the appropriations. I want to say to him that what he knows about the institutions of this city which must care for the unfortunate he could put in a pamphlet of two pages, and what he does not know about it would take a book of 400 pages to tell. There are the blind, and there are the paralytic, and there are all classes of unfortunates. Now, what has Congress done to provide for these people in the District? There is not an institution as large as a dog house or a henhouse in which to take care of them. That is true. If the Congress of the United States would appropriate money to put up an asylum for the blind or an asylum for the people who are unfortunate in many other ways, then we could care for them; but there is absolutely not an institution ten feet square wherein we may provide for these unfortunate people.

Now, what is the result? You have got to put them in Catholic institutions, and institutions run by Presbyterians, and by Methodists, and by Lutherans, and by various denominations. There should be no objection made on this ground. I have made careful examinations in this matter, and I say we have 50,000 people in the city of Washington coming from all the States who are here and have got to be cared for by these institutions. Now, the proposition is here that the Secretary of War shall be the custodian of this fund. He makes the contracts with these different institutions to care for these unfortunates.

Mr. LIND. Did I understand the gentleman to say that there are 50,000 people in this city receiving charity?

Mr. MAHON. Yes; that is below the amount. They come from your State; they come from my State——

Mr. LIND. I think not from my State.

Mr. MAHON. Yes, they do; they come from every State in the Union. There are here more than 50,000 of those people, who must be cared for by these private denominational institutions.

Mr. Chairman, in the Fifty-fifth Congress we had a fight here about voting money to sectarian institutions. I took the position on this floor that until Congress provided institutions for the care of these unfortunates we had no right to refuse to make these appropriations. Take the Providence Hospital—a Catholic institution—a magnificent hospital. In that institution there is what is called an alcoholic ward. Over 3,000 men from this city are sent to that institution to be cared for, and their lives saved from destruction by excesses in drink. You have the Presbyterian Hospital; you have the Methodist Hospital; you have all these institutions.

Now, there is no justification for anybody attacking these appropriations. I say they are insufficient. If we want to care for these people outside of sectarian institutions, then let the Congress of the United States make appropriations for an institution for the blind, an institution for paralytics, an institution for infants thrown out upon the world without any fault of their own. We must make appropriations for the care of these people in public institutions, and until we do that there is nothing else to be done except to make contributions to private institutions for the care of these unfortunates.

Mr. Chairman, I undertake to make this declaration—that there is not a city in the United States or a State that cares for its unfortunates as the city of Washington is doing in these private institutions. The expense for the care of these unfortunate people is 35 per cent less than expenses for similar purposes in the States of the Union. I ask the attention of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON], who is opposed to these appropriations, and I say they are not large enough. I know that the Committee on the District of Columbia have cut down this bill to the last bottom dollar; and what the gentleman knows about the institutions of this city and the care of the poor and unfortunate in these institutions could be put, as I have heretofore said, in a pamphlet of two pages, while what he does not know on this subject would fill a volume as big as Webster's Unabridged Dictionary.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I think the gentleman is mistaken about the per capita cost in the District of Columbia of caring for these people, as compared with the cost in the various States.

Mr. MAHON. No, sir.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I only desire respectfully to call the attention of the gentleman to that point.

Mr. MAHON. Has the gentleman made any investigation on this subject?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I have.

Mr. MAHON. Let the gentleman take the State of Pennsylvania or the State of New York or the State of Indiana or the State of Illinois, and other States, and he will find that the percentage there for taking care of these unfortunates is 34 per cent higher than in the District of Columbia.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Does the gentleman mean the percentage for the whole of them?

Mr. MAHON. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Take the gentleman's State. What is the expense there for taking care, we will say, of the insane?

Mr. MAHON. It is 40 per cent in my State, and in this District 20 per cent.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The expense per capita for the care of insane persons in this District is $220.

Mr. MAHON. The asylum for the insane here is an institution owned by the Government of the United States. In this District we have to care for infants born out of wedlock; we have to care for the poor woman who becomes paralyzed or blind, or the unfortunate man who becomes a victim to alcoholic excesses. Fifty thousand of these people are thrown upon this city.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MAHON. I ask an extension of my time for two minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. MAHON. Now, what are you going to do with these people? Thus far this Congress has put them under the care of private institutions. You have your Providence Hospital, your Presbyterian Hospital, your Home for Children, your Home for Old Women, your Home for Old Men, embracing many people who do not belong to this District, but who come here and through unfortunate circumstances are thrown upon public charity.

Now, I say again (and I am able to back up the statement with figures in my possession) that the cost of caring for these unfortunate people in this District, through these private institutions, is 30 per cent lower here than for similar support in any State of the Union, and this bill, instead of being regarded as excessive in its appropriation, should make appropriation 30 per cent higher than those that are reported. I take it for granted that no Member of Congress would want these poor unfortunate people, who thus become objects of charity, to die absolutely from disease or destitution. They should be cared for with the same benevolent spirit that is shown for the unfortunate in any of the States of the Union.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman, the committee having this matter in charge has very kindly seemed to court suggestions, even though they border on criticism of number and amounts of the appropriations which are proposed in the bill in carrying out a policy of administration in this city which is maintained upon an extravagant basis. Now, I wish to call the attention of the House and the administration of this city to one point. The gentleman having this bill in charge [Mr. MCCLEARY of Minnesota] and the chairman of the great Appropriations Committee [Mr. HEMENWAY] have seen fit to-day and upon a former occasion to speak in high terms of the cleanliness of this city. I join issue with them on that proposition. I undertake to say that, taking into consideration the conditions, natural and artificial, here in this city, Washington is the dirtiest city that I ever set foot in, and the dirt and filth contribute to disease more than in any city that I know. As authority for that statement I have the physicians of this city.

The most of your great avenues and streets are paved with asphalt. In some places you have cobbles or granite blocks, but most of the pavement is asphalt, making the streets as level and smooth as a billiard table, and hard and impenetrable. Nothing can get into cracks and crevices, joints or apertures. All the filth and increment is left and exposed right on the very top, where it can be taken off as readily as it could be taken off from any smooth, solid surface. All that is required to be done is for the superintendent of the sweeping of the streets, or others having the matter in charge, to see to it that the filth is thoroughly and wholly removed—simply a matter of sweeping clean on a smooth surface. You would expect to find a clean street under these conditions; but what condition do we find? A half-swept, besmirched and besmeared street or avenue. This winter we have had an epidemic here of what is commonly known as "grip," affecting a far greater proportion of the people of Washington than are affected in any other city in the whole country, according to the population, so I am told. It has been attributed, in large measure, to the impurities of the atmosphere, filled with poisonous germs and bacteria caused by the filth accumulating upon the streets in a dried, pulverized condition, and then being scattered abroad in the form of fine dust, getting into our nostrils and ears and mouths, inoculating the system with millions of poisonous germs and causing sickness. If we had advanced in the science, skill, and facilities in cleaning streets here in Washington as they have in many other places, we would not have the deplorable condition of the streets which we now have. Up in my city of Worcester, with 125,000 inhabitants, we have a car sprinkler, which can do the work of twenty horse sprinkling carts, and it is in use whenever the streets are dry and dusty, summer or winter. I was surprised when I came here and saw nothing of the kind, but that the old-fashioned water carts were used when any sprinkling was done.

My attention was also called to the fact that there was but very little sprinkling of the streets anyway here, either in summer or winter. Whatever filth falls, after a little of the thickest of it on top is scraped off, the rest, which is usually about one-half, is left to be ground and pulverized when it gets dry, so that it is almost as fine as flour, and then in that dry condition the wind takes it and scatters it through the air to a distance of 50 or 100 feet from the surface of the ground, polluting and poisoning and breeding bacteria in its course. In my city of Worcester this car sprinkler does a great deal toward keeping the surface of the pavement moistened, but not sloppy. Pennsylvania avenue is one of the finest avenues in the world, and one of the easiest to be kept respectably clean, and if a car sprinkler was run over it at different times of the day, the dust and filth would be kept down, and then when night came the streets should be swept, not by one of these little white-winged fellows, but with a regular steam sweeper, or a sweeper to which horsepower is attached, that could cleanse the streets between 12 o'clock at night and 6 o'clock in the morning, so that for a little time at least in the forenoon of each day we might have clean streets. Then in the afternoon the hand sweeping could take place, if this sweeping was thoroughly done instead of half done. We see these men who go about with their little hobbyhorses in the form of hand sweepers. They take off only the top surface of some of the filth upon the streets, not getting it all, and spread the remainder over a large surface, where it is left to dry.

The man passes on with his little cart and scraper, taking some of the scrapings, and the rest is left to be pulverized by the teams that go over it. In a little while it is as fine as flour and is scattered about in the air. I have no doubt every Member of the House noticed when he first came here how much more frequently he had to brush his clothes and wash out his ears and nose than he did at home, because of this pulverized dust in the atmosphere, which contains bacteria and which impregnates everything with its poisonous germs. I say that if the superintendent of the sweeping of the streets in this city would get out and see what is being done in other cities and introduce here some of the improvements that we find in the smaller cities of the country, we could make the streets of this city far more cleanly than they are, and, what is of more vital importance, contribute largely to improved health conditions here. If you pass from here to the Treasury Department this afternoon and look along on either side of the street you will find ample evidence of the truth of statements I make; you will find little bunches of poisonous substances waiting for the sun to dry them and germinate the bacteria and for the wind to blow them about before they are gathered up.

[Here the hammer fell.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HENRY of Connecticut having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

CHILD-CARING INSTITUTIONS.

Board of Children's Guardians: For the Board of Children's Guardians, created under the act approved July 28, 1892, namely: For administrative expenses, including salaries of agents, not to exceed $2,400, expenses in placing and visiting children, and all office and [illegible] expenses, $[illegible];

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman of the subcommittee for a little information. I notice in line 19, for administrative expenses, sundries, etc., $10,000; in line 23, for maintenance, etc., $12,000; for the board and care of children committed, etc., and the total appropriated for this board is $[illegible]. Can the gentleman state how many children are cared for in these institutions? I have no information upon that subject, and I should like to know. No doubt they are great institutions and probably the money is well expended, but I should like just a little more information on the subject.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. According to the report of the board having charge of these matters—

On the 1st of December, 1903, the board had 1,042 permanent wards. Of these, 393 were white and 649 were colored; 497 were boys and 545 girls; 200 were in institutions, for whom board was paid; 116 in private homes, for whom board was paid; 670 in free homes, costing nothing except the expense of supervision, which, according to the latest report of the Board of Guardians, was $11.21 per annum per capita.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That until and including June 30, 1905, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to advance, on the requisition of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, made in the manner now prescribed by law, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary from time to time to meet the general expenses of said District, as authorized by Congress, and to reimburse the Treasury for the portion of said advances payable by the District of Columbia out of the taxes and revenues collected for the support of the government thereof: Provided, That all advances made under this act and under the acts of February 11, 1903; June 1, 1903, and March 3, 1903, not reimbursed to the Treasury of the United States on or before June 30, 1905, shall be reimbursed to said Treasury out of the revenues of the District of Columbia from time to time, within five years, beginning July 1, 1905, together with interest thereon at the rate of 2 per cent per annum until so reimbursed: Provided further, That the Auditor for the State and other Departments and the Auditor of the District of Columbia shall each annually report the amount of such advances, stating the account for each fiscal year separately, and also the reimbursements made under this section, together with the balance remaining, if any, due to the United States: And provided further, That nothing contained herein shall be so construed as to require the United States to bear any part of the cost of street extensions, and all advances heretofore or hereafter made for this purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury shall be repaid in full from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. PERKINS. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking a question of the gentleman in charge of the bill. I should like to ask, Mr. Chairman, what is the amount of the advances that have been made by the United States to the District of Columbia?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. It is about $1,600,000 at this date.

Mr. PERKINS. How much will be made in this bill?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. About $400,000, in round numbers.

Mr. PERKINS. Not more than that?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I think not.

Mr. PERKINS. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he sees any reasonable ground to expect that these advances will ever be repaid?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I do, Mr. Chairman. For instance, take the bill we are now considering. Many of the expenditures in this bill are for permanent improvements which will be completed in the very near future. For instance, we spend $1,600,000 in round numbers this year in completing the water-filtration plant. That will be out of the bill the next year entirely. We expend other large sums for approximate completion of the sewage-disposal system, of which I spoke yester lay. If not next year, the year following we will have that general system completed, and the large appropriation for it will be out of the bill. With such items out, there will be a remainder every year from the regular income of the District out of which we can pay all the interest and make some payment on the principal.

Mr. PERKINS. Now, does the gentleman think that the expenses of the District will be less? Will they not increase in the future as they have in the past?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. We have not increased current expenses very much this year, Mr. Chairman, nor last year. Last year, in answer also in part to what has been said on the other side, I think we put in only two increases of salaries and practically no increases of employment aside from the schools and police force. This year we put in some additions for the schools and for fire protection. So after the regular payment of the expenses of the District there will be left, we believe, a reasonable sum to apply on the principal of the debt.

Mr. PERKINS. Why is it impossible to increase the revenues of the District?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. We have just got through last year making an effort to increase them, and we have materially increased them. We added a tax on personal property which had therefore not been made, and increased the rate of taxation upon real estate. We framed a bill last year on what seemed to be the judgment of the committee and of the House and of Congress as to what ought to be done in the premises, and it does not seem as though we should open the matter again now. We should leave this new plan of taxation in undisturbed operation for a while at least.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 72, after line 8, insert:

"No part of any money appropriated by this act shall be available for paying expenses of horses and carriages or drivers thereof for the personal use of any officer provided for by this act."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, that amendment——

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order, so as to hear the explanation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I have no objection to the gentleman presenting his point of order at this time.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is probably not subject to a point of order, but I would be glad to have the gentleman explain his amendment and its necessity, in view of the fact that we have already covered this same ground in the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk, and which has been read, is the language placed on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill that passed the House, restricting the use of carriages by Government officials. The bill in that form went to the Senate, and I find, as shown by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, on page 2459, that the Senator having the bill in charge said:

There has grown up a practice whereby almost every head of a bureau or Assistant Secretary or Assistant Postmaster-General seems to have been able to get a carriage at Government expense. There has been a good deal of talk about it and almost a scandal, and the committee thought it was desirable to limit it to certain officials, so that there should be no further question as to who is entitled to a carriage at Government expense. We have some ourselves at Government expense, and a good many other people ought not to have them, I think.

The language of that bill also included, in addition to what the amendment now proposes to include, that the heads of Departments and the Secretary to the President should be allowed this privilege, limiting itself to the purposes of that bill. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to make it safe. The Senate, however, in their amendment adopted an amendment to the House amendment saying that in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill and in all other acts by Congress no carriages shall be permitted to the various officers.

Now, if the gentleman has in mind the superintendent of schools and the superintendent of waterworks, as to these two I have no objection if he desires to amend by including their right to this privilege. But the act passed by the Senate cuts them all out, excluding those I have mentioned, in all bills. I think there should be a restriction on this right to the use of carriages. And in the interest of orderly legislation I want this bill to say so, as the matter is in the interest of reform and meets a crying evil. Now I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the gentleman, he says that in a bill which has already passed this House and is pending between the two Houses, the provision appears which he has just sent forward to be added to this bill. Am I correct?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But it also includes this—and the gentleman may not have heard me in making my statement—it includes the Senate amendment, that in no other acts of Congress shall this privilege be allowed.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Now, Mr. Chairman, taking the statement of the gentleman just as he makes it, I would like to ask him what good purpose is to be served by adding to this bill the paragraph which the gentleman himself says is in another bill which will be enacted into law before this bill has passed, a bill which has already passed the House and is now pending between the two Houses, being perfected, and which will become a law sooner than this bill? What good purpose will be served by putting on this bill the identical paragraph which will become a law before this bill does?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. This House has not passed upon that question. The Senate has passed upon that question, and I desire to support the proposition of the Senate and make this in the interest of orderly legislation, so that this bill may contain that provision which the Senate amendment carries upon it. On that the Senate has acted; this House has not.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Does the gentleman doubt that this House will agree to its own provision as amended, if the amendment is a good one?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. You can not tell when it goes into conference how this House will act upon any proposition before it, unless you resort to the difficult task of voting down the conference report.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. And therefore the gentleman would send with this bill similar language to conference?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I would send it to this particular conference, and I would have the House pass upon this salutary provision that met with the unanimous support of the Senate. It is a provision which the gentleman will not deny is a salutary one. And I hope that he will accept the proposition, because it is in the line of the House legislation on that subject in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. It is in this interest and in the same language as the Senate passed unanimously upon that subject. And now let the conference committee on that bill be supported with this provision now passed. What objection is there to it?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Then, Mr. Chairman, I rise in my own right. I invite the gentleman's attention and that of the committee to page 12 of this bill, where will be found, in lines 15 and 16, these words:

Provided, That horses and vehicles appropriated for in this act shall be used only for official purposes.

I repeat the language, since the gentleman from Indiana does not seem to have heard it—

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Yes, sir; I did hear the language.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota (reading):

That horses and vehicles appropriated for in this act shall be used only for official purposes.

Mr. Chairman, there is nothing new in the amendment introduced by the gentleman, as we had already put into this bill a paragraph having every good effect to be accomplished by the amendment proposed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The gentleman's provision, just read, says they may use carriages for official purposes, and my amendment seeks to escape the very language in which the gentleman affirmatively recognizes the use.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Why, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman assuredly will not say—just let me read this again.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. It says that they may employ these carriages for official use.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Does the gentleman object to that?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I say they shall not use carriages at all, except if the gentleman desires the superintendent of schools and the superintendent of waterworks to use them. If that is necessary, he can move that the amendment be amended for that purpose.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. The gentleman would not allow the chief of the fire department, for example, a horse and carriage to be used in the discharge of his official duties. Is that what the gentleman means?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. If that is true now, the Senate has already deprived you of it, if the language of its amendment prevails. I would permit necessary use, and so propose to the gentlemen the amendment to the amendment. If the provision in this act would hold the construction claimed, it would be objectionable to that use. The Senate has already cut you out.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana is willing that his proposed amendment shall be amended, showing that he recognizes that in its present form it is not only faulty, but mischievous.

In this bill we have already, as I have shown, taken the opportunity of forestalling any use of horses and carriages except for official purposes. That has been accomplished in the paragraph which I have already read. We are not going to agree that such officers as the chief of the fire department shall be denied a horse and carriage for his official use; but our provision denies horses and carriages "except for official use," thus accomplishing every good purpose sought.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Does the gentleman deny that carriages have been used for official purposes unwisely, unjustly, and without warrant of law?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Let me read the language of the provision again:

That the horses and vehicles appropriated for in this act shall be used only for official purposes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Which is the same purpose that they have been pretending to use them for—official purposes—under this system of abuse.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. How can the gentleman make it any stronger than that makes it? It is a waste of time to consider this amendment, for it is already in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was considered; and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk proceeded and read the last section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 4. That all laws and parts of laws to the extent that they are inconsistent with this act are repealed.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This bill is about to be reported to the House for final consideration and enactment. In my judgment the most difficult problem that faces us is municipal control. A great many other things demand attention, but no one problem seems to present difficulties so insoluble as that of city government. The expenses of other cities have been mentioned here, and it has been said that they afford no criterion by which to judge of the sufficiency or the insufficiency of the provisions for the expenses of this capital. One statement concerning them may be safely made. Extravagance, wastefulness, and dishonesty is the rule and economy and honesty the exception in the government of our cities. One gentleman said he thought the appropriations carried in this bill ought to be 30 per cent larger. I can well conceive of a bill carrying 30 per cent larger appropriations which would meet my cordial indorsement. Were a bill offered here to-day providing appropriations 30 per cent larger than this bill provides and the object of the appropriation was to beautify and adorn this great capital it would receive my support and the indorsement of the people of Missouri.

But if it provided for a sealer of weights and measures at a salary of $6,000 a year, and came from a committee whose only answer to a criticism of that provision was to inquire whether the gentleman making it knew the precise duties of that official, I think there is no sane voter in the United States who would not say that it was time to inquire where the money goes that is voted out of the pockets of the taxpayers of the whole country to expend here in Washington.

Mr. Chairman, we are the accredited representatives of the people of the several States. Most of us were sent here because the people of our districts thought that, to the extent of our ability, we would faithfully perform the duties of lawmakers. The duty that devolves upon us to-day is to contribute to the solution of this insoluble problem of municipal control our best offering. Would you invite the city councils of the great cities to inspect this bill as a guide? Would they find in it an example by following which they may sift out wrongful appropriations? The evil of city government most injurious to the public is the spoils system. It is a fact that with a large and frequently transient population it is very difficult to obtain in cities the very best results at the ballot box. It is difficult to place in charge of municipal governments those best able to administer the affairs of a great city.

But here no such difficulty exists. To safeguard Washington against evils unescapable in other cities, you abolished the right of self-government in the District of Columbia, and Congress undertakes to perform duties elsewhere performed by aldermen chosen at popular elections. This bill goes to the country as the highest exemplification of our capacity, sitting as a board of aldermen, for to-day we are charged with the duties of a city council. This bill goes to the country—explained by the subcommittee charged with its preparation, and defended by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations—as the best offering of the most inefficient city council that curses an American municipality. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the reading of the bill is concluded.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I now ask to return to page 22, as was agreed when we were on that page, to offer the following amendment, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 22, after line 15, insert:

"For the repair of the Anacostia Bridge under direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, $100,000, and the said Commissioners are authorized to enter into a contract or contracts for the repair of said bridge, to be completed within two years from July 1, 1904, at a cost not to exceed $250,000, to be paid from time to time as appropriations therefor may be made by law:

Provided, however, That before any part of this sum shall be used, the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company shall pay to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia the entire cost of the pavement lying between the exterior rails of the tracks and for a distance of 2 feet from the said exterior rails of said tracks on each side thereof and the entire floor system supporting said pavement, and said collector shall deposit one-half of same to the United States Treasury to the credit of the District of Columbia and one-half to the credit of the United States, nor shall said appropriation be available until said railroad company shall agree to assume one-half the cost of maintenance and repair of said new bridge to be collected in the same manner as the cost of laying pavements between the rails and tracks of street railways as provided for in section 5 of 'An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia,' approved June 11, 1878; and further, That this appropriation shall not be available until the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company shall agree that any other railroad company now or hereafter authorized by Congress to use said bridge shall have the right to use the tracks of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company thereon upon such reciprocal trackage and such other conditions as may be mutually agreed upon, and in case of failure to reach such an agreement that the supreme court of the District of Columbia, upon petition filed by either party, fix and determine the same."

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the point of order to the substitute offered on the ground that it is not authorized by existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman, if he desires to be heard.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of the bill a question, if he will permit me.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Certainly, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The bill as originally presented to the committee and as read yesterday was apparently for the purpose, at least this section was, of constructing a new bridge. I will ask now if that is still the intention, to construct a new bridge and at the same place?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. The language of the provision yesterday was "to reconstruct" the bridge. There is a bridge there now. The purpose of the provision was stated to be "to reconstruct" that bridge.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Did that amount to constructing a new bridge?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. That is a matter for the Commissioners to settle when they finally investigate the matter. How much of the existing bridge can be used I do not know.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I notice that the gentleman has changed the language now to "repair" the bridge.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Is that done simply to avoid the point of order?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. We think this work should be done, and we know that we can "repair" a bridge.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Then the gentleman will say that this is not to construct a new bridge?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. "The gentleman" will say that it is just what it purports to be—to reconstruct a bridge that is now there. How much of the existing structure can be used "the gentleman" does not know; does not pretend to know. He does not believe that anybody knows. That is a matter for investigation when they come to arrange for the repair or reconstruction.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I still insist on the point of order. I should hate to call this a subterfuge; but even if the present amendment truthfully states what it is proposed for, still there are other provisions of the bill that I think are subject to the point of order. I desire to read a portion of Rule XXI, section 2:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

I do not believe that it will be contended, Mr. Chairman, that this is a work that is already in progress. Therefore I contend that even the fore part of this substitute comes squarely within the operation of Rule XXI, to say nothing about the balance of the new legislation incorporated in the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LAWRENCE). The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair will cite a ruling made in the first session of the Fifty-seventh Congress to the effect that "the admissibility of an amendment should be judged from the provisions of its face, rather than from the purposes which circumstances may suggest." This amendment states that the appropriation made thereby is for the repairing of a bridge. The Chair will therefore rule that it is an appropriation for a work now in progress; that it is an expenditure previously authorized by law. The amendment provides that the appropriation shall be withheld unless certain conditions are complied with. All the provisos are distinct limitations upon this appropriation. The Chair will overrule the point of order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question having been put on agreeing to the amendment,

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota called for a division.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 76, noes 8.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise and report the bill as amended to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LAWRENCE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration House bill 12833, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments and with the recommendation that the bill with the amendments be passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there a separate vote demanded upon any of the amendments? [A pause.] In the absence of any demand for a separate vote the question will be taken upon the amendments en gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CONFERENCE REPORTS ON PENSION BILLS.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the several conference reports, which will be found in print on pages 2850 and 2851 of the RECORD. They are conference reports on private pension bills.

The SPEAKER. That is a matter of the highest privilege.

The House proceeded to consider, respectively, the reports of committees of conference on bills of the following titles, the reports having been already published on pages 2850 and 2851 of the RECORD:

H. R. 968. An act granting an increase of pension to Alfred H. Rogers;

H. R. 3776. An act granting an increase of pension to Alfred I. Judy;

H. R. 6022. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Travis;

H. R. 468. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry Christy;

H. R. 3903. An act granting an increase of pension to George C. Sherman;

H. R. 893. An act granting an increase of pension to Abram H. Hunt; and

H. R. 5176. An act granting an increase of pension to Alonzo Dutch.

The conference reports as read were respectively adopted, on motion of Mr. GIBSON.

Mr. GIBSON. I move to reconsider the several votes by which these conference reports have been agreed to, and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, and pending that motion I ask unanimous consent that the order of business for to-morrow be postponed until Tuesday next, so that when we have begun the consideration of this appropriation bill we may continue it from day to day until it is concluded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] asks unanimous consent that the order of business under the rules for to-morrow be transferred until Tuesday next. Is there objection?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I would like to understand whether the regular order for to-morrow will be the consideration of bills from the Committee on War Claims?

The SPEAKER. No; bills from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GIBSON. The Committee on War Claims has no objection to this change in the order of business.

Mr. SHERMAN. The War Claims Committee does not object, and at any rate business from the Committee on Claims has preference to-morrow. I consulted the chairman of the Claims Committee before making this request, and he has assented to it.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I will not object. I simply wished to understand the matter.

I understood that to-morrow was war-claims day. I now understand that it has been displaced by claims.

Mr. SHERMAN. To-morrow is private-bill day, with a preference for claims, not war claims.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. And I further understand that claims will be taken up on Tuesday.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. You will lose no time.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. And that no time will be lost.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is right.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Speaker, if this request is granted, will the Private Calendar be in the same situation on Tuesday that it otherwise would occupy to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. Precisely.

Mr. GRAFF. With reference to all bills on the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. Precisely. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make some agreement with reference to general debate, if possible.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would inquire of the gentleman if points of order have been reserved on the bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, yes; they were reserved long ago. I ask unanimous consent that general debate on the bill be limited to four hours. Is that agreeable?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think five hours will be as little as we could consent to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to five hours.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to five hours. Is there objection?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Two hours and a half on a side?

The SPEAKER. Two hours and a half on a side.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should have included in the request that the minority time be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] and the majority time by the chairman of the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HITT. I ask the gentleman from New York to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do, with pleasure.

Mr. HITT. I desire to call up a conference report that has just come over from the Senate, on the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, and I ask that the conference report itself be omitted and that, instead of reading it, the statement be read.

Mr. SHERMAN. Has it been printed in the RECORD?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to ask if the conference report has been printed in the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. Has the conference report been printed?

Mr. HITT. It has not. It just came in.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then it must take its usual course and be printed, under the rule.

The SPEAKER. It will be printed in the RECORD, under the rule.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12281) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 7, 8, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 20, 21, 42 and 44.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 19, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 36, 37, 38, 39, 41 and 43, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "four hundred and ninety-six thousand five hundred dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

HUGH A. DINSMORE,
Managers on the part of the House.

EUGENE HALE,
S. M. CULLOM,
H. M. TELLER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Statement of the managers on the part of the House to accompany the conference report upon the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill (H. R. 12281).

The managers on the part of the House of Representatives make the following statement of the result of the conference with the managers on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12281) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905.

The amount appropriated by the bill as it passed the House was $1,995,800.69. The increases added by the Senate amounted to $77,300, so that the bill as it passed the Senate appropriated $2,073,100.69.

The Senate receded from its amendments providing $30,000 for legation buildings at Seoul, Korea; $2,000 for the cost of cablegrams, etc., for consular reports, and $36,000 to provide for thirty clerks at the principal consulates.

The House receded from its disagreement to the provision for $1,000 additional salary for the minister to Roumania, Servia, and Greece; $5,000 additional for the charges d'affaires ad interim; for the secretaries of legation at Denmark and Portugal, at $1,800 each; for an increase of $1,000 to the consul at Lourenço Marquez, Africa; to the creation of consulates at Chungking and Hang Chow, China, at $1,000 each; to increases of $500 each in the consul's salary at Odessa, Russia; Budapest, Austria-Hungary; Ciudad Porfirio Diaz, Mexico, and Reims, France; to the provision fixing a salary of $1,500 instead of fees, about the same amount, at the consulates at Moncton, New Brunswick; Port au Prince, Haiti, and Turks Island, West India.

The clerk hire allowance at Monterey, Mexico, was increased $600. The titles of the consular posts at Lourenço Marquez, Tientsin, Chefoo, Fuchau, and Hankow were made "consuls," instead of "consuls-general," as provided by the Senate amendments.

The net decrease in conference from the bill as it passed the Senate is $53,000, making the amount of the bill as now reported $2,020,100.69.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12684) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes, with Mr. BOUTELL in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I shall occupy but a very brief portion of the time of the committee in stating the amounts appropriated by this bill and for what purposes and referring very briefly to the legislative matters contained in the bill.

In total there was estimated this year in the original estimates nearly a million dollars less than was carried in last year's appropriation bill. The bill as now presented to the House carries some $300,000 more than the amount found in the Book of Estimates: but save one or two items there is no appropriation in the bill that is not recommended by the Department or by the Bureau, either in the Book of Estimates or in some subsequent communication.

The total carried by the bill is $7,610,000. The total carried by the Book of Estimates was $7,400,000 and some odd. The amount appropriated last year was $8,500,000.

The general policy of the Government in reference to the Indians has not materially changed in the last three or four years. It has been extended, particularly in reference to doing away with rations and using the treaty moneys, especially for the Sioux, that it is provided we shall expend for them, in paying the Indians for their labor. In other words, they have enforced labor rather than feed them in idleness. That policy began some years ago, and pursued year by year has brought about a very much better condition of civilization and morality among the Indian tribes than had heretofore existed.

I have prepared here a statement, somewhat voluminous, taken from the reports of Commissioners of former years and taking extracts from reports of various agencies upon this general subject of employing Indian labor, which I will not detain this committee to read, but will insert in the RECORD. To my mind it is entertaining, and it is exceedingly gratifying to those who are interested in the uplifting and civilization of the Indian tribes.

The appropriation for schools is somewhat larger than it was last year, and somewhat larger than originally estimated for in the Book of Estimates.

I think it is known that the entire Indian population now is, in round numbers, 270,000, of which the New York Indians and the Indians of the Territory number some 70,000 or 80,000; so that there are, in round figures, 200,000 Indians in the United States exclusive of Alaska. During the past year there was enrolled in the various Indian schools, reservation and nonreservation—I am using entirely round figures—25,000 Indian children of both sexes, and an average attendance of some two or three thousand less than the enrollment in Government schools. The progress made in the schools, as appears by the report of the superintendent of schools, and of the head of the educational division of the department, and of the Commissioner, is gratifying.

I think I hardly need to elaborate before this Committee of the Whole the different kinds of schools and what is attempted to be accomplished thereby. I think it is pretty well known here. I think that is all I need to say in reference to schools.

I desire to call the attention of the committee to the report, which is No. 1022, in which this year, for the first time, we have set out in full the various treaty stipulations under which all the treaty provisions are made in the bill. I think the members of the committee and of the House will find that, not only in considering the bill at the present time but in future years, a ready pamphlet of reference.

There are a number of provisions in the bill, Mr. Chairman, which you will readily see are entirely out of order, obnoxious to the rule, and I shall not contend if any gentleman sees fit to make the point of order against them after hearing the explanations as we reach those provisions of the need and the requirement for them. If any gentleman raises a point of order at the time, they must go out.

There is no provision in the bill of a legislative nature that has not had the approval of the Committee on Indian Affairs as well as the approval of the Department. The Committee on Indian Affairs has given to the bill this year exhaustive consideration and examination. We have consumed all the time in at least a dozen or fifteen meetings in going over with great care each particular item of the bill; and they have been wonderfully unanimous in the conclusion reached in reference to all these items, whether they carry appropriations or are purely legislative provisions.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that is all I care to say at the present time. When we reach the reading of the bill it will give me, or give other members of the committee better versed in reference to certain provisions of it, pleasure to answer any inquiry that is made by any gentleman on the floor, giving them the fullest possible information that is to be obtained with reference to the items.

APPENDIX.

LABOR IN LIEU OF RATIONS.

Prior to 1902 rations were issued to all the Indians of a tribe without regard to their worldly condition, the well off as well as the poor. In that year, after consultation with the President, the order was given to drop all of the self-supporting from the ration roll.

After further consideration of the subject it was decided not to issue rations to any of the able-bodied at all, but to give them a chance to earn their own living; and an order to that effect was also given.

The steps that led up to that are described in the following pages.

PRECEPT AND PRACTICE.

Cutting off rations.—In previous reports some space was given to the discussion of the Indian's progress and the difficulties to be overcome on his way to civilization. It was pointed out that among the obstacles to his self-support the first and perhaps the principal one was the then prevailing ration system, which was justly condemned as encouraging idleness with its attendant vices and as foreign in its results to the very purpose for which it was designed. At the same time, with an evil, it was admitted to be a necessary one, to be endured only while the Indian was learning the art of self support, or at least put in a way where, by the exercise of ordinary industry, he could support himself. The continuance, however, of the practice of the indiscriminate issue of rations to all alike, without regard to their worldly condition, was earnestly opposed, and it was laid down as a correct rule of action that only the old and helpless should be supported, while the able-bodied, if not already self-supporting, should be given the opportunity to work and should then be required to take care of themselves.

Faith without works is dead. Realizing this, the Office set to work to show by its acts the sincerity of its belief.

And here it is proper to say that this change in the manner of dealing with the Indians was not a hasty conception on the part of the Office. Indeed, it was not new at all. It has been the hope and desire of enlightened men for many years. But inasmuch as it has been the subject of some harsh criticism and severe condemnation, and as the Indian Office has been freely charged with ignorance and blunders, it is simply fair that the motives which governed it and the principles which actuated it should be known and understood in order that the public may form an intelligent judgment on the matters involved. For this purpose it is necessary to go over some familiar ground and give it a somewhat extended notice.

The present movement began some two years ago, and arose out of a communication from chiefs and headmen of the Sioux Indians of the Rosebud Agency. About October, 1900, they addressed a letter to the President representing that they were the headmen of the Sioux Indians of Rosebud Agency and represented the tribe; that under the "Black Hills treaty" of 1876 they were to be given certain rations, that these rations had been cut down from time to time until they were getting much less than the amount stated in that agreement; that they were hungry most of the time, especially the old and crippled, and that before the winter was over they would suffer very much; that in former years they could make some money by freighting, but as their annuity goods had been taken away, a large part of their freighting had fallen off; that in years past they got the hides from the beef cattle killed for issue, which were a great help in procuring things to eat; that they would obtain more benefit from the hides if issued to them direct than if they were sold and the money paid to them once a year; that they needed the hides to make moccasins and covering for their beds, etc.; that as they got little freighting and no beef hides, and were unable to raise much on their land, they had to depend on the rations issued by the Great Father; that while they wanted to obey his orders, yet they could not sit down and see their people starve; that they had talked many times with their agent, who was powerless to do anything without the authority of his superiors, and that they would like to have some assurance that something would be done for their relief. They therefore asked the President to answer them through their agent and tell them if he could help their people.

Recognizing that the tone of that letter was probably symtomatic of the feeling then pervading the Sioux people generally, and that the conditions at Rosebud were similar to those existing at the other Sioux agencies, and, farther, that the action taken with regard to the Sioux would have an important bearing upon other tribes similarly situated, the office, with a view of contributing to the better understanding of the matters referred to, submitted to the Department, along with the Indians' letter to go to the President, a communication treating of the Sioux Nation as a whole. That communication, after reciting the substance of the Indians' letter, took up the consideration of the Black Hills treaty, the true intent and meaning of which has been the subject of so much contention, and quoted the articles of that agreement relating to the matters under discussion, as follows:

"ART. 4. The Government of the United States and the said Indians, being mutually desirous that the latter shall be located in a country where they may eventually become self-supporting and acquire the arts of civilized life, it is therefore agreed that the said Indians shall select a delegation of five or more chiefs and principal men from each band, who shall, without delay, visit the Indian Territory, under the guidance and protection of suitable persons, to be appointed for that purpose by the Department of the Interior, with a view to locating therein a permanent home for the said Indians.

"If such delegation shall make a selection which shall be satisfactory to themselves, the people whom they represent, and to the United States, then the said Indians agree that they will remove to the country so selected within one year from the date.

"And the said Indians do further agree that in all things to submit themselves to such beneficent plans as the Government may provide for them in the selection of a country suitable for a permanent home, where they may live like white men.

"ART. 5. In consideration of the foregoing cession of territory and rights, and upon full compliance with each and every obligation assumed by the said Indians, the United States does agree to provide all necessary aid to assist the said Indians in the work of civilization, to furnish them schools and instruction in mechanical and agricultural arts, as provided for by the treaty of 1868.

"Also to provide the said Indians with subsistence consisting of a ration for each individual of a pound and a half of beef (or in lieu thereof, one-half pound of bacon), one-half pound of flour, and one-half pound of corn; and for every one hundred rations 4 pounds of coffee, 8 pounds of sugar, and 5 pounds of beans, or in lieu of said articles the equivalent thereof, in the discretion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

"Such rations, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be continued until the Indians are able to support themselves.

"Rations shall, in all cases, be issued to the head of each separate family; and whenever schools shall have been provided by the Government for said Indians, no rations shall be issued for children between the ages of 9 and 14 years (the sick and infirm excepted) unless such children shall regularly attend school.

"Whenever the said Indians shall be located upon lands which are suitable for cultivation, rations shall be issued only to the persons and families of those persons who labor (the aged, sick, and infirm excepted); and as an incentive to industrious habits the Commissioner of Indian Affairs may provide that such persons be furnished in payment for their labor such other necessary articles as are requisite for civilized life.

"The Government will aid said Indians as far as possible in finding a market for their surplus productions and in finding employment, and will purchase such surplus, as far as may be required for supplying food to these Indians, parties to this agreement, who are unable to sustain themselves; and will also employ Indians, so far as practicable, in the performance of Government work upon their reservations."

It was then shown that the rations provided for the Sioux at the time were sufficient, unless the Indians were improvident, to prevent want. The letter then went on to say that the Sioux rations, as well as the rations for all other tribes, had been gradually reduced; that this was in accordance with the policy of this office and the spirit of the Sioux agreement of 1877, and that the true intent and meaning of that agreement was forcibly expressed by a former Commissioner of Indian Affairs nearly ten years before. In writing to the Secretary of the Interior at that time in relation to the subsistence supplies issued to the Sioux, Commissioner Morgan quoted articles 4 and 5 of the agreement as they have already been given here, and then said:

"This agreement is still in force, and the questions now raised are questions as to how far the Government has kept its obligations.

"It is worthy of special note that the end aimed at in the agreement was the civilization of the Indians. They were to settle down permanently; their children were to be educated; they were to live like white men, and the rations issued to them, or so much as might be necessary, were to be continued until 'the Indians are able to support themselves.' It is clearly evident that the Government never intended that the Indians should look to it for continuous support, that no promises of this kind were ever made, and that the Indians themselves did not expect it, and apparently did not desire it. The object of the rations was not that the Indians might be fed by the Government, but simply that they might be assisted and kept from want during the period of their probation while they were learning the art of self-support.

"No one will question the wisdom of this policy. No intelligent man will doubt that the welfare of the Indian demands that just as soon as possible he shall be rendered self-supporting, and that any help in the way of food or other supplies furnished him by the Government in excess of his absolute needs so as to remove from him the spur and stimulus to labor is not a kindness, but an injury.

"The only serious question which can be raised in this connection is, how long a time are these rations to be continued and under what circumstances the Government shall reduce or discontinue them.

"It should be noted that the agreement expressly stipulates that—

"'Whenever the said Indians shall be located upon lands which are suitable for cultivation, rations shall be issued only to the persons and families of those persons who labor (the aged, sick, and infirm excepted); and as an incentive to industrious habits the Commissioner of Indian Affairs may provide that such persons be furnished in payment for their labor such other necessary articles as are requisite for civilized life.'

"It certainly will be accepted as a truism that the Government had a right to demand of the Indians that they put forth for self-support whatever efforts might reasonably be demanded of them, considering their nature and surroundings. It will also be admitted that, considering the end in view, it would be a humane act on the part of the Government to decrease the rations, even though such decrease should bring temporary hardship, provided such hardship should serve as a stimulus to labor and self-help. Of course no one would urge that the Indians should be starved. In fact, all that can be demanded, either in fulfillment of treaty obligation or as an act of justice or humanity, is this, that the Indians shall put forth all proper exertion in the way of gaining a livelihood by their own labor, as other men are forced to do, and that in connection with such effort on their part food supplies issued to them in such quantities (not exceeding the amounts named shall be issued to them in such quantities (not exceeding the amounts named shall be issued to them in such quantities) and for such length of time as a sincere regard for the highest welfare of the Indians shall dictate."

The remainder of the letter was devoted to showing that the Sioux Indians, aside from rations, had received annually during the thirty years previous a suit of clothing or material to make it; that they had also received a large number of beneficial articles, such as agricultural implements, fence wire, building material, etc., for which $5,480,200 had been appropriated during the thirty years the treaty was alive; that they received the proceeds of the sale of hides derived from beef cattle; that they got more benefit from them in this way than the other; that they were receiving 5 per cent annually on $3,000,000 in the Treasury, one-half in education and one-half in cash; that they had received since 1890, 20,000 cows and 500 bulls; that at the time of their writing they possessed over 88,000 head of cattle; that they were able to sell that year probably 3,850 head to the Government to be turned back. In passing it may be interesting to observe that when in the last thirty-three years there has been appropriated for the benefit of the Sioux nearly $60,000,000 for the purposes named.

This was forwarded to the President by the Secretary of the Interior in a letter dated November 26, 1900, which is referred to and partially quoted in his last annual report, the conclusion of which was that the time had come for Indians either to support themselves or at least to furnish a part of their own support; and this conclusion was heartily approved by the President.

It then being winter, it was not considered judicious to make any immediate change in the prevailing policy, and so the issue of rations was continued as usual the remainder of that fiscal year. Before the next fiscal year opened, however, steps were taken to carry out the views expressed. On June 20, 1901, a letter was addressed to the Sioux agents, which, as it is the first enunciation of the future policy to be pursued, is given in full:

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
"OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
"Washington, June 20, 1901.

"SIR: As the next fiscal year is approaching, when new arrangements will go into effect for the support and civilization of your Indians, it is a proper time to address you on the subject of the issuance of rations to the Indians on the Sioux reservations.

"As you are doubtless aware, this subject has had the earnest attention of those who are actively engaged in the Indian Service as far as I am aware, though not connected with it in an official capacity, sympathize in the work, and the almost universal opinion is that the indiscriminate issue of rations is a hindrance rather than a help to the Indians.

"It is the fact as represented that a majority of your Indians, perhaps a large majority, are unable to support themselves, even if they would, except only partially, and therefore must be subsisted wholly or in part as contemplated by the agreement of 1877. On the other hand, it is a well-known fact that a large number of persons classed as Indians have profited by the assistance they have received from the Government and are now not only beyond want, but in many instances are prosperous and often affluent. How many of these there are I do not know, but I am certain that, having reached the stage of development, they are no longer entitled to the ration prescribed by the agreement referred to.

"In order that there may be no misunderstanding as to the meaning of this statement, if your Indians is invited to a correspondence that took place last fall. In October, 1900, the office received a letter signed by seven individuals of the Rosebud Agency, addressed to the President, relative to their condition, their prospects, and their needs. They referred to the Black Hills treaty of 1877, the reduction that had been made in the ration provided therein, the loss of income by reduced freighting, their inability to make much upon their land, and asked the President to answer them through their agent if he could do anything to help their people.

"This letter was forwarded to the honorable Secretary of the Interior, with a brief report as to the number of the Sioux, the benefits and meaning of the so-called Black Hills treaty, the rations provided for the current year, the disposition of hides, the income from their trust fund, the number of cattle they were able to sell the Government to be issued back again, and other particulars relating to their welfare.

"The Secretary of the Interior transmitted the Indians' letter to the President on the 28th of November last, together with the report of this office, and after referring briefly to the several items of that report, referring to the Rosebud Indians in particular, became more general and said:

"'Article 5 of the treaty of 1868, known as the Black Hills treaty with the Great Sioux Nation of which the Rosebud Indians are a part), which was ratified by the act of Congress approved February 28, 1877 (19 Stat., 254), provides for assistance for the said Indians in the work of civilization; to furnish them schools and instruction in mechanical and agricultural pursuits; also a certain prescribed ration, which ration, "or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be continued until the Indians are able to support themselves."

"'From the representations made by the writers of the communication referred to it does not seem that they or the other Indians of the Rosebud Agency are any nearer the goal of self-support than they were twenty-four years ago, when the treaty was made. Regardless of the provisions in the treaty looking to the reduction in the ration as they become able partly, if not wholly, to sustain themselves, which they appear to be able to do, and notwithstanding the facts stated by the Commissioner that individual Indians of this band own nearly 20,000 head of cattle, and that more than 1,500 head were purchased from them last year, at a cost to the Government of more than $30,000, which cattle were afterwards issued to and eaten up by the band, they still claim full benefits under the treaty named.'

"He concluded his letter by saying—and this is commended to the serious consideration of your Indians:

"'From the facts stated it does seem that the time has come when individual Indians who are so well qualified to at least furnish a part of their own support as some of these Indians seem to be should be required to take upon themselves a portion of the burden of their own care. The Government has faithfully and well fulfilled its obligations to them, and as the treaty of 1868 is mutual in its provisions, I respectfully recommend that such individuals as are known to be able to do so be required to furnish their own support, or at least to contribute toward it, so that the Government may be relieved of their care, and the spirit of the treaty of 1868, in that respect, carried into effect by them as well as by the Government, and that answer to this effect be communicated to them through their agent, as requested.'

"It is understood that this matter received the earnest attention of the President and that he gave the Secretary's letter just quoted his unqualified approval.

"In the face of this the indiscriminate issue of rations to all alike must stop.

"It therefore becomes your first duty to go over the ration rolls of your agency and erase therefrom all those who are wholly self-supporting. Your next duty will be to regulate the ration issued to the necessities of the recipients. As now practiced, it is understood that rations are issued to all alike—that is, they are distributed equally among the Indians of your reservation without regard to their worldly possessions. This should not be continued longer. Many families are, perhaps, partially self-supporting, but in different degrees. In such cases the rations should be issued according to the particular needs.

"In determining who shall receive rations one important consideration must not be overlooked. Rations must not be issued to those who have no disposition to attempt to support themselves. The law and regulations to this effect are old, but in many cases seem to have been honored more in the breach than in the observance. Nevertheless, they are good, and should be enforced so far as conditions will allow.

"The Office is unable to lay down any particular rule for the guidance of agents in arriving at correct conclusions in these matters. Indeed, an arbitrary rule would not work satisfactorily. In some cases it will not be a difficult task to determine who is self-supporting, in others it undoubtedly will. Neither will it be easy at all times to determine just to what extent a family or an individual should be assisted. In all cases it will be a matter of judgment in which that of the agent will or should largely predominate.

"The duty herein prescribed is an onerous one, and affecting as it does so deeply the present and future welfare of those under your charge, you will recognize the propriety of bringing to its discharge the most impartial, conscientious care. If the assistance of this Office is needed, it will be given for the asking.

"It is possible that some of those who are able to support themselves may voluntarily withdraw from the ration roll, and thus contribute to the cause by their example. To the knowledge of this Office there have been instances of this, and doubtless if the object to be obtained were properly presented there would be others.

"It is assumed that perhaps progress will be slow, but the time to begin it is here, and the object of this letter is to bring the Indians to a realizing sense of the attitude of the Government.

"At the proper time it is proposed to send you, as was done last year, a statement of the quantities of subsistence purchased for your Indians for the next fiscal year. They are believed to be ample for the needs of all who should receive rations if the spirit of this letter is observed.

"There is another class of Indians to whom the issue of rations would seem to be uncalled for. I refer to those drawing a salary from the Government. The number of these is large, many of them holding desirable positions, with very liberal salaries. A careful analysis of the salary list of the Sioux agencies shows that over 150 of the agency employees alone are Indians receiving salaries from $840 per annum down to $120, very few, however, of the latter. The majority of these earn as much as, if not more, year in and year out, than is the average income of farmers in this country. There is no question in the mind of this Office that the issue of rations to these should stop.

"There are also a large number employed in the schools with salaries from $300 down, besides quarters and other conveniences. The impression prevails here that many of these, if not all, draw rations. If so, the Office can see no reason for the continuance of the practice.

"These two classes, therefore, should be eliminated from the ration roll.

"The Indian police are excepted from this ruling, as their salaries are very small and their duties are peculiar. There may be other exceptions to the rule. If so, the Office will consider them on their merits.

"It is the desire of this Office to have this new departure go into effect as soon after the beginning of the new fiscal year as possible.

"This letter has been addressed to the agents in charge of the Sioux of different tribes, except Santee."

Later on, in September, 1901, a similar letter was sent to all other ration agencies on the ground that what was good for the Sioux was good for all, so that by the fall of 1901 all of the ration agencies were on the same basis with respect to the self-supporting.

While this was a step in the right direction, it did not remove the great evil so universally complained of by the supporters of Indian idleness. The evident and demoralizing effects of this evil were generally recognized and universally condemned, except, perhaps, by a mistaken philanthropy, which, ignoring the natural law that man must earn his living by the sweat of his brow, would exempt the Indian from the penalty thus imposed upon flowery beds of ease. Much had been said about the evil, and sporadic attempts had been made to check it, but with little avail. For years the Indians had been fed and clothed and allowed to spend their time in the devil's workshop.

It was felt that it was time for a change. Heretofore the dealing had been with the tribe. It was now to be with the individual. He would no longer be looked upon simply as one of a dependent community to be dealt with as a whole, but would be considered independently and treated as one capable of developing those qualities which would lift him above the level of a pauper and fit him to become a useful member of society. His manhood would be appealed to, and efforts would be made to teach him self-reliance and self-respect. He would be induced to acquire habits of industry and to forsake the ways of idleness. Necessity, and necessity alone, would do this. He must want before he would work; he must come to the bitter realization that idleness and hunger go hand in hand, and understand that he must put his hand to the plow if he would live. His rations would therefore be stopped and he would be offered work instead, work that he could do; not aimless work, but work with an object; not made to dig a hole one day and fill it up the next simply for the sake of doing so, that would deprive labor of the very essence of its work—a definite purpose. He would be put at something which would give him not only a present living, but which he could see would bring him benefit in the future. He would be paid fairly and promptly for his work, and then left to provide for himself.

Accordingly in the early part of January of the present year agents were advised that rations would go longer be issued to the able-bodied, but that the money thus saved would be used to pay them in cash for labor in building roads, dams, or reservoirs for storage of water, or any other work that would give them profitable occupation for the present and lead to their self-support in the future. Men were to be paid $1.25 a day of eight hours, and men with teams $2.50. Not only were the agents to employ the Indians to the fullest extent themselves, but they were to use all of their influence in finding employment for them in the surrounding country, and it was suggested to them that they should devote the greater part of their time to the civilization of their Indians, leaving the minor details of administration to subordinates, and that an Indian agency should be a bureau for employment of Indians rather than a center for the gratuitous distribution of supplies.

As this has been the subject of considerable animadversion and been stigmatized as a plan for the encouragement of contract labor, it is proper that some particular notice should be taken of these strictures, and the false charges refuted. As to the assertion that the plan is to hire out adult male Indians as contract laborers, nothing can be further from the truth. In all the correspondence there is not even a hint of such a thing. It was simply suggested to agents that they should circulate the information in the surrounding country that laborers could be obtained at their agencies, if such were the fact. If they could not give the Indians work themselves, they were to find it for them if they could. And that was their plain duty. If reference is made to the Black Hills treaty, already quoted, it will be seen that the Government obligates itself to aid the Sioux Indians in finding employment.

The agents, therefore, in publishing the fact that there were Indians willing to work, were simply carrying out both the letter and spirit of that agreement. In all of this there was not the slightest suggestion of hiring the Indian out under contract. That implies coercion. There was not a thought of such a thing. He was to be given an opportunity to work; that was all. If the Government did not have it, it was to find it for him. He could work or not, as he chose. He was as much a free agent with respect to this as anyone else, only if he were given the opportunity to work and refused he was not to expect to be supported by the Government.

The new policy was received with much discontent in some quarters and passive, if not open, opposition in others. There were few mutterings and a good deal of talk about vested rights, some sympathetic expressions over the hard luck of poor Lo, and here and there a prophecy of an "uprising." Interested parties endeavored to create a sentiment against it, while self-constituted conservators of the Indian either cast aspersions upon its authors or damned it with faint praise.

In spite of these and other adverse influences the office persevered with its policy and is now in a position to form an intelligent idea of its effect. Everywhere the results have been favorable even beyond expectation. Misgiving in some quarters has given place to confidence, and while, perhaps, the experimental stage has not been passed, there is every reason to believe that the final success of the plan, if carried out judiciously, is assured.

As a first result over 12,000 have been dropped from the ration roll, being wholly self-supporting. As a second result a large number of Indians have been put to work, or work has been found for them. As to the effect of this let others speak.

One agent writes:

"The Indians are eager for work, even some of the older ones, classed by the physicians as physically unable to work, insisting on having work. * * * These Indians are working as faithfully and intelligently as could be expected of people who have never had occasion to work for their support, and there can be no question as to the wisdom of the new policy and its good effect on these people."

Another says:

"The results so far are very gratifying. * * * As soon as the fact that work could be secured was known by the tribe, applications came faster than they could be employed. One man, over 50 years of age, when drawing his pay for a few days' work, acknowledged it was the first money he ever earned, and seemed pleased that it was possible to secure money without waiting for annuity or lease payments. * * * There is no question but that the time was ripe for the adoption of the present policy."

Another:

"I think this new policy has had a very desirable and stimulating effect upon these Indians to look for employment, while a great many of them are always anxious to work when they can see that there will be compensation for it; yet they seem now to be more anxious for work than ever before."

Another:

"We have succeeded beyond our most sanguine expectations. Over 300 have been secured employment outside of the Government work. They are employed on the railroad, by ranchmen, in cutting wood, shearing sheep, and other minor occupations. They are paid by the railroad $1.50 per day; by ranchmen $30 per month and board; for chopping wood, $1 per cord; shearing sheep, 7 cents per head, and other labor in proportion. * * * The result of all this is that the Indians have lived better than ever before. * * * No one has suffered by the reduction of rations, but, on the other hand, there has been less discontent and complaint than I have ever before known. * * * In conclusion, I beg to recommend that the present policy of handling the Indians at this agency be continued."

And still another:

"I could have secured employment for practically all the able-bodied Indians in this agency if they would have accepted it. * * * Some of these pretended friends of the Indians, instead of encouraging them to accept this work, even at small wages, have been assiduously trying to discourage them from going. * * * Concerning those who did go to work of the reservation, I would say that they gave perfect satisfaction to their employers, who have informed me that they would rather have them than white laborers. * * * The general effect on the Indians of the work done on the reservation has been a very good one. It has been very satisfactory from all standpoints."

An inspector says:

"Above all else I believe the best lesson an able-bodied Indian can have is to convince him that he must work or starve. If he complains that there is no work to do, the Government should be prepared for him with laurel on roads, irrigating ditches, coal fields, lumber camps, etc. For such work let him be paid a moderate sum in cash. To pay in rations or to pay more than the Indian earns are both errors which experience has proven should not be repeated. But if the Indian says he is hungry, let him be shown the 'Government wood pile' and be compelled to work his way through it."

A superintendent of thirty years' experience writes:

"Your letters * * * point toward the fact that the Indian Office expects in the near future to discontinue the gratuitous issue of rations. Any time during the last twenty years I would have hailed this step as a boon to these Indians. * * * The policy of the Government in issuing so much to them gratuitously has dwarfed their energies, cultivated their dependence, and encouraged their extravagance.

"After over thirty years of issuing gratuitous rations, after distributing many carloads of farming implements, wire for fencing, and wagons and harness, after receiving two cash annuity payments, * * * these Indians to-day farm less than they have at any time for the last fifteen years, and are less willing to do a day's work for the money than at any time for many years. There are very few who are not in debt. There is more drunkenness than at any time since I knew them. The gratuitous issues, along with their cash annuities and the lease money derived from leasing their allotments and renting their houses built for them by the Government, made their resources so large that they were not compelled to work for a living, and as they were not obliged to work they did not do so for recreation, and as they were idle they naturally fell into the habit of gambling and drinking as a pastime. * * * I heartily indorse the policy proposed by the Indian Office of giving them an opportunity to earn their own living and in furnishing them plenty of work to do."

These extracts could be multiplied, but those given are sufficient to show the trend of sentiment of those having an experimental knowledge of the situation.

But it may be said that these are in the service and their reports are colored from interested motives. Let us therefore see how it looks to outsiders. Here is a graphic article taken from the New York Sun of last summer:

"SIOUX HAVE LEARNED TO WORK.

"ROSEBUD INDIAN AGENCY, S. DAK., June 28.

"On July 1 the order of the Interior Department requiring the Sioux to go to work becomes effective on this reservation. But the Sioux, he who forty years ago inspired terror in the Northwest with tomahawk and rifle, has already gone to work. In this fact is found the most important step toward civilization in the history of the Sioux. Not only has the Department succeeded in making the fiercest Indian tribe self-dependent, but a sacred tradition of the Sioux has been given up.

"With it will go the blanket, the feathers, the long hair. The spectacle of the Indian in blouse and overall—which might have seemed a dream a quarter of a century ago—may be witnessed to-day by any visitor at the Rosebud Reservation.

"When Commissioner Jones announced that the Indian must give up his locks, and [illegible] go out into the fields and toil, predictions of trouble came [illegible] as for the Sioux greated disapproval.

"'Pale face, he make treaty,' said the grizzled chieftains. 'He make treaty and give us meat and clothe us, and now paleface won't do it. The Great White Father said it, and now paleface make us work.'

"The wrinkled tribesmen were right and they resented this apparent bad faith. The Sioux nation was the most powerful in the Northwest. It cost thousands of lives to subdue it and the Government was glad to make a liberal treaty. The 1868 treaty provided that the Indians should confine themselves to certain territorial limits and in return should be supplied with food and raiment and stock for thirty years.

"In 1874 gold was found in the Black Hills. There was a [illegible] The whites wanted the cession of the Hills from the Indians. The Sioux wanted $7,000,000. The commissioners laughed at the demand, and the Indians left the council furious. Red Cloud intercceded, and the Indians agreed to give up the Hills if the Government would agree to keep them in food and clothing [illegible] after the thirty years stipulated in the 1868 treaty [illegible]

"The [illegible] that the Government [illegible] treaty millions. When it expired, in 1898, the Interior Department was not prepared to prolong the paternal system, and [illegible] to put the redskins at work.

"The Sioux protested that the treaty had been violated, and agents sent word to Washington that the order could never be enforced. Then the Sioux ran out of money. Promises were made [illegible] under the curtailed orders. Agreements [illegible] Indians might go to work on July 1. It became noised about the reservation that all who would work would be paid at the rate of $1.25 a day. The Indians thought long over their plan.

"'Pale face,' [illegible] said White Crow, 'is demeaning.'

"'No work,' added Red Feather, 'may also mean things to eat and stuff to drink.'

"'Let's go and ask the white boss to give us work then, and give us money,' [illegible]

"The three Indians went to the agent with their request. The agent had told the Department that he didn't think it of any use, and the hoes and rakes and plows and picks and shovels would be likely to rust away. To be asked volunteers for work by the Indians, therefore, made the official speechless with astonishment.

"Recovering, he offered to show them how. The three Indians trotted along behind him. He was puzzled how to initiate them, but he set up a grading plow and showed the redskins how it was used. The dirt soon began to fly, and the new road that had been surveyed so long that it had become a joke was being made.

"Other Indians came to look on. They said nothing, but when at night Big Moon, Red Feather, and White Crow told them they had each made $1.25 that day, they, too, went to the agency and wanted work.

"The squaws were in a state of bewilderment. When they saw the young Indians approaching with picks and shovels they imagined that their lazy lot as tillers of the field, hewers of wood, and drawers of water was to be made harder by these cumbersome tools. When the Indians went on out into the fields and began working the squaws came out and looked on in astonishment. They glanced at one another and tapped their heads significantly. It soon became evident that the Sioux had been changed. He had entered a new era. Hereafter he will no longer be a ward; to all intents and purposes he will become a citizen.

"But not all the young Indians are so progressive. There are many who want to escape work. They found that these in ill health would be excused, and they flocked to the agency physician, inventing and vividly acting the most astonishing ailments. But the physician has not been fooled, and few have obtained certificates of ill health.

"The Indians are chiefly engaged in building roads and fences, bridges and reservoirs, which some are [illegible] their ancient lands. [illegible] minds, work is associated with the servitude of the squaw, too [illegible] has come to realize the value of the dollar. The same avarice that appealed to the Sioux attracted the Pine Ridge Indians. They heard of the Sioux and the big dollars and swooped down on the agency clamoring for work. They were told it was only for the Sioux, and they went away grumbling. The paradox of an Indian discontented because he can not work may yet make trouble for the Pine Ridge agent.

"Congress appropriated $[illegible] for an effort to make the Rosebud Reservation self-supporting. Success in the venture is now foreseen, and the additional [illegible] promised will be expected. The Sioux will wake up some morning and find himself self-supporting. With this change will disappear the last vestige of barbaric raiment, and the Indian will have become as civilized as he may be."

Some of this may be imaginary; there are some inaccuracies, and doubtless the characters are fictitious, but as a whole it presents a true picture of the situation and is suggestive of the change that is going on. The ration system and the reservation system are doomed. Let them go. Take away the incentive to idleness and obliterate the boundary between ancient prejudice and modern progress. Break down the barriers, open the way for civilization, build the roads that it may march in and settle around the Indian homes. When that is done the dream of the celebrated peace commission of less will come true. Mechanics and artisans will enter, trade will spring up, and the nucleus of a civilized community will be formed.

While the prospect is hopeful, it will not do to be too sanguine and relax effort. A beginning only has been made. Much is yet to be done. It will only be by patient, laborious work that the end in view can be accomplished.

The foregoing was written late in 1902. Since then other reports have come in showing how the new policy is working.

The agent at the Colorado River Agency, Ariz., wrote in June, 1903:

"Discontinuance of rations.—My chief effort during the past twenty months with reference to issuing rations, has been to eliminate from the ration roll all, or nearly all, the strong, able-bodied men, and to assist them in obtaining work, and I am pleased to say that this system has worked well, although generally opposed were these same big, lusty, lazy fellows. Two years ago 305 Indians were drawing rations. One year ago but 300 were drawing rations at this agency, while at this time and for several months past the average has been but 80, and these, being old and infirm, and from other causes being unable to work, draw but small rations of flour, beef, and salt. The results and progress made in this direction have been highly satisfactory."

In October, 1903, the Crow agent, Montana, wrote:

"July 1, 1903, we cut from the ration rolls 1,000 Indians, and at the beginning of this fiscal year we intend to take one-half as many more from the rolls. Our Indians are well informed as to the intention of taking from them the Government support as fast as possible, and they take to it kindly and are putting forth their best efforts to make a living."

The Fort Belknap agent, Montana, wrote, in September, 1903:

"[illegible] subsistence has been cut [illegible] point. While at the outset it entailed a good deal of [illegible] and made many a "sorehead," and, for a short time, many a [illegible] miserable spirit, took up the new [illegible] means of subsistence. Some [illegible] others on the outside of the res[illegible] soil. However, during the winter [illegible] who are earning their own living at [illegible]

The Fort Peck agent, Montana, [illegible] in August, 1903:

"New Indian policy.—The new [illegible] year ago has been very successful on this reservation. On [illegible] half the Indians were sickness from the [illegible] dropped since that time. [illegible] the agency so long as work can be [illegible] vation. If an able-bodied Indian [illegible] a shovel; if he won't use the shovel [illegible] have had very few cases where work [illegible] refuse to do it to support himself. [illegible] not bother the agency at all [illegible] work for themselves. Quite a [illegible] in the surrounding country, [illegible] making ditches by the year, etc. [illegible] can be obtained, either on or off [illegible] necessary to feed some of the [illegible] per cent of the money earned by the Indians is spent [illegible]

In August, 1903, the Pierre agent, New Mexico, wrote:

"When I [illegible] charge of this agency every member of the tribe was able-bodied [illegible] those unable to work [illegible] allowed [illegible] persons.

"That the issuing of rations to the whole tribe is neither necessary nor prudent is evidenced by the fact that a considerable [illegible] money earned by the tribe will show $15,000 during the past year. This money was derived from the following sources: [illegible] Government [illegible] and [illegible] earned by hire on neighboring ranches, $2,000; [illegible] sales of hay, etc., $[illegible]

"[illegible] issuing rations is continued for a few years I feel assured that [illegible] Government. The money being spent as now in the [illegible] reservoirs, will enable the tribe to have an assured means of support through the [illegible] of these [illegible]

From Shoshone Back Agency, N. Dak., August, 1903:

"[illegible] has been expended during the past year in the employment of Indians in lieu of rations on the construction of roads, reservoirs, and general improvements to the reservation. The [illegible] efforts of this agency are very satisfactory to the [illegible] of greater [illegible] the Indians every market. It is my intention so far as practicable [illegible] means of subsistence from this source to [illegible] agency. A large number of the older Indians have to be [illegible] as ration issues, but this number is slowly growing less, and the number of those capable by education and [illegible] is steadily increasing. It is very gratifying to note the increasing number of volunteer applications for this work."

From Cheyenne and Arapaho Agency, Okla., September, 1903:

"[illegible] I take pleasure to state that there is absolutely no doubt but that these Indians are, as a whole, in better condition than at any time since I have known them. The majority of the tribe have shown a contented and comparatively happy state, and many who have heretofore been placed in the category of workers are trying to do something for themselves and families. Seeing the benefits to be derived from such actions in their past, there is no doubt but that a continuance may be expected to bring about the desired results [illegible] consequence of long-[illegible] habits, customs and obnoxious tribal practices are [illegible] passing away, and the Cheyenne and Arapaho Indian is becoming entirely competent to take his place as a citizen and to hold his own against even the most [illegible] white neighbors."

The superintendent in charge of the Segar colony of Cheyenne and Arapaho, in Oklahoma, who has lived among them for thirty years, writes in August, 1903:

"In regard to the industries carried on by the Indians in this agency I can not speak too highly of the [illegible] Indians to labor in lieu of issuing rations to them. It gives the able-bodied an opportunity to work for their own maintenance under competent instruction, and in a way that the result of their labors will contribute to the immediate improvement of the public highways and Government property. It leads them to perform a diversity of industries which gives them needed experience and opportunity to acquire skill in the work they are engaged in. It can be seen that the wages they receive, and which contribute to their immediate necessity, is not the only benefit derived by them. They like and appreciate the change from receiving rations gratuitously to the opportunity of working for them, and they say themselves that they are healthier since they began to work for their support. They now have to look ahead a little while, at least to provide for their families. Under the ration system they only had to wait for ration day to come around. It will be seen by this report that the Indians of this agency as a whole have added to their support to no small extent by the crops raised on their farms."

From the Cheyenne River Agent (South Dakota), August, 1903:

"Issues.—The contraction of the ration policy and expansion of the labor policy is doing more for the civilization of these people in a practical way than any plan with this object in view that has ever been inaugurated among them. It has brought them to the realization that their labor is worth something, and that only a few days' labor will buy more supplies, of greater variety, than the rations heretofore furnished them by the Government. It is surprising and commendable, indeed, to see the avidity with which they look for and take hold of the work, and reflects a passing remark made by a recent visitor at this agency, while watching a gang of Indians doing a [illegible] grade work on a road, 'Why, I don't see but what they do just as well as the same number of white men would do at the same work.'

"While the present policy gives them an idea of the value of their labor it also teaches them the value of the money earned with their own hands, and can not help but imbue them with a feeling of independence and self-reliance when they can go, after receiving their money thus earned, and spend it where and as they please. The contrast between this way of dealing with the Indian and thus providing a means of earning his own subsistence as compared with the old way of former years, in taking his ration sack to the warehouse on ration days, month after month and year after year, and there taking the rations allowed him, marks a new era in the history of the civilization of the Indian."

From Crow Creek Agency, S. Dak., August, 1903:

"Rations.—Rations are being issued only to those who are over 50 years of age and those who are not able-bodied. Out of 1,006 Indians enrolled at this agency there are 540 self-supporting; that is to say, they are supporting themselves under the labor policy inaugurated by the Department last year, and which is a step in the right direction for the future welfare of these people."

From Pine Ridge Agency, S. Dak., August, 1903:

"Under the new working system and during the fiscal year 1903 about $55,000 was disbursed for labor performed by our able-bodied Indians in lieu of issues of rations. The work was done in making and repairing roads, building dams for reservoirs, irrigation ditches, fences, corrals, etc. The work was done under the immediate supervision of Mr. Willsie, a competent engineer, and in a good substantial manner. Thirty-eight dams for reservoirs sites were constructed at different points on the reservation. In the construction of these dams some 150,000 cubic yards of earth were removed. Twenty-five good, substantial bridges were built on the various streams throughout the reservation. Corrals at agency and substations were repaired, and 30 miles of wire fence was constructed to complete our north line fence and connect same with Rosebud north line fence. The greater part of our work laid out for this summer will be in constructing irrigation ditches. Water will be diverted from all streams, some small and some large, where there is water sufficient to irrigate with, even though it may in some cases be on a small scale. The aim is that are being put in on the streams to divert the water are built to last. We had our mechanics build a pile driver, and it is now being used in driving piles for all the dams.

"About 400 Indians are working, and as ample funds are available, work will be furnished them the balance of the summer. From amount of funds authorized for purchase of gross beef, flour, hay, and other supplies for this agency for the fiscal year 1903, a saving of about $30,000 was made.

"The new system is meeting with a fair degree of success on this reservation. The younger element of Indians are taking kindly to work, and it is reasonable to hope that they are taking better care of their money earned this year than they did last. The larger part of their earnings are spent for provisions for themselves and their families. Their earnings, however, enable them to eat three times a day. Under the ration system, if they were economic, and saving with rations given them, it would afford them not more than one meal a day."

From the Rosebud agency, S. Dak., August, 1903:

"With the exception of the winter months, the able-bodied Indians have been at work during the fiscal year building and repairing roads, making and repairing roads, building dams and reservoirs, and other work of a permanent nature in the improvement of the reservation, all of which work the Government has provided, and for which it pays the Indians in cash from day to day, or $2.50 a day work for them, in lieu of issues of rations. Some of the Indians find employment off the reserve, but by far the greater number [illegible] the work and pay here provided for them, and have made good headway in the amount of work performed, but also in subsisting themselves and families.

"It can not be expected that these Indians can yet successfully compete with white labor, but in course of time they will be able to, and many of them now do, for it may be that the Government will not continue to provide employment for them any great number of years to come, although I believe it would be well to continue the work along present lines for an indefinite time."

From Yankton Agency, S. Dak., August, 1903:

"There is no longer any doubt as to the wisdom of cutting off rations. About 20 per cent of the tribe is now borne on the ration roll. Those cut off during the last year and a half are living as comfortably as before, and have the knowledge that they are existing by their own efforts."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman think it an inopportune time for me to ask him about the policy which may be considered or outlined by the committee or embodied in this bill with reference to the abolition of or the continuation of the Dawes Commission in the Indian Territory?

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill in terms limits the life of the Dawes Commission to the end of the next fiscal year. In other words, it provides specifically that the work of this Commission shall be completed and the Commission cease to exist on the 1st of July, 1905.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Has the gentleman or the committee any information that that work can be accomplished by the Commission in that time?

Mr. SHERMAN. It has, if Congress does not impose upon that Commission added duties. In my judgment the work of that Commission would have been completed before now, and it was prognosticated here two or three years ago that it would have been completed ere this. If Congress had not imposed additional duties and work on the Commission, the work would have been completed. But I believe, spurred on with this declaration that the Commission must cease to exist on July 1, 1905, that all the work that is now imposed upon the Commission can be completed prior to that date.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I do not want to impose upon the gentleman's judgment, but there is a bill that has been recently introduced here which seems to have the sanction of the Secretary of the Interior, and is it not his judgment that that would impose great duties upon the Dawes Commission and lead to its indefinite life?

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill that the gentleman refers to is a bill introduced by my colleague [Mr. CURTIS], who for some years has been chairman of the subcommittee having in charge the matters especially relating to the Indian Territory, and that gentleman [Mr. CURTIS] advises me that this does not impose duties upon the Dawes Commission which would necessitate the continuance of their existence longer than the date I have mentioned.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Has the gentleman in the appropriation here gone to the end that the policy of the Government shall be a discontinuation of that Commission?

Mr. SHERMAN. That certainly is our declaration just as distinct as it is possible to make it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And you think Congress will be able to accomplish that result with the language of the gentleman's bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no question in my mind about accomplishing it with the language. The language is, "And said Commission shall conclude its work and terminate on or before the 1st day of July, 1905, and said Commission shall cease to exist on July 1, 1905."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. If the gentleman will permit me, I consider that the Dawes Commission is in its operation a self-perpetuating body, and that in delay they have accomplished more evil than they have accomplished good, and is it that a desire to accomplish good to the country and Indian Territory has been submerged in the desire to serve themselves? Now, they started out in 1892 with the matter of the enrollment and have constantly taken 70,000 practically uncontested cases and minutely and elaborately heard evidence and gotten up their written decisions where they should have considered the 10,000 contested cases, and in that way they added to their life tenure almost, and I hope the gentleman and his committee will see a termination of that condition, so that we may find that the people of the Indian Territory are not suffering any more in the deplorable conditions aggravated and accentuated by reason of the entangling system of the Dawes Commission.

Mr. SHERMAN. The gentleman has declared what his belief is. He has not asked me what mine is.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I would like very much to have it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I disagree with the gentleman in a large part of his sweeping criticism of the Dawes Commission. I think that Commission has done wonderful work. It has brought about the betterment of conditions down there to an extent that ten years ago no one would have believed was possible. Possibly they have taken more time than another commission would have taken. In my judgment, as I stated a moment or two ago, they would have completed their work long ere this had not Congress in its wisdom constantly added other duties; and I believe now that the termination of this work is in sight, and I shall be surprised if we find it necessary next year to ask that this Commission be continued beyond July 1.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman tell us about how much of the annual appropriation is for the machinery of this Commission?

Mr. SHERMAN. The appropriations, all told, are something under a million and a half dollars. My colleague tells me $1,400,000, all told, from the creation of the Commission down to the present time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. What would the gentleman say toward cutting down the appropriations, so that we would have only one commissioner instead of the entire body of the Commission?

Mr. SHERMAN. That suggestion was quite fully discussed by the committee. We had two members of the Commission before us, and it seemed at this stage of the work unwise to make this change. We have been crossing a river. We have reached almost to the far bank, where we are taking hold of the grass or shrubbs and pulling our boat to the shore, and therefore it seemed unwarranted at this time to change our policy. If the Commission were cut from four to one, it would be necessary to employ certain high-salaried clerks at least to perform the duties that other members of the Commission now perform, so that in money there would not be a total saving. It would only be a partial saving at most. I think it would be bad policy, in my judgment, at present to change the Commission.

Mr. PERKINS. What are the duties of this Commission? Will the gentleman state them briefly?

Mr. SHERMAN. The duties are defined in the various acts which have been passed. To cover it in one or two sentences, they were originally to enter into an agreement with the five tribes known as the "Five Civilized Tribes," and then to carry out all the provisions—that is, the several agreements, making up the rolls of citizenship, allotting land, setting aside town sites, and all that sort of thing.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman yield to me for five minutes?

Mr. SHERMAN. I give to the gentleman from Iowa five minutes.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not feel willing to allow the attack on the Dawes Commission to go by unchallenged. The Dawes Commission has been a very useful organization.

So far as I am concerned, I do not think it ought to be finally discharged until the new State comes into the Union, by which some additional local government can be established over that region. The Dawes Commission has served as a controlling body between the white people on the one hand and the Indians on the other. They have served the purpose of molding the heterogeneous and complex conditions into a more simple form in that Territory.

We found ourselves in the preparation of the Curtis law, for instance, confronted with Indian customs, Indian laws enacted by Indian legislatures, Indian treaties, complex situations between the different tribes transferred from the different parts of the country in that Territory. The Dawes Commission having the confidence of the Indians and having been headed by a man that they looked upon all their lives as their tried and true friend, Senator Dawes, yielded their judgment to the views of that Commission. It has been a conciliatory organization and has enabled the Government to enforce and carry into operation the wise measures involved in the Curtis Act.

It is hardly possible to listen with patience to the assault that has been made on these gentlemen. The Commission has wisely managed the affairs of the Territory. There is a Territory without any organized government at all, without any general system such as is known to the other Territories, and this Commission has taken the place of the Government, in some sense at least, and has enabled the Federal Government to bridge over the difficulties with which it found itself confronted.

This Dawes Commission has done a good service. When the history of that Territory is written the names of these commissioners, and the eminent gentleman whose name is associated with the Commission, will receive the honor they deserve. If my friend from the Committee on Territories [Mr. ROBINSON] is able to aid in bringing in a bill that will transfer that Territory to a condition of statehood in the new State, provide legislative control there to take the place of this arbitration control, or the board of conciliation, as you might call it, the Dawes Commission, he will do well, and if they will frame a bill putting the Indian Territory into a new State of Oklahoma, they will do well to recognize the good work that the Dawes Commission has performed in the last ten years in getting that country ready for statehood.

Mr. Chairman, I do not care to speak further, but I did not want these criticisms to go by uncontradicted, without some protest on the part of the Committee on Indian Affairs, who certainly know that the distinguished men have done a wise and useful work in the years that have passed.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield for a question?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. FINLEY. I have heard it stated—I do not know with how much truth—with reference to the Dawes Commission, that the members of that Commission, or some of them, were interested in land speculations and corporations making investments in the Indian Territory. I would like to ask the gentleman if he has any knowledge of that?

Mr. LACEY. That matter has been investigated by Mr. Bonaparte, and the report will be published probably soon giving details. My understanding is that some of the Dawes Commission have owned stock in banks there.

Mr. FINLEY. And land companies?

Mr. LACEY. No; not in land companies, but in trust companies, investment companies, and banks.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. FINLEY. I wish to ask the gentleman if he thinks that it is prudent, and for the best interests of the Indian Territory, for the members of the Dawes Commission to be interested in investment companies and trust companies?

Mr. LACEY. I think it is wise for a man to shun even the appearance of evil; but my understanding is that investigation has shown no wrongdoing on the part of any member of the Dawes Commission. My own judgment is that if the time of the life of the Dawes Commission expires under the bill before the Territory is admitted into the Union, that time ought to be extended by further legislation. I do not know whether the balance of the committee will agree with me, but I do believe that this Commission ought not to go out until the State comes in, and the State ought to come in in time to take up the work where the Dawes Commission leaves it off.

Mr. THAYER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. THAYER. I know the gentleman from Iowa is as conversant as any man in the House with the status of the Indian, and is as good a friend as the Indian has in the House. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he thinks the people of that Territory—Indians, full bloods and half bloods—having had no government except tribal government, are now fitted for the dignity and duties of statehood as we recognize them here in the rest of the Union?

Mr. LACEY. That involves entirely another question.

Mr. THAYER. I notice that the gentleman said "until they were admitted."

Mr. LACEY. If they are not qualified, the necessity of continuing the existence of the Commission to which they can look as an intermediary between it and Congress, between them and the executive department, is all the more necessary. The Indian Territory is not made up of Indians, but a very large proportion is white.

Mr. THAYER. Is it not true that the Indian lands constitute a great majority of the whole Territory—some sixty-eight seventieths—and that the population of whites are in the towns and villages, possibly in cities, huddled together?

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, that will be solved by the completion of the allotments, by leases, and by sales to the whites. It is true that the white people have settled there in cities of ten or twelve thousand inhabitants, some of which, I am satisfied, in five years from now will have only three or four thousand inhabitants, because the men in the cities will scatter into the country and occupy the farms; and the Indians are proposing to lease their lands to these people.

There has never yet been an Indian reservation of valuable land that the white population has not beaten like a surf along its shore, ready to go in and occupy the land as soon as it could be opened up, and the Indian Territory is not being approached in that particular way, but in the towns. The people are settled in the towns and are waiting to get possession of the farms of the country as soon as they can arrange with the Indian allottees.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman, are there not treaties now existing between the United States and the Indian Territory which exempt from taxation a good share of their property for a number of years?

Mr. LACEY. That is undoubtedly one of the problems that will confront the new State when it comes in. It burdens the Territory now, as does the question of public schools, as the land is untaxed and untaxable, and it is that very complex situation that the Dawes Commission has been working on for all these years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I would be glad if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] would proceed now. I will ask the Chair how much of my time has been consumed.

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-two minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the bill now under consideration carries an appropriation of over $6,000,000. This appropriation has been greatly decreased by the policy of allotting lands in Indian reservations to individual Indians, thus breaking up their tribal relations and making them self-supporting. This policy should be pursued until all Indian reservations are broken up and all of their lands allotted.

All Indians should be put on their individual responsibility and compelled to live by their own labor and exertions. It is an injustice to the white race to be taxed to support the red man in idleness. Aside from this injustice to the white man, it would be better in every way that the red man should be taught that he must comply with the biblical injunction and live by the sweat of his face.

The average Indian will remain a vagabond and pauper just as long as the Government will support him while idling away his time on reservations.

I think Congress should give statehood to all of the Territories, and thus comply honestly with the platform pledges of the two great political parties. Congress should also at once allot to the Indians their lands, break up their tribal relations, and make the Indians self-supporting citizens of the United States. The jurisdiction of the United States over the Indians and of their property should then cease, and the State in which they live should take charge of them.

The State legislature where the Indians reside knows much better how to legislate and care for the Indians within its borders than Congress can possibly do. I believe [illegible] government and that each State should control the people within its borders.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. THAYER. I would like to ask the gentleman if both political parties in their national platforms did not pledge themselves to give separate statehood to each of these three Territories and not join Oklahoma and the Indian Territory?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will answer the gentleman by stating that there was, as I remember, nothing said whatever about the Indian Territory; and, looking at that question from a nonpartisan standpoint, it would be better for the Indians and the white people of the Indian Territory, as well as the people of Oklahoma, that they should have but one State. As to New Mexico and Arizona, those two Territories are separated by the Rocky Mountains, which mountains form a natural barrier between these two Territories. They are two very large Territories; either is twice as large as the Indian Territory and Oklahoma combined.

There is a natural barrier between them, as I have stated—the Rocky Mountain Range, which separates those two Territories. They have two systems of civilization there. The one on the Pacific coast, Arizona, has the Anglo-Saxon civilization, but in New Mexico you find largely a Mexican element, which belongs to the Mexican or Spanish civilization. These two Territories have a different nucleus around which the settlements have been formed; they have separate and distinct railroad and business centers; they have separate capitals; and it is not right, it is not just, it is not the policy of either party in this Government, or should not be if we take the party platforms to mean what they say, to make these two Territories into one State, and I hope that no such measure as that will receive the favorable attention of this Congress.

[illegible] Indian reservations known to contain valuable mineral deposits, I would open these lands for mining purposes under the United States mining laws and pay the money to the Indians arising from its sale to miners. The Indians will never work their mines; and if the mines were opened and worked by white men, employment would be furnished the Indians at their homes, and they would become civilized and industrious by being brought into contact with the white miners and furnished with work by them. They could then be induced to cut off their long hair, give up their tepees and wickedness, build comfortable homes, throw aside their blanket covering and eagle feathers, and adopt the white man's clothing, manners, and customs.

We often hear the complaint made by persons living in the East, who know nothing of Indians, their habits, or character, except what they have learned by reading Cooper's novels, that the people of the United States have always robbed and mistreated its Indian wards. This libel on the white American people has been so often repeated that it is generally supposed to be true.

The truth is that from the year 1789 to 1903, inclusive, we have paid the Indians for their support and education the enormous sum of $402,217,528. Our expenditure on account of Indians in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, was $12,935,168. There are about 270,000 Indians in the United States. These figures show that in that year we have paid them about $47 per capita. Does this look like robbery? I must confess that it does, but it is the white man that is being robbed to support the red man in idleness. The white citizens have been taxed and paid during that year for the support of the Government, including Indians, $707,835,004, or a tax of about $10 per capita, no part of which has been paid by the Indians, but on the other hand they have received $47 per capita out of that fund, hence I fail to see any just ground of complaint for our treatment of our Indian wards. I desire now to call the attention of this House and the country to the reckless expenditure of public money in the Indian Territory by the Secretary of the Interior and the Dawes Commission. This Commission has been in existence about ten years, and, including the present appropriation, has spent in round numbers the enormous sum of about $1,500,000, amounting to $20 per capita to each Indian enrolled.

According to the last report of the Commissioner on Indian Affairs, on page 91, the Department has approved the enrollment of 79,517 Indians, including the negro citizens of this Territory. According to the recent statement of its chairman, Mr. Bixby, before the House Committee on Indian Affairs only one-third of the Choctaws and Chickasaws and one-fourth of the Cherokees have been allotted lands, and it has cost this Government up to this date just the sum of $20 to enroll and allot land to one Indian.

On page 93 of the last report of the Commissioner on Indian Affairs we find that 4,175 applications for Indian citizenship as freedmen citizens have been made to the Dawes Commission; that Commission has only transmitted 3,272 of these applications to the Interior Department for its action, leaving 903 Indian families asking for enrollment whose names have not been forwarded to the Interior Department for the Secretary's approval. Some of these have been held up for three years. I inquired into the reason for this delay on the part of the Dawes Commission and find that the Secretary of the Interior is largely to blame.

The same page of the Commissioner's report above alluded to shows that the applications of 1,801 of these Indian families are now pending in the Interior Department and have not been acted upon. Three hundred and ninety-four of these are before Secretary Hitchcock for his action; we are the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, but I am reminded and advised that the Secretary has ordered the Commissioner to hold them without action. An analysis of this official report shows that 4,175 of these Indian families have filed applications for enrollment, and 2,204 of these have been held up by the order of Secretary Hitchcock. Mr. Bixby, chairman of the Dawes Commission, on January 28, 1904, on pages 6 and 7 of his printed hearings before our Indian Committee, stated that his Commission wanted $250,000, in round numbers, to carry on the work of his Commission for another year, which amount the committee allowed, and it is part of the bill now under consideration by this House.

I asked Mr. Bixby this question:

Mr. STEPHENS. In 1899 the Fifty-sixth Congress, I believed you stated that with $200,000 you could get through [meaning with the work of the Dawes Commission] in eighteen months?

Mr. BIXBY. Yes; I believe so.

Mr. STEPHENS. I advocated giving you this amount?

Mr. BIXBY. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS. Since that time four years have elapsed and still we are making these [meaning annual] appropriations?

Mr. BIXBY. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS. Is it not a fact that the Secretary of the Interior, by good many rulings, has prevented your work from being effective? For instance, in the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations are they [meaning the Interior Department] holding up hundreds of allotments that you [meaning the Dawes Commission] have approved and passed upon? Are not those allotments [meaning now] held up in the Secretary of the Interior?

The CHAIRMAN. I think it hardly fair to ask Mr. Bixby, who is a subordinate of the Secretary of the Interior, to criticise his superiors.

Mr. STEPHENS (addressing Mr. BIXBY). And is it not a fact that you had a telegram recently requesting you not to send [notifying the Secretary of the Interior] any more of those applications up that were favorable to the citizens?

Mr. BIXBY. It seems to me [illegible] from answering questions of this kind. The telegram I received [illegible]

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 10.

To DAWES COMMISSION, Muskogee, Ind. T.:

Suspend action on letter November 18, I. T. D. 7131, etc., relative to persons admitted to citizenship Choctaw or Chickasaw nations by nations' authorities. Letter follows.

THOS. RYAN, Acting Secretary.

It clearly appears from these facts that Mr. Bixby desires to closely [illegible] Hitchcock, who, in my judgment, is responsible for these great losses and enormous expenditure of money, and these delays and waste of public funds are brought about by his utter disregard of the acts of Congress, his vacillating course, contradictory rulings, and incapacity to fill the public office he now holds.

I have recently received a letter from a very intelligent and respected citizen of Muskogee, Ind. T., which fully and accurately states the effect of the Secretary's rulings and actions. It is as follows:

MUSKOGEE, IND. T., February 12, 1904.

Hon. JOHN H. STEPHENS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: From the questions you propounded to Hon. Tams Bixby, chairman of the Dawes Commission, when he appeared before the House Committee on Indian Affairs, and from the resolution introduced by you in the House of Representatives, it seems that you are the first Congressman to understand [illegible] in the Indian Territory.

[illegible] in the Dawes Commission work are almost entirely due to the [illegible] of the Interior or the Interior Department, and the Department, [illegible] on the work of the Commission, [illegible] throughout the Commission [illegible] away. The Department is without a rule of decision and without any settled policy in Territory affairs. Its decisions and policy with reference to this country are as changeable as the wind. The Department is [illegible] in the Territory [illegible]. The Department, of the present department [illegible] for the Territory, is not able to handle the work, and so far it has proven itself absolutely incompetent.

[illegible] I desire to call your attention to the following cases:

The citizenship contains this provision:

"Any person who is enrolled who has not heretofore removed to and in good faith settled on the territory to which he claims citizenship."

The Dawes Commission passed upon the first case in which a construction of this provision was necessary in April or May 1901. The opinion of the Commission was forwarded to the Interior Department and approved. The Commission then decided several hundred cases involving this question, and [illegible] were approved by the Department. In the latter part of 1902 the Department, in passing on the Tsangusi Cherokee citizenship case, reversed its former decision and made it necessary for the Commission to do [illegible] work in this class of cases over again.

In 1902 the Dawes Commission, construing provisions in the Creek agreement, held that no land contest could be maintained in the Creek Nation after ninety days from the ratification of said agreement. This decision of the Commission was submitted to the Department in the case of McKee v. Wadsworth No. 207 and the Department approved the Commission. Letter of December 12, 1902, Int. T. Decisions, p. 488. Following the decision of the Department the Commission allowed contests to be filed, heard and decided the same, and many of these cases were taken to the Department on appeal and decided by the Department. The rules of the Commission were changed to conform to the Department's decision. Then, after two years, the Department discovered the provision in the agreement and held that no land contest could be filed in the Creek Nation after ninety days from the ratification of the Creek agreement—the Commission's original ruling. Minor v. Thompson, No. 56. Letter of October 8, 1904, Int. T. Decisions, p. 256, 1904. On October 24, 1904, it seems the Department discovered its error and reversed its ruling opinion and wrote the Commission to take no further action in Creek contests until instructed by the Department. Letter of October 24, 1904, Int. T. Decisions, pp. 256, 257, and 258. The Commission is still waiting for instructions and the litigants in contest cases are waiting for trial.

In the Creek citizenship case of Mary L. Harwell the Department has rendered a decision denying her children enrollment September 15, 1903, and another decision denying her enrollment May 21, 1903. Since the last decision the Department has notified the Commission to hold the matter up and return the papers so that it can be considered further June 6, 1903. This was nine months ago, and the applicants still wait for a decision.

In the Choctaw and Chickasaw enrollment work the attorneys for the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations requested the Secretary to set pass on certain classes of cases at that time. The Secretary refused the request and the Commission prepared parts of the Choctaw and Chickasaw rolls, which were approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and the Commission proceeded to make allotments on said roll. On January 28 the Secretary ordered the Commission to hold up the cases of persons he had heretofore refused to hold up. Over ninety thousand cases are on the approved rolls and have received allotments. You can readily see how this disorganizes and blocks the Commission's work. The Choctaw and Chickasaw land offices accomplish nothing, owing to conflicting orders, and the money spent in maintaining the same is practically wasted.

In the sale of Creek land the Secretary of the Interior promulgated rules and regulations governing the same. In about one month the rules were abolished. In another month a new set of rules and regulations were promulgated, and in two months were abolished. On July 31 last the best set of rules and regulations on this subject were given to the Commission. Except for a few changes and amendments they still stand. Under the present rules and regulations it is practically impossible for an actual settler to get land. It takes too long; too much red tape, and too much expense. The land is sold to speculators and not to actual settlers. The Dawes Commission has nothing to do with the sale of land.

Everything done by the Dawes Commission is subject to departmental approval. I am unable to see how the Commission can accomplish anything with the present Secretary of the Interior over it. As soon as the Commission has made some headway on certain work, the Secretary changes his rulings and the work has to be done over again. Under the administration of the country here the approval of the Secretary was supposed to be a large extent a matter of facts, as the commissioners were high-minded men, and presumed to be competent. I believe the end of the work is further away today than when Secretary Bliss retired from the Cabinet. It seems very hard that not two people who live in this country understand the government money spent be thrown away as it has been. It is time to abolish the Commission or take it from under the control of the Secretary.

The cases cited in this letter are not isolated cases, but the rule. I can furnish you with many others.

Very truly,

J. H. HILL.

Mr. Chairman, to further show how Indians desiring to secure their allotments in the Indian Territory are now being treated by Mr. Hitchcock, I will submit three letters from Indian citizens for your consideration. Doctor Fortson is the editor of a paper. I have known him for many years, and know him to be a truthful, honest, and upright man. The other gentlemen are excellent men in every respect. These letters are as follows:

KIOWA, IND. T., February 22, 1904.

Hon. J. H. STEPHENS, United States Congress.

DEAR SIR AND OLD ACQUAINTANCE, if you are the Stephens of Stephens & Matlock of Montague, Tex.: Sir, I received a notice from the Dawes Commission stating that they were allowed to notify me that there would be no more allotments made to me until further notice from the Secretary.

Now, when I received this notice, I had already filed upon all the land allowed me; the last filed on was at Tishomingo. I filed on my homestead at Atoka. My homestead is near Kiowa, Choctaw Nation. I wish to know whether the Choctaw lawyers can legally go back on their decision. Mine is not a court case. I was passed upon by the Dawes Commission, and their decision was ratified by the Secretary of Interior and placed on the roll, and filed on all the land I was entitled to. * * *

Hoping that you will condescend to take notice of this and head off the grafters who are determined to litigate the lands of Indianola, by which means they make millions at our expense.

Respectfully submitted for your consideration.

J. R. FORTSON, M. D.

Mr. Askew writes me as follows:

MARIETTA, IND. T., February 26, 1904.

Hon. JOHN H. STEPHENS, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 22d instant to hand, and in reply will say that I was more than glad to have a letter from you and to know that you were determined to investigate matters in this country, and I will gladly give you all of the information that I possibly can.

I have in receipt of a letter from the Dawes Commission, which I will hand you herewith for your information, a duplicate copy, which reads as follows:

"Receipt is hereby acknowledged of your letter February 15, asking if you will receive a certificate for your homestead allotment after the expiration of nine months from the date of selection.

"In reply to your letter, you are advised that it appears from our records that at the Chickasaw land office of the Commission, on May 19, 1904, you selected as your homestead the east half of the southeast quarter of section 6, township 7 south, range 4 east, Chickasaw Nation, containing 80 acres.

"You are informed, however, that on January 28, 1904, the Commission was instructed by the Secretary of the Interior to take no further steps looking to the enrollment or allotment of persons who were admitted to enrollment in the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations by decisions of the Choctaw and the Chickasaw legislature or by the United States Indian agent on appeal from adverse decisions of the Choctaw council.

"It appearing from our records that you were admitted to enrollment in the Choctaw Nation by the United States Indian agent, February 5, 1903, under the construction of the Secretary of Interior referred to, the Commission is estopped from taking any further action relative to your allotment or to the issuance of allotment certificate in your name at this time.

"Respectfully,

"T. B. NEEDLES,
"Commissioner to the Five Tribes."

I trust from the above letter you can see just what is going on down here, and you will be able to do many well good things.

If you should want the original letter from the Commission, I will gladly forward it to you.

There are several people here who have been refused to file by the Commission on account of the Secretary's orders.

Hoping you may see the condition of this country and people,

I am, yours, truly,

SHELTON S. ASKEW.

Hon. JOHN STEPHENS, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR AND FRIEND: We write you in regard to the present status of affairs now existing in this country respecting the recent action of the honorable Secretary of the Interior, in which he has by his ruling stopped the issuance of allotments to the Indians and freedmen, who have complied and have valuable improvements, and is doing great injustice to them.

In the first place, what is the object in the honorable Secretary in so doing? It seems to us if he has a right to do this he has a right to be retroactive and take from those who have already filed their holdings. This ruling is perplexing and doing our people great injury. Knowing your kindly feeling to the people of the Indian Territory, we fully believe that you will recognize our people's interest in this measure.

Now, Mr. STEPHENS, if any Congressional action is to be had for our relief, we ask you only to remember us on lines of justice and right. You understand the situation far better than we do. We understand that you have always championed our cause, and we write you only to get your understanding of this matter. When do you think this other bill be raised so as to allow filing to proceed, or do you think legislation will have to be had to get relief? I have expose this lengthy letter and ask as hear from you.

Hoping to hear from you soon we are,

Very truly, your friends,

JOSEPH A. EDWARDS.
WEST W. HYDER.

Mr. Chairman, these men are highly respected and reputable citizens of the Chickasaw Nation, and their statements are entitled to full faith and credit, and the injustice done them should be at once corrected by Congress.

On May 21, 1903, an opinion was rendered in the Wiley Adams case by the Interior Department, which holds that the act of Congress of June 10, 1896, conferred on the Dawes Commission no right or power to strike from the rolls persons placed thereon by the action and the consent of the tribe. This ruling is openly, wilfully, and clearly violated in the Fortson and Askew and hundreds of other similar cases. The Wiley Adams opinion is as follows, viz:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, May 21, 1903.

THE COMMISSION TO THE FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES,
Muscogee, Ind. T.

GENTLEMEN: I have your letter of the proceedings of your Commission upon the application of Wiley Adams for enrollment as a citizen of the Chickasaw Nation. The facts as stated by your Commission are that Adams applied before the Commission in the year [illegible] for enrollment as a citizen of the Choctaw Nation, that he had a white father and a half-blood Indian mother, and was a resident of the Choctaw Nation and by agreement of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, November 3, 1902, recognized by the citizens of the Choctaw Nation and treated as a member of that tribe, that he was enrolled by the Choctaw and Chickasaw census board as a citizen of the Choctaw Nation, and that his name appeared upon the Choctaw census roll of 1896 as an intermarried citizen. The act of June 10, 1896, [illegible] * * * That the enrollment commission shall respect all rights of the citizens of the several tribes as they may exist under the laws of the United States, and all treaties with either of said tribes [illegible] and all laws and treaties governing the property rights of said tribes, and all persons who claim to be entitled to be enrolled as members of said tribes shall make application to the said commission within three months from the date of the approval hereof, or be forever barred from participation in the distribution of the property of said tribes. The several tribes have been given three months from the date of the approval of the act within which to make application for enrollment, and the doctrine such an application would be barred three months from the date of the approval of the act.

[illegible] of the several tribes, as then existed [illegible] Adams's name appeared upon Choctaw census roll of 1896 [illegible] in the possession of this Commission [illegible] Choctaw and Chickasaw nations whose rights [illegible] in 1884 had the authority to admit this applicant to enrollment as a member of the Choctaw Nation. [illegible] is therefore approved.

Very respectfully,

THOS. RYAN, Acting Secretary.

Mr. Chairman, this opinion in the Wiley Adams case conclusively shows that the Choctaw and Chickasaw councils had the right under existing laws to enroll their citizens; and when so enrolled by their respective tribes they were entitled to have their names approved by the Dawes Commission and the Secretary of the Interior. But the Secretary has openly and willfully violated this ruling and repudiated the law, even after enrollment and allotment had been made, as in the Fortson and Askew cases.

These outrages on our helpless Indian wards are due to the Secretary's utter disregard of the rights of others, and to the further fact that he seems to be a tool in the hands of Mansfield, McMurray & Cornish, who desire to earn as the attorneys of these Indians a great contingent fee by preventing the enrollment of hundreds of Indians, and thus leaving more money and lands to be divided among the remaining members of these tribes. It is an open secret that this firm of lawyers have a contract with these nations for a contingent fee of 10 per cent of the value of each Indian's property that they prevent from being enrolled.

Mr. Mansfield, one of these attorneys, in an oral argument before Judge Campbell, assistant attorney-general of the Interior Department, in January, 1904, stated that each estate in question is worth from $6,000 to $8,000. He was contesting a question which involves the rights of about 4,000 Indians to their share of the tribal property. Taking $7,000 as an average value, we have as a total value $28,000,000. If these attorneys have a contract with the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations whereby they are to get 10 per cent of the value of each estate that they save to said nations by getting an individual off of the tribal rolls—and this contract, I am informed, they admit, and everyone, including the Dawes Commission, is said to be aware of—then I submit that this fee would be, if they cut from the rolls 4,000 names, the enormous sum of $2,800,000.

Many of the Indians whom these attorneys propose to disinherit are now on the tribal rolls, placed there by the Indians themselves, and many of their names have been approved by the Dawes Commission. Some of them have had their land allotted to them, and deeds made conveying the lands to them. The Secretary of the Interior now is arbitrarily endeavoring, in violation of a plain act of Congress, to prevent these deeds from being recorded by the recorders of the district where the land is situated.

I present for your consideration a letter from Commissioner Jones, dated October 5, 1903, which fully exposes the purpose of these attorneys to disinherit and pauperize hundreds of poor people who are now on the Indian citizenship rolls and have lived in that Territory all of their lives and have their homes and all of their property there. Commissioner Jones decides against these attorneys, and on November 18, 1903, Thomas Ryan, Acting Secretary of the Interior, affirmed the opinion of Commissioner Jones.

Strange to relate, on January 28, 1904, Secretary Hitchcock, for some unknown reasons, or, rather, for no reason, reversed these opinions and decided in favor of the contention of Mansfield, McMurray & Cornish. This letter exposes the schemes of these lawyers and is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, October 5, 1903.

The Hon. SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

SIR: I am in receipt of your communication dated August 28 last, forward[illegible] from Mansfield, McMurray & Cornish, [illegible] Choctaw and Chickasaw nations whose rights [illegible] Mansfield, McMurray & Cornish, who rely as a [illegible] who are claimed to be members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations [illegible] Commissioner [illegible] upon acts of council and decisions of the United States Indian agent, as above stated.

It is the contention of Mansfield, McMurray & Cornish that if said persons are entitled to admission as citizens [illegible] upon acts of the council of the Choctaw Nation [illegible] upon appeal [illegible] persons are not entitled to be enrolled as such [illegible] persons as have heretofore been admitted by decisions of the Indian agent, and whose status has become [illegible] such persons should be stricken from the rolls [illegible] upon acts of the general council of the Choctaw Nation and decisions of the United States Indian agent upon appeal [illegible] Mansfield, McMurray & Cornish, and [illegible] persons with the United States agency and family relationship as [illegible] admitted by the same agent the United States Indian agent are now making their cases passed upon by the Choctaw and Chickasaw councils.

Mansfield, McMurray & Cornish then advise the Commission that the purpose of their communication is to ask that no further action be taken with reference to the enrollment or allotment to persons relying upon said acts of the council or said decisions of the Indian agent, and that final action in such cases be postponed until the final determination by the Choctaw and Chickasaw citizenship court of the cases involving the status of persons relying upon the council, agency and family relationship.

The communication, [illegible] to said letter on August 6, 1903, states that it has heretofore enrolled as citizens of the Choctaw Nation a number of persons whose rights are dependent upon acts of the Choctaw council and decisions of the United States Indian agent [illegible] July 1, 1903, as provided by section 11 thereof, entitled [illegible] ments.

The said letter from the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes [illegible] Mansfield, McMurray & Cornish, dated August 15, 1903, [illegible] Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes, and the purpose of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations that the United States should be represented by the Department of the Interior [illegible] Mansfield, McMurray & Cornish, dated August 15, 1903, [illegible] the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, and the purpose of the said letter [illegible] Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations [illegible] Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes [illegible] Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations [illegible] Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations [illegible] Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations

Choctaw Nation who were admitted to citizenship by acts of the council of the nation or by decision of the United States Indian agent overruling adverse action by the nation's council.

The attorneys state that there are pending before the Choctaw and Chickasaw citizenship court cases in which the [illegible] persons who claim to be Choctaw and Chickasaw citizens, who rely upon the action of the Choctaw council in admitting them to citizenship, and who have lived and died in the State of Mississippi and who were never in the Indian Nations, now pending before the citizenship court of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, or communicated with the Choctaw Indians in any way, claiming to be members of the Choctaw Nation, and that the applicants in these cases have never been in the Indian Nations, but have lived and died in the State of Mississippi and who were never in the Choctaw Nation, now pending before the citizenship court of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, now pending before the citizenship court of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, and

[illegible]

Mr. Chairman, a bill should be passed by this Congress providing for the [illegible] the Indian Territory to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The Congress of the United States by act of June 28, 1898, [illegible] the Choctaw Nation, and the act of Congress [illegible] of the Choctaw Nation [illegible] for the [illegible] and Choctaw citizens [illegible] to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The Choctaw Nation by vote of an act of its legislature approved [illegible] provided for such a test case [illegible] notice to any tribe of the filing of any application [illegible]

The Chickasaw Nation [illegible] 1897, provided for [illegible] and the treaty of [illegible] and the two tribes of Indians had also provided for such proceedings.

The Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes [illegible] the law of Congress of June 28, 1898 [illegible] provided for [illegible] the application be served upon the tribe in which [illegible] story was situated. A very [illegible] under the said law and [illegible] were [illegible] and were [illegible]

It was provided by the act of June 28, 1898, that either party dissatisfied with the decision of such Commission might appeal to one of the United States courts in the Indian Territory, which cause should there be docketed and [illegible] be tried. Many appeals were taken to such courts and many of the applicants adjudged [illegible] and others rejected, and these judgments remained in force about four years under which successful applicants acted relying upon such judgments.

Whereas the Congress of the United States by sections 31, 32, and [illegible] of an act approved July 1, 1902, provided for a [illegible] court before which a test suit should be brought by said nations in order to test the question as to whether or not notice to both [illegible] de novo before the Commission [illegible] proceeding was to prevail [illegible] courts of the Indian Territory [illegible] before the Dawes Commission upon [illegible] such as [illegible] appeal [illegible] case to the Supreme Court of the United States.

FORT SMITH, ARK., IND. T., January 5, 1904.

Hon. JOHN H. STEPHENS, M. C., Washington, D. C.

[illegible] introduced in Congress providing for [illegible] and Choctaw citizenship court to the Supreme [illegible]

[illegible] courts of the Indian Territory [illegible] are worth of property is involved, is simply outrageous [illegible]

Very respectfully,

J. F. SHARP.

COMANCHE, IND. T., January 19, 1904.

Hon. JOHN H. STEPHENS, [illegible] D. C.

[illegible] a bill in Congress [illegible] of right and [illegible] reaching [illegible]

[illegible] their judgments to be reviewed.

Very truly,

H. B. LOCKETT.

Mr. [illegible] the Secretary of the Interior and the Dawes Commission have deliberately violated an act of Congress and [illegible] Indian lands to Choctaw Indians [illegible] in a Choctaw [illegible] tions:

[illegible] the Choctaw and [illegible] timber [illegible]

Mr. STEPHENS. Upon which they had their homes?

Mr. BIXBY. [illegible] or not.

[illegible] but for the reason why an [illegible] intely to permit a plain act of Congress [illegible] Mr. Bixby explicitly, when before [illegible] to be a fact.

Mr. [illegible] Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. [illegible] Certainly.

Mr. [illegible] ALD. With a great many things the gentleman [illegible] but if I understand correctly the explanation [illegible] before the committee, it was that there was [illegible] of very valuable timber [illegible] Chairman's last right be made. I wish to ask the gentleman if it was not a fact that it appeared that it was for the purpose of subserving the interests of the Indians that these [illegible] were withdrawn from allotment?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that persons [illegible] and design [illegible] have some excuse to give for it.

It is clearly evident to my mind that the Secretary has violated the law by refusing to allot land to these Indians, and he [illegible] and the gentleman from New York is correct [illegible] and take these Indians' timber land away from them was the reason. Any lawyer knows that the timber growing upon land is part of the realty. The law clearly stated that the [illegible] and buy or take the timber away from them [illegible] able.

Mr. [illegible] Is it not a fact that there are certain [illegible] Territory practically obtaining possession of [illegible] of the restriction or inalienation by [illegible]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman is correct, and I will [illegible] report of Mr. Brosius, the secretary of the Indian [illegible] (which report you will find in a [illegible] and other [illegible] also [illegible] and the very object and purpose for which [illegible] were organized was to get hold of [illegible] and lease and deal in them for the [illegible]

Mr. [illegible] Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman [illegible] the law the Indians could be allotted [illegible] that it was made the imperative duty of the Dawes Commission to allot them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It was.

Mr. [illegible] And they have [illegible] and [illegible] to observe that law and allot the land.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; and they are now refusing to observe the law by refusing to allot the timber lands to the Indians, to which they are entitled by treaty and by the act of Congress.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And it is to be clothed in the Curtis bill, section 6, with the power to sell the timber upon this land, and as I am informed the scale or estimate that has been made, that is now in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior, appraising them at about one-tenth their value will be the basis upon which the Secretary approves the sale of these lands at a reasonable value.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I am satisfied, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman is correct in his statement, and the following letters from a prominent attorney at Chickasha, Ind. T., explain the true situation. The letters are as follows:

CHICKASHA, IND. T., December 22, 1903.

Hon. JOHN H. STEPHENS, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your favor of [illegible] in regard to the treatment of [illegible] and [illegible] I [illegible] you from [illegible] that it was the [illegible] Commissioner [illegible] Secretary [illegible] that this character of land should be withheld [illegible]

[illegible] for the purpose of [illegible] and [illegible] Congress calling [illegible] from allotment [illegible] if you could [illegible] I will appreciate it very much.

Yours, very truly,

F. E. RIDDER.

CHICKASHA, IND. T., February 17, 1904.

Hon. JOHN H. STEPHENS, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I received the examination and statement of Mr. Bixby before [illegible] too. I note he states that unless the committee recommends [illegible] in regard to the timber proposition they will go ahead and [illegible] existing laws.

[illegible] to some of the best Indian citizens who reside in the [illegible] Indians are not desirous of having any new legislation [illegible] upon selecting their [illegible] as has been ratified by them [illegible] to be separated from their [illegible] and [illegible] them.

[illegible] mistaken when he claims that the Indians were [illegible] of [illegible] and when he says that their [illegible] that they are making the best arrangement [illegible]

[illegible] along this line will simply tend to create [illegible] and [illegible] the timber, [illegible] and buy or take the timber away from them [illegible]

[illegible] and have the same [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] Indian Territory [illegible]

Wishing you success in your endeavors, I beg to remain,

Yours, very truly,

F. E. RIDDER.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the gentleman from Texas permit me to make a suggestion? It is not a question. Is not this the condition of affairs, that it is the right to wise for the Dawes Commission to allot those timber lands? The Dawes Commission and the Secretary are not refusing to obey the [illegible] of Congress, but they are performing other duties that they must at the same time perform and are [illegible] for the purpose of this [illegible] so far as timber land is concerned, and in the meantime bringing the matter to the attention of Congress, so that if Congress in its wisdom sees fit to change the statute it can do so, and then they will [illegible] with the decree of Congress and [illegible]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But, Mr. Chairman, it can not be true that the Dawes Commission has so much work to perform that they can not allot this land to the Indians.

Mr. SHERMAN. The [illegible] when Mr. Breckenridge—no; I think it was Mr. [illegible]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I care not what was stated. The fact is that the Commission has recently discharged a number of clerks because they claimed they have no work to perform in the Indian Territory.

Mr. SHERMAN. But that is another class of work.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is not [illegible] of the Indian Territory under the control of the Dawes Commission?

Mr. SHERMAN. [illegible]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then, why should they be [illegible] their lands and allotments from one to [illegible] the number and allotment to the Indians?

Mr. SHERMAN. These are various divisions of work. The gentleman here and myself, in Congress, have one line of work to perform, and the gentleman from Mississippi has another.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is there any reason to prevent this Commission from receiving the applications of the Indians and sending them to their homes to them? I will explain to the gentleman from New York the reason is given plainly by letters and telegrams from the department showing that they propose to hold up these allotments for the purpose of securing from Congress legislation to carry out other designs. They do not assign the reason of their failure to comply with the law to be that they do not have the time to do it, but the other reason that they propose the delay in order to secure legislation that will segregate many thousands of acres of valuable pine timber land and have them sold in unlimited quantities to lumber companies—in other words, to the lumber trust.

Mr. SHERMAN. They assigned, if the gentleman will permit another brief interruption, as a reason before our committee no desire to hold up Congress and hold up the work or hold up anybody, but they stated that, in their judgment, it was wise to make this change that was suggested, and so they postponed that division of the work until they could bring the subject to the attention of Congress, and if Congress then thought wise not to make any change, then they would go along and complete the work as originally contemplated.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The question is this: Does the gentleman contend for a moment that an executive officer has a right to refuse to perform a duty expecting that Congress will change the line of that duty as marked out by law for him to follow.

Mr. SHERMAN. I contend that an executive officer who is given not only authority, but to whom is intrusted a certain amount of work, can use his judgment in performing such portion as he desires first, and if, in his judgment, he thinks it is unwise to perform some portion of it, he may temporarily delay that and go on with other work until he calls the attention of the legislative body to it to take action and make change if that body deems it wise so to do; and that is this case.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the statement of Mr. Bixby, alluded to by the gentleman from New York, is printed, and I will put it in the RECORD with my remarks, and that will explain his object and also that of the Secretary of the Interior. The statement made by Mr. Bixby was in answer to questions asked by me, as follows:

Mr. STEPHENS. I believe under an original agreement between the Choctaw and Chickasaw and the Congress that they had a right to select timber lands, that the only lands reserved were mineral lands?

Mr. BIXBY. The Choctaw and Chickasaw agreements unquestionably give the members of the tribes a right to select land upon which pine timber was growing.

Mr. STEPHENS. Upon which they had their homes?

Mr. BIXBY. Whether they had their homes thereon or not.

Mr. STEPHENS. And is it not a fact that recently the Secretary of the Interior has prevented these people from taking those lands, without any law whatever?

Mr. BIXBY. It is a fact that upon the recommendation of the Commission these lands are not being allotted at the present time.

Mr. STEPHENS. The law requires that they have a right to select timber land?

Mr. BIXBY. I think it did.

Mr. STEPHENS. Then, why does the Commission disregard the act of Congress?

Mr. BIXBY. I am glad you ask me that because perhaps I should explain this situation. Just before the opening of the land offices in the Chickasaw and Choctaw nations I received a telegram from Governor Mc[illegible] saying that certain [illegible] were about to receive possession of the pine timber in the Choctaw Nation at a consideration entirely inadequate, and that as a matter of fact the Indians were about to be robbed of their pine.

I presented the matter to the Commission the next day, and the Commission instructed me to make an examination of the situation immediately and to report back to the Commission what I found. I immediately went down to the Choctaw Nation, looked into the matter, and found the statement substantially correct, and made up my mind that Governor Mc[illegible] had correctly stated the situation. I so reported to the Commission, and recommended that the proposed sales, any one of which if accepted would deprive the Choctaw Nation of a large amount of timber, should be withheld. I recommended that the proposal be submitted to the Secretary of the Interior, and that he should be advised of the situation, and with the request that perhaps Congress might also be advised. That recommendation was approved. We did advise the Secretary that we had withheld [illegible] from the market, not in a spirit of obstruction, but looking to the time when Congress may pass a law of [illegible]

Mr. STEPHENS. But that prevented the Indians from taking their allotments?

Mr. BIXBY. Yes; but not necessarily to their injury.

Mr. STEPHENS. It has indefinitely postponed the allotment?

Mr. BIXBY. Not necessarily.

I would like to know, Mr. Chairman, how much time I have used?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used forty-two minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, on the 23 day of March, 1901, Congress passed an act providing for the sale of town lots in the towns of Lawton, Hobart, and Anadarko, in Oklahoma. Under this act, at a public sale in that year, these lots brought about $750,000 cash. This money was placed in the Treasury of the United States, where it has since remained, despite the fact that the towns to which it belongs have used every means in their power to secure this money.

The following letter, dated nearly two years ago, is only one of many such efforts, and I will add that Mr. Hitchcock utterly ignored this courteous request:

LAWTON, OKLA., May 20, 1902.

To the Hon. SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: The county commissioners of Comanche County, Okla., request the [illegible]

[illegible] lots in Lawton, Oklahoma, in the month of August, [illegible] with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1901, [illegible]

[illegible] for the purpose of providing additional [illegible]

[illegible] the proposal and estimate, the county commissioners state that the temporary jail building is wholly inadequate for the accommodation of its inmates at this time, that it has approximately [illegible] only sixteen prisoners, and that there are at this time twenty-six inmates in said jail.

This is an extensive county, one of the largest in the Territory, and next to the Indian Territory, where large bands of criminals congregate and commit depredations in our county.

At the last session of the grand jury in this county [illegible] were returned against persons who were for murder, and another hundred, except two, were for serious offenses.

More than fifty cases where prisoners were out on bond in felony cases were not prosecuted.

It is the opinion of the board of county commissioners that when the grand jury asks for a sufficient length of time to consider these matters that many indictments will be returned for unpaid bills and against the laws of our Territory, and that unless the honorable Secretary of the Interior will grant relief at once criminals will have to be turned loose from our jail upon the people of our county.

Respectfully,

[SEAL.] SAM STRAUSS,
Chairman Board of County Commissioners.

Attest:

W. G. GORMAN, County Clerk.

Mr. Chairman, the law relating to the sale of these town lots within what was formerly the Kiowa and Comanche Indian reservations in Oklahoma provides that—

The lands so set apart and designated shall, in advance of the opening, be surveyed, subdivided, and platted, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, into appropriate lots, blocks, streets, alleys, and sites for parks or public buildings sufficient to make a town site thereof: Provided, That no such town site shall contain more than one business and one residence lot. Town lots shall be platted and sold at public auction to the highest bidder, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, at sales to be had at the opening herein authorized to occur.

The proceeds from the sale of these lots in the respective county seats shall, after deducting the expenses incurred in the survey and subdivision of the town site, and in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in the following manner: A suitable building shall be erected, with all necessary seats at a cost not exceeding $[illegible], and such other public improvements as the Secretary of the Interior shall deem appropriate to make, that the payment of expenses necessary to the establishment of the county government of such town site be not burdened, and the balance remaining shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians belonging on the reservation on which the town site shall have been established, to be disposed of hereafter as Congress may direct.

[illegible] taken in the selection of such town sites, and if any such town site shall be found by the Secretary of the Interior to be not located upon the most desirable portion of the reservation, he is hereby authorized to locate such town site upon any portion of the reservation he may deem most desirable for the purpose, and the lands so selected shall be platted and disposed of in the manner provided in this act.

[illegible] of the municipalities when organized, and the money so paid shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States.

And the lands so platted by the Secretary of the Interior shall be held by him for such purposes.

And the lands so platted by the Secretary of the Interior shall be held by him for such purposes.

The only sales proper, and legal view of the question seems to be that set forth in your letter to the Secretary of the Interior, dated July 10, 1900, as follows:

[illegible] as trustee, [illegible] as a matter of a proper and exact audit.

Mr. Chairman, under this rule it seems incumbent upon the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to account for and account for all funds received by him from [illegible] whether from mining leases, grazing leases, or otherwise, and whether the funds are of the class known as "Indian moneys, proceeds of labor," or otherwise, and to render such full and explicit account thereof as will admit of a proper and exact audit by the Auditor for the Interior Department, and it is so held.

Again, on December 3, 1902, in what is known as the "Menominee logs case," the Comptroller said:

I think the Auditor was justified in raising the point that the [illegible] of any person. [illegible] experience dictates such a procedure is necessary as we may leave to future officers a record that will enable them to ascertain what their predecessors have done and the reasons for their actions.

of an officer of the Government, or in any other place, retain the character of public funds: the title remains in the United States; they cease to be public moneys only when paid out in liquidation of a legal demand and to a lawful claimant. (4 Comp. Dec., 210.)

In section 22 of the act of May 2, 1890, which act created a temporary government for the Territory of Oklahoma (26 Stat., 92), it was provided:

[illegible] in said Territory of Oklahoma which may be occupied [illegible] under the provisions of this act [illegible] by a person who is entitled to purchase his town lot [illegible] purposes, [illegible] for such purposes [illegible] or any part thereof for town site purposes. [illegible] a part for such proposed town site, and if [illegible] by the Secretary of the Interior to be used [illegible] in the town site. And the lands so platted by the Secretary of the Interior [illegible] for such purposes only.

Comptroller Matthews, replying to a letter from the Secretary of the Interior relating to the disposition of moneys received by the Secretary of the Interior under this provision, on July 13, 1892, said:

I have the honor to say that, in my opinion, Congress did not intend that the moneys derived from the sale of town-sites in Oklahoma, under the act referred to, should be disposed of in such a manner that no account [illegible] of the Treasury. [illegible] sets apart the [illegible] purposes, and provides that [illegible] shall pay over the same to the proper authority [illegible] the Territory [illegible] as other public revenues, to be [illegible] on account of sales of town sites [illegible] 22, act of May 2, 1890, and under the authority [illegible] act the Secretary of the Treasury was issue appropriation warrants for the amounts so deposited, setting them [illegible] and making them subject to the requisition of the secretary of the Interior for the purposes [illegible] in the act.

A detailed account of the deposits made on account of sales of such portions [illegible] be kept in such manner as will enable the Secretary of the Interior to make [illegible] of the respective municipalities [illegible] as suggested in your letter.

I would say that I have ascertained that the moneys received from town-site sales, under section 22 of the act of May 2, 1890, above cited, have been covered into the Treasury and paid out on warrants, in accordance with the decision of the Comptroller, and it is clear that the funds received from the sale of town lots under the act of March 3, 1901, is in every respect the same as under the act of May 2, 1890, and Congress in both cases appropriated the proceeds so received for specific purposes.

Section 234, Revised Statutes, provides that—

All claims and demands whatever by the United States or against them and all accounts whatsoever in which the United States are concerned, either as debtors or creditors, shall be settled and adjusted in the Treasury Department.

Section 3622, Revised Statutes, provides that—

Every officer or agent of the United States who receives money which he is not authorized to retain as salary, pay, or emolument shall render it to the Treasury.

Section 7 of the act of July 31, 1894 (28 Stat., 206), provides that—

The Auditor for the Interior Department shall receive and examine all accounts * * * relating to * * * public lands.

Mr. Chairman, the Comptroller or the Treasury in a decision (to the Secretary of the Treasury) dated December 18, 1900, held—

When the Commissioner of Indian Affairs assumed the duty of [illegible] proceeds of timber, minerals, or any other property, the duty of accounting [illegible] the government, the Secretary has taken steps to have [illegible] that the disbursement of such funds shall be accounted for.

The only safe, proper, and legal view of the question seems to be that set forth in your letter to the Secretary of the Interior, dated July 10, 1900, as follows:

[illegible] as trustee, [illegible] as a matter of a proper and exact audit.

* * * In order to perfect the records in the Auditor's office, I would suggest that the [illegible] of the United States [illegible] of the present [illegible] and that the same be [illegible] for the [illegible] for the [illegible] of the account relating to the Indian funds [illegible] preserve a record of this transaction in the very place where one would naturally look for it, however.

Mr. Chairman, the large sum of money arising from the sale of these Oklahoma town lots has never been placed in the Treasury of the United States, as is shown by the letter of the Acting Treasurer. It is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, March 2, 1904.

Hon. JOHN H. STEPHENS,
House of Representatives.

SIR: Responding to your oral request of the 26th ultimo in relation to a bill passed during the Fifty-second Congress providing for the sale of town sites in the towns of Lawton, Anadarko, and Hobart, and providing for the disposition of the proceeds of the sales, I have the honor to inform you that the moneys received by virtue of said act have been deposited by the Secretary of the Interior to the credit of the Indians entitled thereto, and that no part of the proceeds of the sales have ever been covered into the Treasury of the United States.

Respectfully,

R. B. ARMSTRONG,
Acting Secretary.

Mr. Chairman, it is clear to my mind that in this matter we have another illustration of the manner in which Mr. Hitchcock has ignored the plain laws of the United States, and thereby disregarded his oath of office as well as the rights of the citizens of the counties and towns to whom this money belongs. There have been several destructive fires in these towns which destroyed hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of property. Mr. Hitchcock should be compelled to refund to those people the money lost by these fires, for the reason that had some of this money been put into waterworks this property would not have been destroyed. Some time ago I undertook in this Congress a resolution calling on Mr. Hitchcock to account for this strange violation of law. A few days ago he ordered work to begin on these waterworks.

I am glad to know that the Secretary has in this instance recognized that the Congress of the United States can at least inquire into his arbitrary actions and call him to account for his refusal to obey the law that he has sworn to obey as an officer of this Government.

Mr. Chairman, the best thing in the message of President Roosevelt is as follows:

No man is above the law and no man is below it; nor do we ask any man's permission when we require him to obey it. Obedience to the law is demanded as a right, not asked as a favor.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to know why the President, if he means what he says, does not cast out of his Cabinet Secretary Hitchcock, who in the many instances I have cited has openly defied the law and refused to obey it. By removing this member of his Cabinet the President would do more to earn the gratitude of millions of western people than he has ever done by any official act, and I speak not as a partisan, but as an humble citizen of this great Republic.

Mr. Chairman, the President of the United States at the beginning of this Congress in his message points out that [illegible] almost every Department of this Government is reeking with fraud and corruption. He says that—

The special investigation of the subject of naturalization under the direction of the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization has [illegible] a number of naturalized citizens who have [illegible] and have [illegible] and have [illegible] the United States [illegible] and have [illegible] and have [illegible] and have

President in this message is the following, every word of which is true:

While there may have been as much official corruption in former years, there has been more developed and brought to light in the immediate past than in the preceding century of our country's history.

It might be well for us to inquire into the cause of this recent official corruption which surpasses that of the preceding century of our country's history. Can it not be found in the fact that one political party has practically been in power for more than forty years, and that the conditions surrounding this party make it impossible for it to throw out of office such men as Secretary Hitchcock and numerous others that I might mention, who are responsible for or have participated in this wholesale plunder of the people?

Mr. Chairman, I have cited the President's recent statement, showing that there is now more corruption in this Government than ever before, and I will cite another very eminent Republican authority giving the remedy for this corruption. The last clause of the Republican party's platform in 1856 gave this remedy, viz:

The recent startling developments of fraud and corruption at the Federal metropolis show that an entire change of administration is imperatively demanded.

Mr. Chairman, I earnestly hope that the Democratic party will adopt the whole of that section as part of its platform in the coming national campaign and make it the battle cry and paramount issue therein, in the hope that the gallows erected by Haman (the Republican party) in 1856 for the Democracy will be the gallows on which this Haman will be hanged by the American people in 1904.

The following is section 6 of the Republican platform of 1856, to which I have alluded and from which I have quoted:

That the people justly view with alarm the reckless extravagance which pervades every department of the Federal Government; that a return to rigid economy and retrenchment by a responsible administration of the public Treasury is a leading purpose of the Republican party; that the frauds and corruption recently exposed should be followed by the exposure and punishment of fraud and corruption wherever they may be found, and that an entire change of administration is imperatively demanded.

Mr. SHERMAN. The gentleman from Texas does not want to use any more time to-night?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I will yield to the gentleman from South Dakota some time if he desires it.

Mr. MARTIN. I do not like to ask the House to remain any longer to-night.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOUTELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12684, the Indian appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

SENATE RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate concurrent resolution was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors:

Senate concurrent resolution No. 50.

Resolved by the Senate, the House of Representatives concurring, That the Secretary of War be and he is hereby directed to cause an examination and survey to be made from the St. Jones River at Dover, Del., down present on Little River and thence to Delaware Bay for the purpose of determining the advisability and cost of cutting out a canal between the said rivers and the deepening and widening of Little River, so as to provide a channel suitable for the needs of commerce from Dover, Del., to Delaware Bay.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 13290. An act making an appropriation for clearing the Potomac River of ice.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 3780. An act authorizing the Yankton, Norfolk and Southern Railway Company to construct a combined railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Yankton, S. Dak.; and

S. 121. An act granting additional lands adjacent to the site of the University of Montana to the State of Montana for uses of said university.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 8850. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas Joyce;

H. R. 6089. An act granting an increase of pension to Emma L. Nagle;

H. R. 865. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles C. Chase;

H. R. 11021. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph Weems;

H. R. 2019. An act granting a pension to Mallie Gwynn;

H. R. 6852. An act granting a pension to Mary Huff;

H. R. 8227. An act granting a pension to Lucius E. Polk;

H. R. 4045. An act granting a pension to Minnie Gusler;

H. R. 19. An act establishing a United States court at Marietta, Ind. T.;

H. R. 10145. An act to provide for appeals, writs of error, and other appellate proceedings from the circuit and district courts of Beaumont, in the eastern district of Texas; and

H. R. 9208. An act permitting the building of a dam across the Mississippi River between the counties of Wright and Sherburne, in the State of Minnesota.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. HARDWICK for ten days on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock) the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Mahlon Hamilton, administrator de bonis non of estate of John Hamilton, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor submitting an estimate of appropriation for repairs of Government property at Ellis Island—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. HINSHAW, from the Committee on Patents, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11585) to amend section 493 of the Revised Statutes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1320); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. CURTIS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3204) permitting the Iowa, Chickasha and Fort Smith Railway Company to sell and convey its railroad and other property in the Indian Territory to the Eastern Oklahoma Railway Company, and the Eastern Oklahoma Railway Company to lease all its railroad and other property in the Indian Territory to the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, and thereafter to sell its railroad and other property to said the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1324); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. PAYNE, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill of the House H. R. 9872, reported in lieu thereof a bill (H. R. 13416) providing for the licensing of custom-house brokers, and for other purposes, accompanied by a report (No. 1333); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11348) to set apart certain lands in the State of South Dakota as a public park, to be known as the Battle Mountain Sanitarium Park, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1334); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. DIETRICH presented petitions of sundry citizens of Lexington, Cody, Mullen, Lincoln, St. Edward, Naponee, Brownville, Hansen, and Weeping Water, all in the State of Nebraska, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Concord, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation to increase the salaries of rural free delivery mail carriers; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the National Pure Food Congress, of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the passage of the so-called "pure-food bill," which was referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. CLAPP presented a petition of the Philolectian Society, of Anoka, Minn., praying for the establishment of a national forest reserve in the White Mountains of New Hampshire; which was referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

Mr. CUMBER. I present a memorial of the legislative and executive committee of the National Association of State Dairy and Food Departments, and from the representatives of the manufacturers and distributers of food products in the United States, relative to the passage of a pure-food bill. The memorial is short, it will take less than a column, and I move that the body of the memorial be printed in the RECORD and that it be referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Manufactures, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialists, J. W. Bailey, A. H. Jones, J. B. Noble, R. M. Allen, representing the National Association of State Dairy and Food Departments of the United States, and Edward W. Barrett, Clemens Lemcke, Jesse M. Brown, T. B. Wagner, and A. Mueller, representing the manufacturers and distributers of food products in the United States, respectfully asserts that these associations have legislation approved at a conference held in the city of Washington November 16, 1904, and that they firmly believe from years the best public sentiment of the country in favoring the passage of the earliest possible date of Senate bill No. 88, entitled "A bill for preventing the adulteration, misbranding, and imitation of foods, beverages, and drugs and confectionery in the District of Columbia and the Territories and for regulating interstate traffic therein, and for other purposes," amended, as follows:

That all of the section on page 6, line 9, be stricken out after the word "sell" as being unnecessary phraseology, so that the section will read as follows: "If it be labeled or branded with intent so as to deceive or mislead the purchaser, or purport to be a foreign product when not so."

Your memorialists would respectfully represent that the majority of the State food authorities of the United States deem interstate commerce business, and that Congress is vested by the Constitution of the United States with the sole authority to control all matters relating to interstate commerce; and they believe that the proposed national law is founded by the most urgent necessity and is sanctioned by that right which the States have conceded to the National Government to provide for the regulation of such affairs among the States and citizens as have grown beyond State control and which from their character and magnitude matters affecting the rights not only of citizens in states where they arise, but the rights of the citizens of other states as well.

We need this law to effectively control the sale of food adulterations to stop the adulteration and misbranding of food products at the fount of supply, before the adulterated or misbranded articles of food become scattered into thousands of pieces, hundreds of miles away from the point where the article was adulterated or misbranded.

We need the law to harmonize the discordant provisions of our State laws and, like a capsheaf, perfect American food legislation.

We need this law to encourage and protect honest business and to guarantee honest markets for honest products.

We need this law to encourage and protect the purity and quality of the food products of American fruit gardens and farms.

We need this law to protect the health, the purses, and the tastes of the consumers in all purchases of food products, and we deem it of the greatest importance to this nation that we safeguard the purity and quality of the foods which we bring into our homes.

We believe that its operations, and its operations only, can eliminate adulterations before the food product is set afloat into the intricacies of interstate commerce.

We believe that the passage of this law will jeopardize no State right; it will only control the sale of food products where they are shipped in interstate commerce, and we believe that this law will not be enforced where manufacturers and distributers are engaged in interstate commerce and where the result of analysis and examinations give the most certain and scientific evidence that its provisions have been violated.

The National Association of State Dairy and Food Departments has long labored to bring about such legislation by Congress as would govern and regulate the interstate traffic of foodstuffs and thereby enable the workings of the pure-food commissioners of the various States of the Union to be conducted upon uniform lines.

The manufacturers and distributers of food products in the United States are also urging the enactment by Congress of some national law which will give them uniform regulations, uniform policies, and uniform labels for all the goods which they send out from their factories into the different States.

We believe that the bill which we now recommend embraces all the essential points desired by all interested parties in securing the proposed legislation, while nonessential details are omitted, and it is a bill upon which all friends of pure food legislation can agree and for which they can work.

We further urge upon your attention that the measure the enactment of which is sought is desirable from the standpoint of public health, vitality, and from the point of view of our national honor and public morality; that pure food tends toward and contributes to the health and thereby to the happiness of the nation; that laws insuring it affects beneficially great industries and millions of wage-earners, and that wise legislation framed and enforced for that purpose can not fail to have the most salutary and beneficial effect upon the entire people.

We therefore trust that in presenting this petition we shall have given to your honorable body urgent and satisfactory reasons for the passage of this bill.

Witness our hands this 16th day of November, 1903.

On behalf of the food commissioners.

Mr. McCUMBER presented a petition of the congregation of the First Congregational Church of Fargo, N. Dak., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SIMMONS presented petitions of sundry citizens of Winston and Winston-Salem, and of the congregations of the Baptist, Presbyterian, and Methodist Episcopal churches of Winston, all in the State of North Carolina, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CULLOM presented petitions of sundry citizens of Freeburg, Dakota, and Deer Creek, in the State of Illinois, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of Colonel Albert D. Shaw Circle, No. 10, Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Chicago, Ill., praying for the enactment of a service-pension law; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PENROSE presented petitions of sundry citizens of Reading and Meadville, of the Friends First Day School of Moorestown; of the Sunday School Convention of Laceyville, and of the Wyoming Sunday School Association, of Skinners Eddy, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GORMAN presented petitions of sundry citizens of Baltimore, Catonsville, New Windsor, and Westminster, of the Epworth League of Arlington, and of the congregation of the Emory Methodist Episcopal Church, of Baltimore, all in the State of Maryland, praying for an investigation of the charges made and filed against Hon. REED SMOOT, a Senator from the State of Utah; which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Jefferson, Cherry Hill, Buckeystown, and Rising Sun; of the congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Buckeystown; of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Buckeystown; of the congregation of the Methodist Protestant Church of Buckeystown; of the congregation of the German Reformed Church of Buckeystown, and of Damascus Lodge, No. 199, Independent Order of Good Templars, of Damascus, all in the State of Maryland, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ASSESSMENTS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER. I present some tables prepared by the assessor of the District under the direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, showing the property exempt from taxation in this District. I move that the tables be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PROCTOR. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10670) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments, and I submit a report thereon. I give notice that I shall ask the Senate to take up the bill for consideration at the earliest moment possible—I hope to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. CLAPP, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3431) to amend the act of February 8, 1897, entitled "An act to prevent the carrying of obscene literature and articles designed for indecent and immoral use from one State or Territory into another State or Territory," so as to prevent the importation and exportation of the same, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SIMMONS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2362) for the relief of the heirs of Melvin B. Smith, asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the same and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. QUARLES, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4405) to correct the military record of Carl W. Albrecht, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1284) to restore to the active list of the Navy the name of Talleyrand Desaix Myers, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GORMAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 18th ultimo, proposing to appropriate $10,000 for continuing the grading of Pennsylvania avenue east from Branch avenue to the District line, reported it without amendment, submitted a report thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. KEAN. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred Senate resolution No. 112, submitted by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] on the 28th ultimo, to report a substitute therefor, and I ask for its present consideration. Let the substitute be read.

The Secretary read the substitute, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be, and the same is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer from time to time, as may be necessary, to report the hearings which may be had by the committee or its subcommittees on the bills pending before said committee; to sit during the sessions of the Senate; to have its hearings printed, and that any expense incurred shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution just read?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the original resolution, Senate resolution 112, be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,000 to pay C. H. Kitson, or his legal representatives, for money advanced to the Menominee tribe of Indians, of Wisconsin, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DOLLIVER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $9,713 to purchase two lots adjoining the Magruder school building on the east, to provide a playground for the children of the Magruder and Sumner schools, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

BERTHA BIERWORTH SCHIER.

On motion of Mr. PENROSE, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in the case of Bertha Bierworth Schier, accompanying S. 2259, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session; copies of the same to remain on the files as provided by clause 2 of Rule XXX.

REPORT ON SHIPPING BILLS.

Mr. CARMACK submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to transmit to the Senate a report of the recent hearings had before him with respect to S. 2259 and S. 2288.

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE EMPLOYEES.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2665) to provide for the allowance and payment to the employees of the Government Printing Office of the same leave of absence as is allowed to the clerks and employees of the Executive Departments of the Government. The bill was placed on the Calendar when reported, and I present a letter from the Public Printer which meets the case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was reported from the Committee on Printing with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert. The substitute will be read.

The Secretary read the proposed substitute, as follows:

That from and after the date of the passage of this act the thirty days' annual leave of absence with pay in any one year to employees of the Government Printing Office, authorized by the existing law, shall be exclusive of Sundays and legal holidays: Provided, That the existing laws relating to the granting of annual leave with pay to clerks and employees in the Executive Departments shall apply to clerks and employees of the Government Printing Office who are paid annual or monthly salaries or compensation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HALE. How does the bill come before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the request of the Senator from New York.

Mr. PLATT of New York. It was put over for certain information, which I have obtained.

Mr. HALE. If it does not give rise to any debate, I will not object.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Printing, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Did the Senator from New York send up a letter which he desires to have printed in the RECORD?

Mr. PLATT of New York. Yes: a letter from the Public Printer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be printed in the RECORD, if there be no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE,
OFFICE OF THE PUBLIC PRINTER,
Washington, D. C., February 25, 1904.

Hon. T. C. PLATT,
Chairman Committee on Printing, United States Senate.

SIR: Replying to your letter of the 18th instant, wherein you ask from me a full statement of the situation in respect to the amendment to Senate bill [illegible]

First. [illegible] suggested by me extends the annual [illegible] year. The word- [illegible] of the legislation [illegible] the end which this bill seeks to [illegible] Department. [illegible] simplifying [illegible] Department. There are [illegible] Respectfully,

F. W. PALMER, Public Printer.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROPOSED ALASKAN LEGISLATION.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator from Maine yield to me?

Mr. HALE. Yes. I shall ask that the appropriation bill be proceeded with. In the meantime the Senator from Indiana has some suggestion to make about the order of business. I yield for that purpose to him.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I desire to ask unanimous consent that on next Wednesday, after the conclusion of the morning business, the Senate shall take up proposed Alaskan legislation and consider it.

Mr. HALE. Subject to appropriation bills.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Well, with reference to the Alaskan bills, I put the date on Wednesday next, thinking that the Senator's naval appropriation bill, which is now up, will be disposed of, and that the army appropriation bill will be up to-morrow, and that on the day named none of those bills will be up. These Alaskan bills will all together occupy perhaps no more than two hours. They really must be disposed of. They are on concerns of immediate importance. I deferred the time of the request for the unanimous consent until Wednesday because I had taken into consideration the appropriation bills. I hope the Senator will not insist on that exception.

Mr. HALE. That is invariably done. The rules also provide for it. I have never known any instance to the contrary. If the situation is as the Senator describes, he will get the benefit of it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very good.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to the Senator's request, modified in that way.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not desire to object to the Senator's request; I am anxious that the Alaskan bills shall be passed; but I do not wish to have the unfinished business displaced. I understand there is to be very little more debate on it, and I hope it will be disposed of and out of the way before that time; but I do not wish to agree to a continuing order. If the request is to take up the Alaskan bills on Wednesday——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. After the morning business.

Mr. LODGE. And if at 2 o'clock they are not disposed of, that the unfinished business shall be temporarily laid aside, I have no objection, but I do not wish to displace that bill with a continuing order.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, in placing next Wednesday as the date of the unanimous consent I took into consideration also the Senator's bill, which is now the unfinished business, assuming, of course, that by that time it would be disposed of.

Mr. LODGE. Of course I hope it will be disposed of, but I can not make that assumption. I am not objecting to the Senator having the day.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. All right.

Mr. LODGE. I merely wish to provide that the unfinished business, if the Philippine shipping bill is still the unfinished business, shall not be displaced by the agreement.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is satisfactory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no need of that if the unanimous consent is granted simply that the Alaskan bills shall be taken up for consideration after the routine business, because at 2 o'clock the unfinished business will be laid before the Senate, and then the arrangement can be made in regard to it.

Mr. LODGE. Very well.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to include in the unanimous-consent agreement, then, some words which will give us that day.

Mr. LODGE. I will agree that the unfinished business of which I have charge shall be temporarily laid aside at 2 o'clock, so that the Senator may have the whole day.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That and any other measure which on that day may be pending.

Mr. LODGE. Of course I can only make an agreement in regard to the bill I have in charge.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then I shall ask that the unanimous-consent agreement shall include the Senator's bill or any other bill which at that time may be unfinished business, save and except only appropriation bills, which at 2 o'clock shall be temporarily laid aside, so that the entire day of next Wednesday, after the morning business, may be devoted to Alaskan legislation. I think the day will be amply sufficient.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the Alaskan bills——

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President. I have no special objection to the consideration of the Alaskan bill——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. There are two or three of them.

Mr. GORMAN. There are two or more bills. I suggest to Senators on the other side, who have power always to consider any bill by motion in the Senate, that the custom has been growing almost daily of fixing, by unanimous consent, the consideration of a bill a week hence and interfering with the general run of the business of the Senate. I do not apply it particularly to the Senator from Indiana, but it is growing to be an abuse, and for the moment I shall object.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If the Senator will permit me, I think I can explain this request as to that day satisfactorily to him.

Mr. GORMAN. Very well, if there is any special reason.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; I think I can explain it to the Senator's satisfaction.

There was a unanimous-consent agreement that the Alaskan legislation should be considered on last Thursday, not to interfere with appropriation bills; but on Thursday the Senator from Maine moved to take up the naval appropriation bill. I should then have asked unanimous consent that the Alaskan legislation be considered next, when the appropriation bill was out of the way, but the bill which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has in charge is the unfinished business. So that stood in the way.

Therefore, considering the condition of the appropriation bills pending and now reported, and when they would probably be considered, and the bill which is now the unfinished business, I fixed the nearest possible date I could within the limits of fair probability. That is the reason why I selected that day.

The reason why I ask unanimous consent for this legislation at all is that they are bills which undoubtedly will not be objected to. They are things which concern practical matters there, such as municipal corporations, schools, and the building of roads. I hope this explanation is satisfactory to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. GORMAN. I object to the general rule we have fallen into of fixing by unanimous consent a time in the future for the consideration of bills. I have no objection so far as I know to the bills referred to by the Senator, and I have no doubt if it is necessary to have them considered after we finish the naval appropriation bill to-day they can be taken up to-day by motion.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No, if the Senator will permit me, the Senator from Massachusetts has up as the unfinished business a bill concerning shipping between this country and the Philippine Islands. I took that into consideration. That is the unfinished business, and therefore we can not take up the bills to-day.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I object to the request of the Senator from Indiana.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland objects.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 12833) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the naval appropriation bill be laid before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12220) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 60, line 9, after the word "bandmaster," strike out "at one thousand two hundred" and insert in lieu thereof "who shall have the rank and pay of an ensign of the Navy, at one thousand four hundred."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. There are three amendments simply correcting totals. I move, on page 60, line 18, after the word "all," to change the total to read as follows: "$95,522.52."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 62, lines 22 and 23, I move to change the total to read "$328,308.46."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 66, lines 7 and 8, I move to change the total to read "$2,127,676.78."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 27 I move to strike out all after the word "dollars," in line 19, and insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to continue and complete his examinations concerning the fresh water supply at the Portsmouth Navy-Yard, directed by the act of July 1, 1902, $9,000, or so much thereof as may be needed; in all, $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I move to change the total on page 37, lines 16, 17, and 18, to read as follows: "$7,859,071."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I move to amend, on page 27, line 15, by inserting, after the word "dollars," the words "quay walls, to continue, $50,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 27 I move to amend the amendment just adopted concerning the fresh water supply at Portsmouth Navy-Yard by striking out the total "$150,000" and inserting "$200,000." This is made necessary by the amendment just agreed to, inserting "quay walls."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 37, in the total for "public works," I move to amend by making it read "$7,909,071," this being necessary by reason of the appropriation of $50,000 just agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There were two amendments passed over yesterday. On page 38 an amendment was passed over.

Mr. HALE. Let that amendment be read. I think there was an amendment offered to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES] offered an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HALE. Let the clause in the bill be read and then the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin. That will show exactly what is before the Senate.

The SECRETARY. On page 38, after line 22, the committee amendment is to insert the following:

Naval training station, Great Lakes: The purchase of land and the establishment of a naval training station on the shore of Lake Michigan, south of latitude 42° 30', $300,000.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES] proposes to amend the amendment by adding:

The President is hereby authorized and empowered to appoint a board consisting of not less than three members, none of whom shall be a resident of any State adjoining Lake Michigan whose duty it shall be to select the most available site for such naval training school on the Great Lakes, and having selected such site, to ascertain and report its probable cost and the probable expense [illegible] will be necessary for improving the same, including [illegible] of necessary harbor facilities; also to make a detailed report of their findings and proceedings to the President to be transmitted [illegible] Congress for its final action. And the sum of [illegible] is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Maine who has the bill in charge. It is very difficult just by the reading of amendments and amendments to amendments to get at the real point which is involved in either. I wish the Senator from Maine would state the purpose of the original amendment or the amendment proposed by the committee and how the amendment to the amendment changes that purpose, so that we may understand the question.

Mr. HALE. The original action of Congress upon this subject-matter grew out of the necessity for providing more men for the Navy. It has been found to be impossible to get any considerable number of recruits for the Navy from the merchant marine. Out of something like 40,000 seamen in that marine very few ever go into the Navy.

The Navy has been much perplexed in times past, but has at last fallen upon the practical scheme of enlisting landsmen and training them upon land and sea for the naval service, and when they are enlisted under present conditions upon naval ships they soon become good sailors. Of course the sailor of to-day does not have to do what he did in the day of wooden frigates and ships of the line and masted ships.

Upon that basis in the last Congress, possibly in the one before, Congress provided that a naval training station to cover such wants as I have indicated should be located somewhere upon the Great Lakes, and a commission was appointed, consisting of naval officers, who inspected different sites and made a report, not selecting the particular site, one reason being that if a particular site was selected before it was purchased the price would inevitably go up, as is always the case when owners of land have the Government on the hip and can make their own terms.

The commission reported several sites on Lake Michigan, and provided that the training station, wherever selected, should be below a certain parallel of latitude. They did not select any one site, but reported in order several sites, and the appropriation which the committee has put upon the bill is to give them money to carry it out. If the appropriation passes, the Department then will select undoubtedly one of the sites which has been named by the board.

The conflict which has arisen comes from local feeling with reference to the sites, each locality believing, and naturally, that its own site is the best.

The operation of the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin would be that a new commission, entirely impartial and with no local bias, constituted of persons not living in the regions or States where the sites are situated, shall finally determine the matter.

That, I think I may say, is a brief statement of the condition.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. A naval training station is what we understand by the term "training school."

Mr. HALE. We have one now in the waters of Narragansett Bay and another in California waters.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It is a training school?

Mr. HALE. It is a training school, and they call it a naval training station.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Where boys are entered and enlisted and taught?

Mr. HALE. It is not like the old naval apprentice school, but it is the enlisting of landsmen from large cities almost entirely.

Mr. GALLINGER. Or farms.

Mr. HALE. Wherever it may be, but they come largely from large cities.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It is not apprentices?

Mr. HALE. No, it is not; it has not anything at all to do with that. They are taken on, they are given instruction, practice upon the water and drill upon the land, and so far as their minds and bodies are concerned they are made accustomed to the duties that arise upon war ships. Then they are taken and regularly enlisted into the Navy for the time of service all seamen and landsmen are required to serve there. This is an additional training station.

Mr. GALLINGER. In this connection I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question for information. I notice that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES] provides that this commission shall be composed of officers who are not residents of the immediate vicinity. I would ask the Senator if the old commission was composed of officials who could be criticised in that respect? I know nothing about it. Does the Senator know?

Mr. HALE. I think Rear-Admiral Taylor was chairman of that commission. I do not remember who were the other members of the commission.

Mr. HOPKINS. I can state to my colleague that the members of the board were Rear-Admiral Henry C. Taylor——

Mr. HALE. Chief of the Bureau of Navigation.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir; and the other two members were Chief Engineer Rousseau and Lieutenant-Commander Winslow, men of the highest character.

Mr. HALE. They constituted the naval board.

Mr. HOPKINS. They constituted the naval board to select the site for the naval station.

I desire also, Mr. President, to say, in answer to the question suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES] is not, in terms, to select a board of naval officers. They may be politicians, or they may be landsmen, or they may be members of the Army or of the Navy.

Mr. SPOONER. I suggest to the Senator that it would seem to be proper that the mover of the amendment should be permitted to say something about it.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that I am not at all attempting to limit the Senator. He can have all the afternoon, if he wants it. I am simply stating what the language of the amendment purports.

Mr. GALLINGER. I asked my question in entire good faith for information. I certainly did not then exactly understand the matter, but I do now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES].

Mr. ALGER. May we have the amendment again read, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read.

The Secretary again read the amendment of Mr. QUARLES.

Mr. ALGER. I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment. There are other lakes besides Lake Michigan. There are Lake Erie and Lake Huron, the people along whose shores will be competitors for this naval training school. I should like to add after the words "Lake Michigan" the words "Lake Huron and Lake Erie."

Mr. NELSON. And "Lake Superior," Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. ALGER] would not be in order now, as it is an amendment to an amendment, in the third degree. The Chair would state that the amendment would be in order if the pending amendment were agreed to.

Mr. HOPKINS. I suppose, from a parliamentary standpoint, if this amendment should be voted down, then other amendments would be in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Undoubtedly.

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President, I suppose before we talk about voting on anything [illegible] an amendment of having three members [illegible] after the determination of the main question, Senators shall desire to enlarge the scope of selection, I shall not object to it, because I am entirely willing that the Wisconsin site shall be subjected to any competition that may be brought, and I have no desire whatever now to narrow the investigation.

The reason why the amendment was offered in its present shape is that the committee [illegible] upon the basis of the tentative finding of this board. This board said that the proper place for this naval training school was near the south end of Lake Michigan, below latitude 43° 30', running south north of [illegible].

So this amendment proceeds upon that basis. Without assuming to change that, I merely added the amendment, in which I am interested and my State is interested, to have a new board appointed by the President for the purpose of getting a fair and impartial selection of a site on the Lakes, which, I think, I can [illegible].

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. QUARLES. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Did the old board select any particular site?

Mr. QUARLES. No; I will come to that in a moment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. QUARLES. I wish to say, Mr. President, at the outset that I am wholly in sympathy with the proposition contained in the committee amendment. I believe it is wise that these young men should receive some preliminary training before they are put upon battle ships in actual sea service. I have no purpose of contravening that proposition; but I appeal to the Senate that we ought to have in all fairness—speaking now in the interests of the State which I have the honor in part to represent upon this floor—another board, with such a determination as Congress has expressed its wish to have, and as the existing board has not been pleased to give us.

I would remind the Senate that the first legislative step looking to the creation of this naval training school was in June, 1902. Let me just read that and see what this board was required to do by the mandate of Congress. I read from House Document No. 6, Fifty-eighth Congress, first session, which is devoted to this subject:

Naval training station, Great Lakes: The Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to appoint a board composed of naval officers, whose duty it shall be to select on the Great Lakes a suitable site for an additional naval training station, and having selected such site, if upon private lands—to estimate its value and ascertain, as nearly as practicable, the cost for which it can be purchased or acquired, and of their proceedings and actions to make full and detailed report to the Secretary, who shall transmit such report, with his recommendations thereon, to Congress for its action; and to defray the expenses of said board the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Note the language. Here is the mandate of Congress—

The Senator will notice that Congress directed this board to do two things: First, to select a site and make a final determination of that question, and, secondly, to report to Congress the price at which this property can be purchased. Mr. President, the existing board has done neither of those two things. My first proposition is that we ask for a new board now to determine those questions which the first board was commanded to decide and which, for reasons which I will later explain, it has failed and neglected to do.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. QUARLES. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin whether his amendment is intended to accomplish what was accomplished by the original action of Congress?

Mr. QUARLES. Precisely.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. And nothing more?

Mr. QUARLES. That, and nothing more. If this board had made a report following the language of the act of Congress, and had reported to Congress the information which Congress desired in order to enable it intelligently to review the action of that board, I should not have been here with this amendment.

Mr. President, I need hardly say that in determining whether a given piece of land should be purchased, whether the proposition is made to an individual, a corporation, or to Congress, the price is one of the most important factors in the problem, and ought to be in the possession of Congress before it is asked to pass upon the question of purchase. That is self-evident.

Mr. President, this board made a report in the first instance, the report being embodied in Senate Document No. 45, Fifty-seventh Congress, second session, which is available to any Senator here. They made a tentative—a preliminary—report on December 13, 1902.

I can state the substance of it without reading it. In substance, instead of deciding upon any site, they indicate a zone within which the site should be selected, and that zone is a line drawn at 43° 30', which is slightly north of the city of Milwaukee, right across Lake Michigan, and the zone which is approved by that board is south of that line, taking in both shores of Lake Michigan. Mr. Secretary Moody sent that tentative report here.

28. The board has therefore the honor to submit with this report its recommendation that the site of the naval training station on the Great Lakes be fixed on the shores of Lake Michigan below latitude 43° 30', and to further recommend that an appropriation of $250,000 be made by Congress for the purchase of land and the development of the station, the exact locality to be determined by the board of naval officers provided by the act of July 1, 1902, and, furthermore, that the Secretary of the Navy be authorized to consummate the purchase of the site selected by the said board as soon as practicable after the appropriation becomes available.

This board, in substance, says to Congress, "We have not selected any site, but we advise that you appropriate the money to purchase this site;" and the Secretary of the Navy says that as soon as this board shall conclude to recommend a specific site he will then forward that report to Congress.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator yield to me for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. QUARLES. Yes, sir.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator tell me why the board limited the northern limits of this zone to 43° 30'?

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President, the board discuss the whole subject in this Senate Document No. 45. They discuss it in a highly scientific way and arrive at that conclusion, because the center of population, the facilities for transportation, and other elements that they mention concur in favor of a site in that particular region.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. QUARLES. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. Is it not a fact that another reason was on account of our treaty relations with England affecting all the other lakes excepting Lake Michigan, which is an inland lake, both shores of which are controlled by the American Government?

Mr. QUARLES. That was one of the propositions that was considered by the board.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Is it not true that in a subsequent report, in Document No. 45, the board made its first choice at Lake Bluff, 32 miles north of Chicago?

Mr. QUARLES. I am coming to that in just a moment.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. QUARLES. In November, 1903, something like eighteen months after this board was appointed, they made another report, which is found in House Document No. 6, Fifty-eighth Congress, first session, and I wish to call attention briefly to that report. I shall take up some of the items of the report later on; but on page 10 of that document the board tabulate the results of their investigations, and report as follows:

The combined summary of the above comparison as regards the four qualifications is as follows:

	First choice, Lake Bluff.
Lake Bluff is situated 32 miles north of Chicago and about 4½ miles south of the city of Waukegan.
The second choice is Racine, which is in Wisconsin, 20 miles south of Milwaukee and about 57 miles north of Chicago.
The third choice is Muskegon, Mich.; the fourth choice is Milwaukee, Wis., and the fifth choice is Michigan City.

I want to call attention to what the board say in regard to the matter of cost, which they were commanded by this act of Congress to report. On page 10 they say:

The board has not yet carried on negotiation with the owners of the above tracts to definitely state the price which it would have to pay, nor has it obtained any options. One important matter to be determined on regarding the sites between Chicago and Milwaukee would be whether the Sheridan driveway would of necessity pass through the Government reservation.

So, Mr. President, the Senate will observe that the board, instead of selecting a site, have selected five sites, indicating their preference in the order named, but not definitely selecting any site.

Mr. BURROWS. May I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. QUARLES. Certainly.

Mr. BURROWS. May I call the attention of the Senator to page 9 of this report, where the board states that—

With regard to the cost of land the following average prices were named by the board for property in the five localities that are under consideration:

	Per acre.
Milwaukee	$700
Racine	250
Lake Bluff	900

Which stands first in the opinion of the board.

Michigan City	125
Muskegon	100

Mr. QUARLES. I am thankful to the Senator for the interruption, because I should have called that to the attention of the Senate at this point.

With regard to the cost of land, they say the "following average prices were named." They expressly say that they have taken no step to open up any negotiations with these owners to ascertain what the actual price is, but they are proceeding upon rumor. Evidently somebody has told them that the prices in those several localities will average about what has been read by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS]. The Senate will notice right there that the Racine site is put in at $250 an acre, while the Lake Bluff site is put in at $900 an acre.

To show that this was not intended to be a final but a purely tentative report I call attention to the first page of document No. 6, where Mr. Secretary Moody, in transmitting this report, says:

I have the honor now to transmit a copy of the final report of the board, in which Lake Bluff, which is 32 miles north of Chicago, is recommended as the most suitable site for a naval training station.

Now, note this:

In view of the large price at which land at that point is held by the owners, the board suggests four other sites as suitable, which, in the order of their desirability, are as follows: Racine, Muskegon, Milwaukee, and Michigan City.

Now, Mr. President, who is going to make the selection of this site? It has not been selected yet, because the factor of price has not been considered. This report is entirely limited to the question of desirability, the element of price being left out of view.

Congress has said to this board: "You shall determine that question: you shall consider the matter of cost, and report to us finally which selection you make." Instead of that the board has reported five sites, giving what they understand to be the approximate value of the land and leaving the question of selection entirely open.

You will notice that they leave another question open. They say that somebody ought to determine whether the Sheridan drive is to pass near this property. Who is to decide that question?

They say that Congress ought to appropriate $250,000 for these 200 acres, but the matter is entirely left open. Somebody must make a final decision, and, therefore, it is, Mr. President, that we are asking that an impartial board may be named by the President of the United States, none of whose members live adjacent to this territory, who shall go there, and do what Congress asked the other board to do, and what, for some reason or other, they have been reluctant to do.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. QUARLES. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I do not know anything about the membership of the board. Of whom was it composed?

Mr. QUARLES. Admiral Taylor, and a Mr. Rousseau, who is a naval officer, were first appointed, and at a later period there brought in Mr. Wheeler, so that the board finally consisted of three naval officers, Admiral Taylor being meanwhile at the head.

Mr. LODGE. Do I understand the Senator to say that the members of the board were not impartial?

Mr. QUARLES. Not at all.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator said he wanted a board that had no prejudice, which might imply that the other board had some prejudice in the matter.

Mr. QUARLES. I do not understand that they had. I am simply guarding against any possible chance of prejudice in a new board.

Mr. LODGE. Were these officers less impartial than other officers?

Mr. SPOONER. What is the question?

Mr. LODGE. I asked why these officers were less impartial than other officers?

Mr. SPOONER. We have heard that they have not been impartial.

Mr. LODGE. I do not know anything about that. I simply asked the Senator why they should be less impartial?

Mr. CULLOM. I am not able to see wherein they have been at all partial, except they have indicated, as their judgments led them to do, what they thought was the best site in the interests of the country.

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President, I am treating of this as a business proposition now. This is business, pure and simple. There is no sentiment in it. When that board was incorporated to select and report a site, that was their business, and when Congress required them to report the cost of that site, it was their business to make that report, and this board has done neither thing. I am not now dealing with the motives that actuated this board.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. QUARLES. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. I respectfully insist that they have reported both as to the site and as to the value. If that site and the price charged there is not acceptable to Congress, they have stipulated that there are other sites, which, while they do not stand in the estimation of this board as favorably as the site they have designated, would be sites that could be used, and the board have also given the prices for them. They have gone beyond, in other words, what they were required to do, but they have filled to the letter the requirements of the act of Congress.

Mr. QUARLES. I should like to ask my distinguished friend from Illinois who is now to determine which site shall be taken?

Mr. HOPKINS. The Secretary of the Navy has said in his report here:

> I have the honor now to transmit a copy of the final report of the board, in which Lake Bluff, which is 27 miles north of Chicago, is recommended as the most desirable site for a naval training station.

The Secretary of the Navy, who appointed this board, had no trouble in determining that the report was clear and definite.

Mr. QUARLES. Will the Senator read the next sentence?

Mr. HOPKINS. I will read the whole report if the Senator desires.

Mr. QUARLES. I have no such desire.

Mr. HOPKINS. The next sentence is:

> In view of the large price at which land at that point is held by the owners, the board suggests four other sites as suitable, which, in the order of their desirability, are as follows: Racine, Muskegon, Milwaukee, and Michigan City.

Just as I have stated, they have selected their site and have reported the price; but if that site and the price charged by the owners of that property are not acceptable to Congress, then, as I say, they have gone beyond what they were required to do in the report and have designated other sites and the prices charged for the land there.

Mr. QUARLES. Yes; they have gone far beyond what they were instructed by Congress to do, for, if I appreciate the purpose of Congress in passing the original act, it was to prevent a Congressional fight, a squabble over this question. It was to select a board that should consider not only availability, but cost, and make a final determination, but as it is now, under this comparative finding, it is thrown again into Congress, like an apple of discord.

Mr. HOPKINS. Not in the estimation of the Secretary of the Navy. The Secretary of the Navy, who appointed this board, has stated clearly and distinctly that Lake Bluff, 27 miles north of Chicago, located in the State of Illinois, is the site most suitable for the naval training station.

The Senator will note that in the original authority the board were not authorized to purchase. They were simply to report to the Secretary of the Navy, who said they have done here, and there is no chance for Congress, unless it is forced by the Senator from Wisconsin, unless it is forced by members from other States than that wherein is the place designated by the board and indicated by the Secretary of the Navy as the proper place.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator permit me——

Mr. QUARLES. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I simply rose to call attention to the fact that according to the original provision under which the board of naval officers acted the result of the action which they were directed to take was to be reported to Congress for its action. I understand that at the time we enacted that provision it was assumed that Congress would have a supervisory power over what they might do. It was their business to ascertain and [illegible] and give us the benefit of their judgment, and then [illegible] on it. It does not change [illegible] at all.

Mr. HOPKINS. I think the Senator [illegible] They have followed their instructions, and the Secretary of the Navy has reported to Congress as was intended by the original resolution.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. QUARLES. Certainly.

Mr. BURROWS. It is only for a moment, as to the question of this board to select a site. They have complied with the instructions and mentioned several points which would be available, but I think the report shows that they have not selected a site.

Mr. QUARLES. I will come to that in a moment.

Mr. BURROWS. Just a word. In Document No. 6, on page 2, paragraph 3, they say:

> The selection of a site in this general area remains to be accomplished.

And in the other report——

Mr. HOPKINS. From what page is the Senator reading?

Mr. BURROWS. Page 3 of Document No. 6; and in Document No. 45, they say——

Mr. QUARLES. What page?

Mr. BURROWS. Page 1, at the bottom of the page.

> The board deemed that its duty required it, first, to determine the general area within which it is desirable to establish a naval training station [illegible] the most favorable, and, having done that, second, to select the best site [illegible] the first question, and not has under consideration the second question.

To wit, the selection of a site.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator will be kind enough to yield to me, as I am compelled to go to a conference, I wish to make a suggestion in relation to this place in the bill.

Mr. QUARLES. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. It says:

> The purchase of land and the establishment of a naval training station on the shore of Lake Michigan, south of latitude 42° 30', $250,000.

Nothing is said about any site. That is the point to which I wish to call attention.

Mr. QUARLES. That is right.

Mr. CULLOM. But it would be considered as leaving the matter to the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy as to which of those sites named on Lake Michigan should be accepted by him.

Mr. QUARLES. In other words——

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator will allow me one word further——

Mr. QUARLES. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. So there seems to be no great materiality in the discussion of this question now as between points south of 42° 30'.

Mr. LODGE. I suppose I might to know from the statement of the Senator, but I do not. Does it cut out any of the sites named?

Mr. QUARLES. It shuts out a large number of sites.

Mr. LODGE. I mean any of the five named here.

Mr. QUARLES. In the report? No.

Mr. LODGE. Racine, Muskegon, Milwaukee, Michigan City, and Lake Bluff are all within the amendment?

Mr. QUARLES. Yes, sir; they are all within the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. So the amendment does not locate it at any one of the places?

Mr. QUARLES. That is right.

Mr. LODGE. But leaves it to the Secretary to determine where it shall be?

Mr. QUARLES. It leaves it to the board.

Mr. LODGE. Does it leave it to the board?

Mr. QUARLES. As it stands now, the selection as between these sites would probably be made by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. QUARLES. I do not see any other way. There is no provision in that determines it.

Mr. LODGE. Is the most proper person to determine it?

Mr. QUARLES. That is another question. Congress has left it to a board. The wisdom of Congress in so doing is not for me to discuss. But instead of that——

Mr. QUARLES. I understand that the purpose of this amendment is to create a new board which will take in all the lakes.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the junior Senator from Illinois?

Mr. QUARLES. Yes; I yield to all.

Mr. HOPKINS. I was about to suggest to my colleague, with the acquiescence of the Senator from Wisconsin, that the amendment [illegible] was reported and as was proposed in the original [illegible] it to Lake Michigan, and then proposes to [illegible] has been done by this board and to appoint a [illegible] of the Navy, but by the President [illegible] investigation shall be limited to Lake Michigan.

Mr. QUARLES. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. QUARLES. With great pleasure.

Mr. HOPKINS. I want to make a remark. I dislike very much [illegible] but, as I stated, I have to leave the Chamber, and I will take the liberty of making [illegible]

Mr. QUARLES. I yield with great pleasure.

Mr. HOPKINS. I [illegible] I was thinking of the amendment [illegible] that it was before the Senate. But I [illegible] the population of the Lake Bluff and the [illegible] and [illegible] well [illegible] mentioned in the report.

Mr. QUARLES. It does not determine at all which of those [illegible]

Mr. HOPKINS. [illegible] Congress and necessarily else [illegible]

Mr. QUARLES. [illegible] I will refer to [illegible]

Mr. HOPKINS. I have been trying to.

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President, if [illegible] was [illegible] in a law, that that final selection should be made by a board. It is left to a board that the Secretary of the Navy appoints to make the selection. Congress would have to delegate [illegible] Well, [illegible] I am, therefore, clearly of the opinion that Congress has itself marked out as a proper [illegible] the exercise of selection.

[illegible] Mr. President, I wish the Senate to keep in mind during the discussion some figures. The board say they want 200 acres of land. If they go to Lake Bluff, Ill., 200 acres of land will cost $180,000. If they go to Racine, 200 acres of land will cost $50,000. So by the selection of the Racine site there would be a saving on that basis of $130,000.

Now, Mr. President, I wish again to call the attention of the Senate to Document No. 6, on pages 2 and 3. There the board has framed the local conditions which they recognize as necessary to be observed in the selection of this site, and you will see that the sixteenth requirement, on page 3, is—

> The site should not be in a manufacturing district.

Now, I submit that there is no condition here that is more important than that. A manufacturing district is a bad environment for a school of any kind. I submit that the selection of the Lake Bluff site would be a violation of the sixteenth condition which this board itself prescribes to control its action.

I presume that the Senator may not be familiar with the situation, and therefore I will explain by saying that Lake Bluff is south some one and a half or two miles from North Chicago. This site lies between Lake Bluff and North Chicago, about a mile and a half from North Chicago. Now, Senators, North Chicago is purely a manufacturing district. There are great iron factories and factories of many kinds, and North Chicago is to Chicago what the outlying suburbs of Pittsburg are to it. As foreigners have been enabled out of the proceeds of their labor for one reason or another, they have gone to this place, which has taken the name of North Chicago.

Five years ago I had occasion to become pretty familiar with that situation because at the city of Waukegan I was called upon to try a lawsuit involving the question of title and value of land in North Chicago, and for two or three weeks we took the testimony of witnesses in which was developed the whole future and history of North Chicago as they knew it upon the values of land. So I am tolerably familiar with the situation there as it was five years ago; and I am familiar enough by casual inspection as we pass on the cars from time to time to have noted a wonderful increase in the manufacturing purposes of North Chicago during the last five years. It is joined with the process of that great city, and is dropped solidly to the rear of the manufactories. It is constantly coming out, and land down there where a few years ago was worth only from $75 to $100 an acre is worth to-day from fifteen hundred to two thousand dollars as core business of its adjacency to the great manufacturing establishments [illegible]

The manufacturing district is creeping down toward the south of Lake Bluff, and I believe that in less than five years it will certainly cover it and hold it in its greasy, smoky embrace and make it as unfortunate a position for a school as could well be imagined.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. QUARLES. With pleasure.

Mr. FORAKER. In view of the Senator's statement that he is familiar with Waukegan and that country, where it is proposed, in the proceedings of the board, to locate the station, I propose to ask him what he knows as to the [illegible]

Mr. QUARLES. I will come to that, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well.

Mr. QUARLES. I was [illegible] of a [illegible] that would be [illegible] by a board or by a [illegible] than to go down into that region, which will soon be [illegible] of a [illegible] and to take those [illegible] that I [illegible] that and necessarily [illegible] should not be [illegible] district; and while it is true that it is [illegible] the [illegible] with the great property of Chicago, which is [illegible] Another thing, Mr. President, [illegible] it is that the lake shore land there [illegible] worth $800 an acre for business [illegible] It is in front of the [illegible] with and proximity to that great [illegible]

I think what has [illegible] the price and let the board report as they [illegible] it would [illegible] to procure that property.

I am surprised if it can be [illegible] and I think if we [illegible] land at [illegible] the price had been raised, [illegible] something about the values of land in that neighborhood.

Now, as [illegible] this view I wish to read from page 4 of Document No. 6 what the board say on this subject. They fix on page 4 a limit which they say ought not to be exceeded in price in the purchase, and they are careful to fix it at a thousand dollars an acre, an intimation to those people who own the Lake Bluff site that if they see fit to put a hundred dollars an acre on the board have made their course easy. They fix a thousand dollars an acre, and then they say:

[illegible] of several sites that possess more or less [illegible] nation will be [illegible]

That is better stated than I could state it, and it fits the situation exactly.

Now, on page 6, the board point the Senator to Milwaukee [illegible] district—that is, [illegible] to South Milwaukee. But I wish to say to the Senator that [illegible] are very small [illegible] Milwaukee are of very small value [illegible] that are now [illegible] in the [illegible] ure.

Mr. President, I have here a letter which presents another [illegible] which I certainly did not consider, [illegible] that the Lake Bluff site will require like [illegible] tection. That may seem of great importance to some gentleman who is not familiar with the ravages of a great lake, but we have [illegible] upon one of these great lakes is in any doubt as to the importance of the suggestion. We have for many years in the region where I live been compelled to combat the forces of nature as they are arrayed in a great lake. We have seen those waves tear to pieces breakwaters that were [illegible] great heavy bolts of iron, and I may say that a suitable water protection along Lake Michigan will cost from twenty to twenty-five dollars per linear foot. So you may add to the expenditure necessary, if this site is selected, about a hundred thousand dollars for necessary lake shore protection.

I will take the liberty of reading from a letter addressed to me by a very intelligent gentleman, who recently made a personal inspection of the shore along Lake Bluff. He says:

At a very recent date the lake has been cutting into the bank in this vicinity and washing it away, [illegible] feet. [illegible] this spring have [illegible] in a lake storm [illegible] immediately north of the creek there has been [illegible] the width of from 60 to 80 feet, possibly [illegible] the fact is being washed away at the present time. [illegible] look of this creek I should judge was from [illegible] feet high. The [illegible] bank is not so [illegible] It a harbor were to be dredged here, having a mouth [illegible] feet in width, the lake would be from [illegible] feet above lake level where they would have to dredge about [illegible] a harbor.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the Senator state who is the author of that letter?

Mr. QUARLES. Yes: it is written by a gentleman in Racine, Mr. R. M. Boyd, a very trustworthy, reliable gentleman.

Mr. HOPKINS. Is he a civil engineer?

Mr. QUARLES. He is not a civil engineer, but he is a very intelligent gentleman.

Mr. HOPKINS. What is his business, please?

Mr. QUARLES. He is engaged now chiefly in real estate.

I wish to call attention to another proposition. You will notice, on page 8, that the tenth requirement which this board lays down is:

There should be a bathing beach.

Mr. FORAKER. I rise to ask the Senator whether he has passed now from the subject of a harbor?

Mr. QUARLES. No; I have not reached it.

Mr. FORAKER. The letter referred to the harbor.

Mr. QUARLES. I know it did.

I wish to call attention to another proposition, and that is the bathing beach. At the city of Waukegan, which is about 4 miles north of this site, there are located upon the shore some great factories, and among the others a sugar refinery and glucose factory, a very extensive one.

I may say for the information of the Senate that in Lake Michigan the current is from the north to the south and the prevailing heavy winds are from the northeast. This great glucose factory, in the preparation of its material, discharges into the lake a large amount of refuse matter, that is, waste matter from the corn they treat. In that preparation they use some acids, which also pass with the waste into the lake. I am informed that the refuse material is carried by the current and the wind down to Lake Bluff, and that at times the odor in that vicinity is only equaled by a tanyard or a sauerkraut factory.

Still south of the glucose factory there is the American Steel and Wire establishment, a mammoth establishment, that also uses in the preparation of its products some acid which contaminates and pollutes the water, and I am informed from credible sources that it renders the water at this place in Lake Michigan unfit for use and unfit for bathing.

I have here a letter written by a gentleman who investigated that question. He says:

Obtained a statement from the mayor of Lake Forest—

Lake Forest is still farther south than this site—

[illegible]

That is the mayor—

[illegible] the Government to utilize the site proposed from this [illegible] by the name of Miller, who is presi- [illegible] private [illegible]

Mr. HOPKINS. If the Senator will allow me, I should like to have him state who is the writer of that letter.

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. W. A. Walker, city attorney of Racine, a lawyer there in good standing, and a very estimable gentleman.

Mr. HOPKINS. [illegible] to the [illegible]

Mr. QUARLES. No, sir; I read the letter just as it was sent to me.

Mr. HOPKINS. The Senator does not know of what bank he [illegible]

Mr. QUARLES. I do not.

Mr. HOPKINS. Or his full name?

Mr. QUARLES. I do not.

Mr. HOPKINS. I simply asked the question to enable me to compare [illegible] with Mr. Walker, of Chicago. My information, I will state to the Senator, is entirely different from his, and that is the reason why I asked the question.

Mr. QUARLES. Now, there is another proposition. That is the eighth proposition that this board lays down.

[illegible] should not be required to secure level ground for drill [illegible]

Mr. President, before I pass from that point I wish to say that at the Racine site, which is the point last named as second best, there is absolutely no factory anywhere near it. It is a residential [illegible] There is a great peninsula of land making out into Lake Michigan a long distance, which, without any extensive cutting, could be converted into an island, nature having done the larger portion of it already. [illegible] the objections made to the site which I have [illegible]

I now want to pass to the point that there should be no necessity of grading. I have here some photographs of the Lake Bluff site [illegible], which I should be glad to have any Senator consider. If Senators have any doubt [illegible] here in this respect [handing photographs to Mr. FORAKER]. I am very glad to have you look at them, and I especially call attention to No. 4, as indicating the erosion of the bank by the lake.

Mr. FORAKER (examining). Where is the harbor?

Mr. QUARLES. There is not any harbor there. I called attention to that. If Senators will examine those photographs, they will see that all this land is cut up with ravines, some of them 25 to 50 feet deep, with steep banks, so that while for some purposes, as a park or for residential purposes, that would not be objectionable, for the purposes of a school I submit that it is in violation of the very condition that the board has presented.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. QUARLES. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. I should like to ask my honored friend from Wisconsin if these photographs were also taken by a Racine photographer?

Mr. QUARLES. I do not know. If they were, it would not impeach them. The sun paints for a Racine photographer quite as faithfully as for a Chicago artist.

Mr. HOPKINS. The Senator from Wisconsin is a good enough lawyer to know that a picture depends entirely upon the point of view at which it is taken, and that you can make a molehill seem like a mountain, or level a mountain almost to a plain from the point of view at which the photograph is taken.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Illinois present a photograph by a Chicago photographer?

Mr. HOPKINS. It is not necessary. I rely on the reports. I am not bringing any intrinsic evidence here or attempting to prejudice the minds of Senators by going outside of the reports which have been made by three honorable men, who are entirely disinterested, and are looking solely to the interests of the Government in the choice of special location.

Mr. QUARLES. Now, Mr. President, one word in regard to harbor facilities, in answer to the suggestion of my distinguished friend from Iowa [Mr. FORAKER]. In one of the ravines disclosed by those photographs there runs a little stream which is said, by information which I have to me, to be 2 inches deep and 3 feet wide, a little stream trickling down that ravine. The banks on either side are precipitous and high, and if you were to attempt to make a harbor there the Senator will see at a glance that it would require an enormous expense to excavate those great banks and let the water in from the lake. It would really be an entirely artificial harbor, calling for an enormous expense.

Now, in regard to the Racine site in that respect, as I said before——

Mr. FORAKER. Before the Senator passes, can he give us any estimate, or has he heard any intelligent estimate, as to the cost of a harbor such as would be necessary?

Mr. QUARLES. It would require a civil engineer to go there, of course, and ascertain the number of cubic yards of material that would have to be taken out.

Mr. FORAKER. I did not know but that some one had done that. I have been told within the last twenty-four hours that it would cost more than a million dollars to make a harbor that would answer the necessities of a naval training station such as it is proposed we shall have at Lake Bluff.

Mr. [illegible]. Mr. President, I think that statement has been made [illegible] source.

Mr. FORAKER. It was not made by an engineer, but by a gentleman who has more information than I on some points of [illegible] at least.

Mr. [illegible]. Some gentleman who wanted some other site.

Mr. FORAKER. A gentleman interested in another site, it is true, but I think he is a gentleman who would tell me the truth about the matter, and since I have looked at the photographs I am prepared to believe what he said. I do not think any Senator who looks at those photographs will come to a different conclusion.

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not want the Senator to be governed entirely by photographs, however, as I said to the Senator from Wisconsin, because, as I said to the Senator from Wisconsin, I understands how the natural topography can be distorted by a photograph.

Mr. [illegible] for itself.

[illegible] at Racine, as I had [illegible] Lake Michigan, which [illegible] from all of [illegible] the Senator [illegible] Lake Michigan. It is a place that [illegible] have been built [illegible] that great city [illegible] any storm that might come. It is the best [illegible] for anchorage that there is on the Great Lakes, [illegible] clay, but I say, and the facilities for making a harbor there for small boats are described by the board itself as being of a very high order.

South of this great promontory or peninsula that runs out into the lake there is a slough running back a thousand feet. It is hardly above the level of the lake. It is 150 feet wide where it enters into the lake, and all that would be required to make a harbor there would simply be to dredge out that alluvial soil. You have your cutting all done, and if it was desired to continue the cutting a little farther they could isolate that great peninsula entirely and make an island of it. In one part of the report this board speaks of the great desirability of isolation in the situation for this school.

Now, Mr. President, I fear I am taking too much time, but I wish to analyze this report. I submit this proposition to the Senate. A careful inspection of this report will determine exactly what the Senator from Connecticut said on the floor a few minutes ago. This board has not decided in favor of Lake Bluff. It is true that in their final summing up they say they have. But, Mr. President, they are exactly in the condition in which a court finds itself when it has passed a judgment that is not sustained by the findings. The conclusion reached by the board is overturned by the findings of fact that are laid down by the board themselves, and I will ask the attention of the Senate to it. This is done in a somewhat ingenious way, and I do not intend to speak offensively when I use that adjective.

But on page 10 this board has summarized and tabulated these various sites with reference to four points of availability: First, population, which means accessibility to the school; second, physical characteristics; third, harbor facilities; fourth, cost of land. The arrangement of the sites in this table would warrant the conclusion of the board. But the error inheres in the tabulation. I prefer to take the several facts which have been found by the board and see if we can not make out another table, and it will be a very different table from the one which the board have arranged.

On page 6 of this document I find these several sites treated separately; and that is what I want to get at, the exact fact. Here is the Racine site:

No. 5. North Point, Site A.—Three miles north of Racine and 20 miles south of Milwaukee.

I hope the Senate will listen to this language:

Possesses very excellent—

Very excellent—physical characteristics.

Why, Mr. President, that is a degree of commendation that is not conferred upon any other site in the list.

Very excellent physical characteristics and harbor accommodations.

Now, there are those two points, physical characteristics and harbor accommodations, very excellent—and is favorably situated as regards population.

Now, you take the Lake Bluff site and see what they say about that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will please suspend one moment.

Mr. QUARLES. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2259) to regulate shipping in trade between ports of the United States and ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, between ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, and for other purposes.

Mr. [illegible]. Let that be laid aside temporarily.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the naval appropriation bill. The Chair hears no objection, and that order is made.

Mr. QUARLES. Now, Mr. President, I was going to read to the Senate what they say about Lake Bluff, on page 7:

Thirty-two miles north of Chicago. Has excellent physical characteristics.

They state the Racine site has very excellent characteristics. This one has excellent characteristics.

And well situated as regards population—

Saying nothing about harbor facilities.

Then I want to call attention to what they say on page 9. On page 9 they say:

As regards location, Racine and Racine rank first.

So there is another respect in which Racine is ahead of Lake Bluff, the possible location of which I spoke a few moments ago.

Now, farther down on page 9, they say:

[illegible] very favorably situated with reference to the [illegible] under the use of North Point and by possibly a [illegible] of dredging, could be converted into a completely protected [illegible] harbor.

That is how they deal with these respective sites

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the Senator read the next sentence right following that?

Mr. QUARLES. Why, with great pleasure.

Lake Bluff is similarly situated with regard to possessing a ravine that can be dredged out for small boats.
